This impudent and unparalleled message was communicated to the President by Mr. Smith, and in whining, disgraceful obedience to it Roosevelt ordered the discontinuance of the prosecution. It was not a case of the clay saying to the potter, "Why hast thou made me thus?" but of the potter saying to the clay, "I made you and you must serve me."

Mr. President, there is some other evidence, also a little ancient. Yet I would not pass this opportunity to put it into the RECORD. In April, 1907, startling disclosures were made.

Somebody got hold of some letters that Mr. Harriman, the creator of railroad combinations, had written to a friend of his named Webster. In that letter, which was confidential and never expected to see the light of day, Mr. Harriman had said that as the campaign of 1904 was drawing toward a close, President Roosevelt had sent for him and had asked him to raise a campaign fund of $250,000, in order to save the election in the State of New York. Mr. Roosevelt was himself a candidate. Mr. Harriman stated to Mr. Roosevelt, in substance, that the money could probably be raised, but upon certain considerations; that in order to get this money and get it easy they had to arrange for a foreign mission for the then Senator from New York, Mr. Depew; that another man had ambitions to occupy his seat in the Senate, and that if this trade could be made the money would be produced. Harriman claims Roosevelt agreed to the deal. Certain it is that Mr. Harriman "fared forth" to get the money. To whom did he go? Mr. Harriman himself subscribed $50,000; Mr. H. McK. Twombly, representing the Vanderbilt interests, $25,000; Chauncey M. Depew, personally, $25,000; James Hazen Hyde, $25,000; the Equitable Life Assurance Society, $10,000. They had been robbing the babes down there for the benefit of Roosevelt in every campaign—not once, but many times; George W. Perkins, New York Life Insurance Co., $10,000; H. H. Rogers, John D. Archbold, William Rockefeller (the Standard Oil), $30,000. This is the very campaign, this is the very time, when Mr. Roosevelt tells the American people his heart was so pure and his mind was so righteous that he ordered sent back the $100,000 which the Senator from Pennsylvania says was paid by the Standard Oil, and which, by the way, the Senator says, was not ordered back until the money had been spent. However that may be, it is clear that in the same campaign and at about the same time there was raised at Roosevelt's personal request $250,000, and $30,000 of it came from that source which he now says was so polluted, so vile, so corrupt, so infamous that he ordered the money sent back.

It is a notable fact that Roosevelt did not order the return of the Harriman money. He does not even pretend that he ordered it sent back. Ah, no; this time he sets up another defense. What is it? That "he got the money for the State committee of New York and not for his own benefit." Why, God bless you all, what difference does that make? The State committee of New York was engaged in getting Republican ballots into the ballot boxes of the State of New York to elect a State ticket and also to elect one Theodore the good. Whether the money was expended by the one political agency or the other was and is utterly immaterial. Subsequent developments are, however, that the money raised by Harriman was, in fact, turned over to the chairman or treasurer of the Republican national committee, who drew his check for $200,000 of it, sending it to the State committee to be used in the campaign, and the balance, either $50,000 or $60,000, was actually retained and spent by the national committee.

But what difference? Here is a man who sends a great trust magnate out to other great trust magnates to raise a great political fund to be used in the campaign in which he is a candidate. If it is wrong to take the money from trusts for the purpose of putting it into the coffers of a national committee to be used in a national-State campaign, it is certainly just as wrong to take it for the purpose of putting it into the coffers of a State committee to be used in a State-national campaign. No man can draw a moral line between the two. If one was corrupt, then the other was equally villainous. All this money, wherever spent, by whomsoever spent, however spent, was used to put Republican ballots, upon which Theodore Roosevelt's name was printed, into the boxes.

Mr. Roosevelt now declares that he knew nothing as to the source of his campaign funds. Yet he is compelled to admit that at his personal solicitation Mr. Harriman raised over a quarter of a million of dollars, and that he knew it at the time.

It is most significant, and not to be overlooked, that this money was raised by Mr. Harriman, at the request of Roosevelt, made about one week before the election of 1904; that Mr. Harriman visited Roosevelt on October 26, made the deal, and agreed to raise the money, and that this is the very day when Roosevelt wrote his fake letter to Mr. Cortelyou, telling him not to accept the money which he knew had already been accepted and spent. That Mr. Harriman actually raised the money on October 29, the very day when Mr. Roosevelt sent his fake telegram, demanding to know whether the request contained in his letter of October 26 had been complied with. Surely this is a singular, curious, and laughable coincidence. Evidently the fact that Harriman was engaged in prying the trust magnates loose from their money led Mr. Roosevelt to conclude that there might be an aftermath of investigation, and suggested the precaution of writing some letters "for the record."

Mr. President, was the $48,000 which Perkins took out of the insurance fund, and to which I adverted in my remarks, honest money? Was it honestly obtained?

When the facts were discovered years afterwards, the district attorney of New York City filed a charge against Perkins for grand larceny, alleging that he had stolen the $48,000 from the trust funds of the insurance company.

The majority opinion of the court of appeals of New York, in which Justices O'Brien and Bartlett concurred with Justices Gray and Hiscock, held that under the circumstances Perkins did not intend actually to steal the money and therefore he could not be prosecuted as a thief, but even those judges said of and concerning this transaction the following—I read from People ex rel. Perkins v. Moss, 187 New York Reports, at page 422—

> It is unquestionably true that the purpose for which the moneys of the company were promised was foreign to the chartered purpose of the corporation.
>
> We are all agreed upon certain fundamental principles pertaining to this case. The contribution of the president of the New York Life Insurance Co. from its funds of $50,000 to a political campaign committee, even in the absence of any statutory prohibition, was absolutely beyond the purposes for which that corporation existed and was wholly unjustifiable and illegal.

The minority opinion by Chief Justice Cullen, and concurred in by Justices Werner and Chase, held that Perkins was guilty of larceny. The opinion states:

> The depositions show that in September, 1904, the relator, who was a trustee and vice president of the New York Life Insurance Co., had a conversation with the president of said company, in which the latter stated that he had promised to contribute to Cornelius N. Bliss, treasurer of the Republican national committee, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as might be necessary for the purposes of the Republican campaign. It was then substantially agreed between the parties that the relator should pay the money out of his own funds and thereafter be repaid by the company. In pursuance of this understanding the relator did pay Bliss sums aggregating $48,500. On December 30, 1904, the relator demanded repayment of the sums advanced by him, which was made by order of the president through the method of a check of the company, drawn not to the order of the relator personally, but to that of J. P. Morgan & Co., a firm of bankers of which the relator was a member. This occurred at a meeting of the finance committee, at which the relator's agreement with the president was stated, and no vote authorizing the payment was taken and no minutes of the transaction entered. * * * (p. 435.) It thus appears that by the joint action of the relator and the president of the company this large sum of money was taken from the funds of the company and given to Cornelius Bliss for expenditure for political purposes. Mr. Bliss, neither in his personal nor in his representative capacity, had any claim on the company for the money, legal, equitable, or moral. The company was to be permanently deprived of it, for it never was to be returned, nor was any consideration to inure to the company for the money paid. The purpose for which it was to be employed was wholly foreign to the business of the corporation and one in which the company had no possible interest, except that of every citizen in the good government of the country. That this was an illegal misappropriation of the company's funds, for which every director or officer engaged therein was personally liable to the corporation, seems to me too clear for debate. * * * He (the relator) has without right deprived the company of its property and appropriated the same to the use of another person not the owner nor entitled to the benefit thereof.
>
> * * * (p. 437). It must be remembered that the relator was not a mere clerk or subordinate, to whom the word of the president was law, and whose means of livelihood might be dependent on the president's favor, but a trustee and vice president of the company and a member of one of the greatest banking firms in the country. He owed the company the duty, not only of abstaining from participating in any misappropriation of the funds by the president, but of aggressive action against the president to prevent or expose such misappropriation.
>
> * * * (p. 438). Something is also said in the opinion below of the beneficent character of the purpose to which the money was appropriated. Of that we can hardly take judicial notice. Probably at all times it would be regarded as beneficent in Vermont and maleficent in Georgia, while in New York its character would vary from year to year. The meritorious character of the object to which the money was appropriated has no bearing on the question of larceny. The gist of that offense is not the application of money to a bad purpose, but taking money that does not belong to the taker to appropriate to an object, good or bad. It is the fraudulent deprivation of an owner of his property that constitutes larceny. It is a crime to steal, even though with the intent to give away in charity and relieve distress. * * * If the citizen, with his own means, contributes to legitimate political expenses to secure the success of the party which he deems will most inure to the welfare of the nation, his action is laudable, and * * * it may be justifiable; but to apply the money of another without his consent to such an object is neither laudable nor justifiable, but dishonest. The money given to Bliss belonged neither to the president nor to the relator, but was simply in their custody. Its legal owner was the artificial being—the corporation; its beneficial owners were the policy holders * * *.
>
> (p. 440.) The indirect method in which the payment to Mr. Bliss was made and the fact concealed by having the money, in the first instance, advanced by the relator instead of by the company, and the method in which the relator was reimbursed by a check, not to him personally, but to the order of J. P. Morgan & Co., a banking firm with which the corporation may have large legitimate dealings, casts suspicion on the good faith of the relator and might be considered by the magistrate as militating against him. The explanation of this course offered by the relator, that it was to relieve the president from solicitations from other political parties, might also be discredited. It is difficult to imagine how the representatives of other parties would have access to the company's books; nor would the scheme of payment enable the officers of the company, when solicited, to say that the company had made no contributions to other parties, because such an answer would be as essentially a falsehood as if the money had been paid by the company in the first instance. The concealment of the payment as described would warrant the magistrate in finding that the parties were conscious of wrongdoing in making it and feared exposure.

So, Mr. President, Roosevelt sent Harriman out to raise money, and he went to one who in the teeth of the law, in the teeth of all morals, in the teeth of all decency, plundered the trust funds held by the New York Life Insurance Co. and robbed the women and the children of the policyholders, and the larceny was actually perpetrated by the penitential, holy hand of friend Perkins, who now wants to rescue his children by working some more for Theodore Roosevelt! All this Roosevelt has known for years, and yet the friendship between him and Perkins burns with unabated fervor.

Mr. President, I reserve the right to put the Harriman letters into the RECORD. I desire now to call attention to John D. Archbold. Who is he? In what kind of politics does he engage? He was one of the contributors to the Harriman fund; one of the men to whom Perkins went. You can not always prove the political designs of a man by one letter or one act, but I am about to introduce in evidence here a series of letters that are of more force than a thousand tongues. I propose to show by these letters, which I now introduce, that the Standard Oil Co. has been regularly in the political field; that it has been regularly in the business of suborning the services of public officers; that it has regularly poured its corruption funds into the channels of politics; that it has not been a mere onlooker, but has been actively seeking control in State and national affairs. I am putting this evidence in at this time because I want it to be known that Mr. Harriman, at Mr. Roosevelt's request, went to Archbold, and I want it to be known to all the world the kind of political business Mr. Archbold was in and had been in for nearly a quarter of a century. I ask permission, Mr. President, to print all the letters appearing in Hearst's Magazine for May, June, July, and August of this year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection leave is granted.

[The letters referred to appear at the end of the speech and are followed by the Harriman-Roosevelt letters.]

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we may differ, and we do differ in politics. There are men on the other side of this Chamber who just as much as I, just as much as my conferees over here love this country. A bill was offered yesterday to limit campaign contributions, to stop the flood of evil money being thrown into the streams of politics, and upon the other side of the Chamber time and again Senators walked out in order to break a quorum, and roll call after roll call disclosed their absence when the yeas and nays were being taken, and their presence immediately afterwards when a quorum roll was called.

My countrymen—for let me address you by that term—upon what is this Government founded? All the long battles of history, all the bloody contests in all of the ages, all the struggles of slave against master, all of the sufferings behind prison walls, all of the blood poured out upon the field of battle in all the course of time brought but one result, and that was a Government where men would cast a ballot, where each free man, once in two or four years, could go to the polls and deposit a little slip of paper that would express his honest judgment, his conviction, and his hope.

But, Mr. President, when men take great sums of money, when they pollute the ballot and corrupt the voter, they strike at the very heart's core of popular government and they plunge a dagger into the bosom of liberty.

Over in Ohio we are told that nearly every male citizen in an entire county has been convicted of selling his vote. Over in Delaware vast sums are accumulated and carried to the polls annually or biennially, and men sell their votes as they might sell merchandise in the market place. Men sit in this Chamber who, according to witnesses produced before committees of the Senate, were instrumental in dividing up huge sums of money to be sent out on the eve of election, to corrupt the voters, and a resolution of investigation I introduced sleeps today as it has slept for months in the committee to which it was referred. Another sits here who expended over $100,000 to gain a mere party nomination.

And so, on every hand, it is money, money, money, always and forever until men are coming to believe that it is right to sell their manhood suffrage for money. I say the man who will give a bribe to a voter, or who will be a party to raising a fund to bribe voters corrupts the fountain sources of our Government and that he is as bad as the man, he is as wicked as the man who conspires openly for the overthrow of the Government, and it seems to me more contemptible that that man is the creature who, backed by those who raise corrupt funds, supported by those who contribute vast amounts that the electorate may be corrupted, stands with a sniveling pretense of virtue and proclaims himself the savior of his country.

HARRIMAN-ROOSEVELT LETTERS—HARRIMAN TO WEBSTER.

On April 2, 1907, a sensation was created by the publication of a letter written in December, 1905, addressed to Mr. Sidney Webster, of New York, and signed by E. H. Harriman. Following is the letter:

Mr. SIDNEY WEBSTER,
No. 5 East 17th Street, New York.

DEAR SIR: I am glad to see that you are in town and hope soon to have an opportunity of talking matters over with you. I had printed copies of the testimony sent you, in hopes that you would, after reading them, give me some idea of where I stand, for I confess that I feel somewhat at sea in the whole insurance matter. The trouble originated in allowing myself to be drawn into other people's affairs, and partly from a desire to help them at their request. I seem to be like the fellow who got in between the man and his wife in their quarrel.

As to my political instincts to which you refer in your letter of December 13, I am quite sure I have none, and my being made at all prominent in the political situation is entirely due to President Roosevelt, and because of my taking an active part in the autumn of 1904, at his request, and his taking advantage of conditions then created to further his own interests. If it had been a premeditated plot it could not have been better started or carried out.

About a week before the election in the autumn of 1904, when it looked certain that the State ticket would go Democratic and was doubtful as to Roosevelt himself, he, the President, sent me a request to go to Washington to confer upon the political conditions in New York State. I complied, and he told me he understood the campaign could not be sucessfully carried on without sufficient money, and asked if I would help them in raising the necessary funds as the national committee, under control of Chairman Cortelyou, had utterly failed of obtaining them, and there was a large amount due from them to the New York State committee.

I explained to him that I understood the difficulty here was mainly caused by the upstate leaders being unwilling to support Depew for reelection as United States Senator; that if he, Depew, could be taken care of in some other way I thought matters could be adjusted and the different contending elements in the party brought into alliance again. We talked over what could be done for Depew, and finally he agreed, if found necessary, he would appoint him as Ambassador to Paris.

With full belief that he, the President, would keep this agreement, I came back to New York, sent for Treasurer Bliss, who told me that I was their last hope, and that they had exhausted every other resource. In his presence I called up an intimate friend of Senator Depew, told him that it was necessary, in order to carry New York State, that $200,000 should be raised at once, and if he would help I would subscribe $50,000. After a few words over the telephone the gentleman said he would let me know, which he did, probably in three or four hours, with the result that the whole amount, including my subscription, had been raised.

The checks were given to Treasurer Bliss, who took them to Chairman Cortelyou. If there were any among them of life insurance companies, or any other like organizations, of course Cortelyou must have informed the President. I do not know who the subscribers were other than the friend of Depew, who was an individual. This amount enabled the New York State committee to continue its work, with the result that at least 50,000 votes were turned in the city of New York alone, making a difference of 100,000 votes in the general result.

There are between 2,200 and 2,300 districts in Greater New York, and in a campaign such as that the expenditure of, say, $50 in each district for campaign purposes, not including the watchers on election day, would take more than $100,000.

Some time in December, 1904, on my way from Virginia to New York, I stopped and had a short talk with the President. He told me then that he did not think it necessary to appoint Depew as ambassador to Paris, as agreed; in fact, favored him for the Senate. I had not expected that he was the one to say as to what would be necessary, but he arrogated that to himself, and I, of course, could say nothing further. After that I used what influence I could to have Depew returned to the Senate, as I considered there had been an implied obligation which should be lived up to.

This is the way I was brought to the surface in the political matters, as I had never before taken any active part and had only done what I could as any private citizen might, so you see I was brought forward by Roosevelt in an attempt to help him, at his request, the same as I was in the insurance matter by Hyde and Ryan by their request for my help; and in the case of Ryan I probably would have dropped the matter after our first interview had it not been for my desire to save Belmont from taking a position for which he could have been criticized by the public press, as he was the one Ryan desired me to influence from opposing Morton for election as chairman of the Equitable board, and Belmont afterwards thanked me for taking his part, as, if he had voted against Morton in view of his local traction contentions with Mr. Ryan, it would have been misconstrued.

Ryan's success in all his manipulations, traction deals, tobacco combinations, manipulation of the State Trust Co. into the Morton Trust Co., the Shoe and Leather Bank into the Bank of Commerce—thus covering up his tracks—has been done by the adroit mind of Elihu Root, and the present situation has been brought about by a combination of circumstances which has brought together the Ryan-Root-Roosevelt element.

Where do I stand?

Yours, sincerely, E. H. HARRIMAN.

ROOSEVELT-HARRIMAN LETTERS.

[Roosevelt to Harriman. Personal.]

JUNE 29, 1904.

MY DEAR MR. HARRIMAN: I thank you for your letter. As soon as I come home I shall want to see you. The fight will doubtless be hot then. It has been a real pleasure to see you this year.

Very truly, yours, THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

[Harriman to Roosevelt; reply to letter of June 29.]

NEW YORK, September 20, 1904.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I was very glad to receive your note of June 29 last while I was in Europe. I am now getting the mass that accumulated during my absence somewhat cleared up, and if you think it is desirable will go to see you any time, either now or later. It seems to me that the situation could not be in better shape.

Yours, sincerely, E. H. HARRIMAN.

[Roosevelt to Harriman; reply to letter of Sept. 20. Part of letter given out by Roosevelt.]

At present there is nothing for me to see you about, though there were one or two points in my letter of acceptance which I should have liked to discuss with you before putting it out.

[Roosevelt to Harriman; part of letter given out by Roosevelt.]

OCTOBER 10, 1904.

In view of the trouble over the State ticket in New York, I should very much like to have a few words with you. Do you think you can get down here within a few days and take either lunch or dinner with me? The trouble I spoke of had reference to the bolt against Higgins.

[Then follows Roosevelt's comment.]

That is, in reality, against Mr. Harriman and Mr. Harriman's friend, Gov. Odell. A reference to the files of the New York papers at that time would show that there was a very extensive bolt against Mr. Higgins upon the ground that Gov. Odell had nominated him, and that he had in some matters favored Mr. Harriman over much; neither ground, in my judgment, being tenable. Mr. Harriman's backing of Gov. Odell and extreme anxiety that he should win out by securing Higgins's election, was a matter of common notoriety and mentioned in all the papers, notably in the New York Sun.

[Harriman to Roosevelt; part of letter given out by Roosevelt.]

OCTOBER 12, 1904.

I am giving a very large part of my time to correcting certain troubles here, and intend to do so if any effort on my part can accomplish it. * * * I will take occasion the first of next week to run down to see you, and think by that time the conditions will be very much improved.

[Roosevelt to Harriman.]

OCTOBER 14, 1904.

MY DEAR MR. HARRIMAN: A suggestion has come to me in a roundabout way that you do not think it wise to come on to see me in these closing weeks of the campaign, but that you are reluctant to refuse, inasmuch as I have asked you. Now, my dear sir, you and I are practical men, and you are on the ground and know the conditions better than I do. If you think there is any danger of your visit to me causing trouble, or if you think there is nothing special I should be informed about, or no matter in which I could give aid, why, of course, give up the visit for the time being and then a few weeks hence, before I write my message, I shall get you to come down to discuss certain Government matters not connected with the campaign.

With kind regards,

Sincerely, yours, THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

[Harriman to Roosevelt.]

NOVEMBER 30, 1904.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I have just had a telephone talk with Mr. Loeb and requested him to give you a message from me. I drew his attention to the last paragraph of your letter to me of October 14 and explained that of course I did not want to make a trip to Washington unless it should be necessary; that the only matter I knew of about which I had any apprehension, which might be referred to in your coming message to Congress is that regarding the Interstate Commerce Commission, and what the attitude of the railroads should be toward it. I have communications from many conservative men in the West asking me to take the matter up, they having, as I have not, information as to what you propose to say in your message on the subject, and I am very apprehensive about it. Mr. Loeb stated he believed that that part of the message could be sent me, and I hope that he will do so. I certainly believe it would be best for all interests that no reference be made to the subject, and in any event, if referred to, in such as not to bring about increased agitation. It is, as you well know, the conservative element, and the one on which we all rely, which is most seldom heard from.

Yours, sincerely, E. H. HARRIMAN.

[Roosevelt to Harriman. Strictly personal.]

NOVEMBER 30, 1904.

MY DEAR MR. HARRIMAN: Mr. Loeb tells me that you called me up today on the telephone and recalled my letter to you of October 14, in which I spoke to you of a desire to see you before sending in my message, as I wanted to go over with you certain governmental matters, and you added that you had heard that I had referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission; that you regretted this and wished I had left it out, in writing to you I had in view especially certain matters connected with currency legislation and had not thought of discussing railroad matters with you. However, if it had occurred to me I should have been delighted to do so: but if you remember when you were down here both you and I were so interested in certain of the New York political developments that I hardly, if at all, touched on governmental matters. As regards what I have said in my message about the Interstate Commerce Commission, while, as I say, I should have been delighted to go over it with you, I must also frankly say that my mind was definitely made up. Certain revelations connected with the investigation of the Beef Trust caused me to write the paragraph in question. I went with extreme care over the information in possession of the Interstate Commerce Commission and of the Bureau of Corporations before writing it. I then went over the written paragraph again and again with Paul Morton, who is of all my Cabinet the man most familiar with railroad matters, of course, and with ROOT, Knox, Taft, and Moody. It is a matter I have been carefully considering for two years, and had been gradually, though reluctantly, coming to the conclusion that it is unwise and unsafe from every standpoint to leave the question of rebates where it now is and to fail to give the Interstate Commerce Commission additional power of an effective kind in regulating these rates.

Let me repeat that I did not have this question in mind when I asked you to come down, but that I should most gladly have talked it over with you if it had occurred to me to do so; but as a matter of fact, as you will remember, when you did come down to see me, you and I were both so engaged in the New York political situation that we talked of little else, and, finally, that the position I have taken has not been taken lightly, but after thinking over the matter and looking at it from different standpoints for at least two years, and after the most careful consultation with Morton, Taft, Moody, Knox, and ROOT as to the exact phraseology I should use.

I do not send you a copy simply because I have given no one a copy, not even the men above mentioned. It is impossible if I give out copies of any portion of my message, to prevent the message being known in advance, and the free press associations who now have the message are under a heavy penalty not to disclose a word of it before the appointed time.

Sincerely, yours, ——— ———

—

[Harriman to Roosevelt.]

DECEMBER 2, 1904.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Thank you for your favor of the 30th. It was natural for me to suppose that railroad matters would be included in any discussion you and I might have before writing your message. I am of the opinion that an effective Interstate Commerce Commission could regulate the matter of rebates and absolutely prevent the same without any additional power of any kind, and, as you say, Paul Morton is more familiar with such matters than anyone else in your Cabinet, and I believe he will agree with me in this. I fear there has been a lack of cooperation. During the enormous development of the last four years the railroads have found it very hard to keep pace with the requirements imposed upon them, and the so-called surplus earnings, as well as additional capital, have been devoted to providing additional facilities and the bettering and enlarging of their property, so as to give the increased and better service required of them. This work of betterment and enlargement must go on, and is all important for the proper development of all sections of the country. There is little doubt that during the next decade every single-track railroad in the country will have to be double-tracked, and provide enlarged terminal and other facilities, and any move that will tend to cripple them financially would be detrimental to all interests over the whole country.

I beg that you will pardon my not signing this personally, as I have to leave to catch my train for Arden, and have asked my secretary to sign it for me.

Yours, sincerely, ——— ———

—

[Harriman to Roosevelt.]

DECEMBER 10, 1904.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: A great many of your friends here in New York would be very much delighted and pleased if you could find it possible to appoint Mr. James H. Hyde as minister to France. * * * Large business interests have given to him splendid executive ability, and his association with so many prominent business men would be fitting recognition of the effective work done by them in the last campaign. In addition to this, he has behind him, I am sure, the approval of Senator Platt and Senator Depew, and, so far as I can speak for the organization, I believe his appointment would be without question more satisfactory than any that could be made from New York at the present time.

Personally, I should appreciate your favorable consideration of this suggestion almost beyond anything else you could do for me. If you so desire, I shall be glad to come down to Washington and talk with you about it, but I believe there are others who are close to you and who feel just as I do, and I thought, therefore, that this letter would be sufficient as showing the attitude of the organizations and myself personally upon this important appointment.

—

[John D. Archbold to Senator J. B. Foraker.]

26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, January 20, 1899.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your very kind note of the 18th, for which please accept thanks. I am sure that you will watch carefully every phase of the matter and will leave nothing undone. We may want to talk with you regarding a special feature of the case within the next week or so. Will it be at all possible for you to come here for a short interview?

Very truly, yours,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. J. B. FORAKER, Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

—

[John D. Archbold to Senator M. A. Hanna.]

26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, January 19, 1900.

DEAR SENATOR: The matters regarding which I wanted to talk with you this afternoon are those of threatened and very objectionable legislation at Columbus. The first is a bill introduced by Mr. Russell, of Meigs, amending the so-called antitrust law in a way that would be most objectionable to every corporate interest in the State. Probably you are familiar with this bill.

The second is a most malicious resolution for an investigating committee to be headed by Griffin, of Lucas, giving them power to investigate pretty much everything within the State from the supreme court down. The resolution does not limit the expense of the investigation and authorizes the employment of counsel. It is said to be the intention of the committee to employ Mr. Monnett as its counsel. We want to enlist you actively and promptly to the defeat of these measures. They are undoubtedly inspired by Monnett and his followers, and their purpose is unquestionably of the most vicious character. That appointment of the "marauding" committee comes up by agreement on the 25th, so that it, as well as the other, should be attended to very promptly. Will you do everything possible to compass their defeat? Shall be glad to hear from you promptly.

I inclose you clipping from the Plaindealer describing the Willis resolution.

Very truly, yours, JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. M. A. HANNA, Washington, D. C.

—

[John D. Archbold to Senator Foraker. Personal.]

26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, February 16, 1900.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Here is still another very objectionable bill. It is so outrageous as to be ridiculous, but it needs to be looked after, and I hope there will be no difficulty in killing it.

Am anxious to hear from you as to the situation as a whole.

Very truly, yours,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. J. B. FORAKER, 1500 Sixteenth Street, Washington, D. C.

—

[John D. Archbold to Senator Foraker.]

26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, February 27, 1900.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Attorney General Sheets has written a letter to Mr. Kline, in which he asks to have a time fixed for the oral argument of the contempt case. If this argument is to be simply a formal matter, we have no objection to it; otherwise, it might be well to have it postponed as long as possible, especially until after the next national and State conventions.

We thought you should know about this before going to Ohio.

Very truly, yours,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. J. B. FORAKER, 1500 Sixteenth Street, Washington, D. C.

—

[John D. Archbold to Senator Foraker.]

MARCH 8, 1900.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I beg to inclose you herewith letter from our counsel, Mr. Elliott, with copy of another very objectionable bill recently introduced at Columbus. There will undoubtedly be a uniform sentiment against it in the oil section. Hope you can take care of it with the others.

Very truly, yours,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. J. B. FORAKER, Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

—

[John D. Archbold to Senator Foraker.]

MARCH 9, 1900.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your favor of last night with inclosure, which letter, with letter from Mr. Elliott commenting on same, I beg to send you herewith. Perhaps it would be better to make a demonstration against the whole bill, but certainly the ninth clause, to which Mr. Elliott refers should be stricken out, and the same is true of House bill No. 500, also introduced by Mr. Price, in relation to foreign corporations, in which the same objectionable clause occurs.

Am glad to hear that you think that the situation is fairly well in hand.

Very truly, yours, JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

—

[John D. Archbold to Senator Hanna.]

26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, March 12, 1900.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I hope everything is going well at Columbus. There are a number of the vexatious bills there and we are resting on your statement that they are all well in hand.

One of our people writes that it is a little doubtful as to how the Hon. Ralph D. Cole, of Findlay, will vote on the Russell bill. He says that H. C. Crouse, editor Findlay Republican, and formerly chairman Republican State committee, is very close to Cole, and that Crouse is a warm friend of yours. It occurs to me that if you think it worth while you might ask Mr. Crouse to try and see Mr. Cole immediately and persuade him to vote against the bill. You will know best, however, as to all matters pertaining to the different things there.

Very truly, yours, JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. M. A. HANNA, The Arlington, Washington, D. C.

—

[John D. Archbold to Senator Foraker.]

MARCH 26, 1900.

DEAR SENATOR: In accordance with our understanding I now beg to inclose you certificate of deposit to your favor for $15,000. Kindly acknowledge receipt and oblige.

Yours, very truly, JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. J. B. FORAKER, 1500 Sixteenth Street, Washington, D. C.

—

[John D. Archbold to Senator Foraker.]

APRIL 17, 1900.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I inclose you certificate of deposit to your favor for $14,500. We are greatly at a loss in the matter, but I send this, and will be glad to have a frank talk with you when opportunity offers, and if you so desire.

I need scarcely again express our great gratification over the favorable outcome of affairs.

Very truly, yours, JOHN D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. J. B. FORAKER, 1500 Sixteenth Street, Washington, D. C.

—

[John D. Archbold to Senator Foraker.]

NOVEMBER 26, 1900.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In pursuance of our understanding in our talk over the telephone to-day, I now beg to inclose you certificate of deposit to your favor for $10,000.

Truly, yours, JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. J. B. FORAKER, 1500 Sixteenth Street, Washington, D. C.

[John D. Archbold to Senator Foraker.]

DECEMBER 11, 1900.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to our telephonic conversation to-day, I now beg to inclose you certificate of deposit to your favor for $5,000.

Very truly, yours,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. J. B. FORAKER, 1500 Sixteenth Street, Washington, D. C.

—

[Senator M. A. Hanna to John D. Archbold.]

CLEVELAND, OHIO, September 22.

JOHN D. ARCHBOLD, Esq.

MY DEAR JOHN: I am in receipt of yours of the 18th instant, with inclosures as stated, for which I am obliged. I am "holding the bag," and this is going to be an expensive campaign. I can see where I will land before the thing is over, so I have no doubt I will have to call again. I feel a delicacy about this, as it is my funeral. I can beg for others better than when I have a personal interest.

There are many important interests in this fight. Should Johnson carry the legislature, corporations will catch it, as I am their representative, so called.

Sincerely, yours,

M. A. HANNA.

—

[John D. Archbold to Senator Foraker.]

FEBRUARY 25, 1902.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I venture to write you a word regarding the bill introduced by Senator Jones of Arkansas, known as S. 649, intended to meet the act "to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," etc., introduced by him December 4.

It really seems as though this bill is very unnecessarily severe and even vicious. Is it not much better to test the application of the Sherman Act before resorting to a measure of this kind? I hope you will feel so about it, and I will be greatly pleased to have a word from you on the subject. The bill is, I believe, still in committee.

With kind regards, I am,

Very truly, yours,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. J. B. FORAKER, Washington, D. C.

—

[Senator M. A. Hanna to John D. Archbold.]

CLEVELAND, OHIO, September 15, 1903.

MY DEAR ARCHBOLD: I am in receipt of yours of the 14th instant, and wish to thank you for your assistance.

Your prediction that I will have a "walk-over" does not seem likely. As to the governor it is true, but the contest for the legislature will be the hottest we have known for 50 years. Johnson is straining everything to that end. We have 30 close counties out of 88, many of which we carried two years ago by narrow margins. Of course Johnson is making every effort and using money in those counties. Now I am the target, for my defeat means more to J. than anything else he hopes to accomplish. If we lose Cuyahoga County with its 14 members, it is a close proposition. Daly can help us here and in Toledo, and I want your people to help our State committee liberally. The demands on me are simply awful.

Truly, yours,

M. A. HANNA.

—

[Senator M. A. Hanna to John D. Archbold.]

CLEVELAND, OHIO, September 16, 1903.

MY DEAR JOHN: I am in receipt of yours of the 15th instant, and reply that I can not go east as I can not leave this situation for a day.

I know you will do the fair thing, and I want the State Republican committee to get a liberal subscription from you this time. Although the fight is all directed against me, I don't want them to think I am selfish in taking subscriptions from my friends to use in the legislative fight, nor do I feel like bearing the whole burden, as there is more than me interested in the result. There is no haste about it, only we must cut our garments to our cloth.

Sincerely, yours,

M. A. HANNA.

[Personal.]

P. S. Your people can be of great help in Allen County, Hancock and Wood Counties, which, if successful, will secure the election of three members. This whole fight is against corporations and me as their champion.

M. A. H.

—

[Senator M. A. Hanna to John D. Archbold.]

CLEVELAND, OHIO, September 22.

JOHN D. ARCHBOLD, Esq.

MY DEAR JOHN: I am in receipt of yours of the 18th instant with inclosures as stated, for which I am obliged. I am "holding the bag," and this is going to be an expensive campaign. I can see where I will land before the thing is over, so I have no doubt I will have to call again. I feel a delicacy about this, as it is my funeral. I can beg for others better than when I have a personal interest.

There are many important questions in this fight. Should Johnson carry the legislature corporations will catch it, as I am their representative, so called.

Sincerely, yours,

M. A. HANNA.

—

[John D. Archbold to Senator M. A. Hanna.]

26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, May 31, 1898.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Responding to your favor of the 28th, it gives me pleasure to inclose you herewith certificate of deposit to your favor for $2,000 to aid in the Oregon matter.

Trusting the desired end will be accomplished, I am, with kind regards,

Very truly, yours,

JNO D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. M. A. HANNA,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

—

[John D. Archbold to Senator M. A. Hanna. Personal.]

26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, March 20, 1903.

MY DEAR SENATOR: To our amazement, it is reported that Smith W. Bennett is making a canvass for the attorney generalship in Ohio. Mr. Bennett is a brother-in-law of F. S. Monnett, recent attorney general, and was associated with Monnett in the action against us in that State. If there is any possible danger, which I can not believe, of Mr. Bennett's candidacy assuming serious proportions, I would like to tell you something of our experience and impressions of the man in connection with that case. I am sure, however, that you will agree that Ohio is not so poorly off as to take that sort of timber for its attorney general. I will be very glad to hear from you on the subject.

Sincerely, JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. M. A. HANNA, Washington, D. C.

—

[John D. Archbold to Senator J. B. Foraker.]

26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, March 20, 1903.

MY DEAR SENATOR: We are surprised beyond measure to learn that Smith W. Bennett, brother-in-law of F. S. Monnett, recently attorney general of Ohio, is in the race for the attorney generalship on the Republican ticket. Bennett was associated with Monnett in the case against us in Ohio, and I would like to tell you something of our experience and impressions of the man gained in that case. If you know him at all I am sure you will agree that his candidacy ought not to be seriously considered from any point of view.

I would esteem it a favor to have a line from you on the subject.

Very truly, yours,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. J. B. FORAKER,
1500 Sixteenth Street NW,
Washington, D. C.

—

[John D. Archbold to C. H. Grosvenor, M. C.]

26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, October 12, 1900.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I have your favor of the 10th, and it gives me pleasure to inclose you herewith certificate of deposit to your favor for $1,000 to aid in the good work, and with very best wishes, I am,

Very truly, yours,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR, Athens, Ohio.

—

[John D. Archbold to C. H. Grosvenor, M. C.]

26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, November 20, 1900.

Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I have your favor of yesterday and beg to thank you very cordially for your kind expression. I fully agree that the retirement of the gentleman is a matter of very special congratulation.

I wish again to congratulate you on your own magnificent run.

Very truly, yours,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

—

[John D. Archbold to C. H. Grosvenor, M. C.]

OCTOBER 3, 1901.

MY DEAR GENERAL: Referring again to your favor of September 6 regarding Mr. Bond, of Columbus, I had been delayed in answering awaiting some report on the matter. I regret to say that I do not now have anything definite as to promise of employment for him in the localities named; but if he will decide on a locality which he would prefer, we will send him out and put him on the roll. I am sure that work will be found for him within a very short time, if not immediately. If you will, therefore, let me know what your wish is in the matter, I will endeavor to meet it as nearly as possible.

Very truly, yours,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR, Athens, Ohio.

—

[C. H. Grosvenor, M. C., to John D. Archbold.]

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
Athens, Ohio, September 27, 1904.

MY DEAR SIR: I have had some correspondence with our mutual friend Sibley, which you will understand, and he has suggested that I go in person to see you. It is exceedingly difficult for me to get away from here by reason of my local campaign, but if you think it necessary I will come to New York, but if I do could I see you on Sunday, the 9th of October? I must make a hurried dash to New York and back, and I would like very much to meet you, if it is possible, at your residence, on the morning of Sunday. Could you meet the emergencies just as well without my coming to New York? I think you will understand it, as you know I have come to you for friends, but never for myself, and now there is a great necessity at home. I am not complaining of the general tendency of my campaign, but it is most burdensome and one that requires the utmost care and the utmost ability to meet great emergencies. There are 10,000 coal miners in this congressional district, and there are seven counties, stretching from the Ohio River on the south to within 12 miles of Columbus on the north, and covering about 45 per cent of the coal output of Ohio. You can see something of what I have got on my hands, with a State committee unable to assist anybody, and a fight all myself alone, practically.

Now, if it is best for me to come to New York, please say you will see me, as suggested.

Yours, truly,

C. H. GROSVENOR.

JOHN D. ARCHBOLD, Esq.,
New York City, N. Y.

—

[John D. Archbold to J. C. Sibley, M. C.]

26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, January 13, 1902.

DEAR MR. SIBLEY: I am duly in receipt of your favor of the 10th, in all of which we are much interested. We appreciate your courtesy in bringing any such matter to our attention and value, beyond expression, your kind and friendly attitude.

With reference to our Ohio friend our feelings are most cordial, and we will be glad to lend a hand in a reasonable way. How would it do for you to say to him that I suggested that he see me for a little talk? If this proves impossible within the necessary time, he can write me under personal cover and I will answer him promptly and confidentially.

I can not learn that we or any of our people have taken any active interest in the New Jersey senatorship matter. What you said to Mr. G. met the case thoroughly and we thank you cordially for it.

Of course I am much interested as to who your dark horse may be, and if you are in a position to intimate to me, in confidence, who it is, it may be possible for us to extend some aid.

Heartily reciprocating your kind wishes for the new year, I am,

Yours, very truly,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. J. C. SIBLEY, Washington, D. C.

[John D. Archbold to Senator BOIES PENROSE.]

MAY 17, 1899.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I don't suppose it is at all necessary to bother you again regarding the Washington matter, but Mr. Wardwell is this morning in receipt of the inclosed letter from the secretary of the commission urging him to appear before them in June. I have said to him that he need give himself no uneasiness about it, and that the understanding is clear that none of our parties are to appear in June. As I think I have told you, Mr. Wardwell is in poor health and is planning to leave for Europe. I have thought best, however, to send this to you out of the fullness of precaution.

Apologizing again for troubling you in the matter, I am,

Very truly, yours,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE,
1331 Spruce Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

[John D. Archbold to Senator BOIES PENROSE.]

JANUARY 5, 1900.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have to-day telegraphed you as follows:

"Corporations should not be required to make public the names or holdings of all stockholders. It is an unjust and unnecessary inquisition into the private affairs of individual stockholders and serves no public good. If demanded by creditors, State laws now provide the means of obtaining the information. Private corporations should not be required to make public items of receipts and expenditures, profits and losses. A statement of assets and liabilities is all that can benefit the public. Items of receipts and expenditures, profits and losses can only benefit the competitors."

I beg to acknowledge also with many thanks your favor of January 1, the inclosures accompanying, which I beg to return you herewith. Was very sorry not to see you here last week, but as you know, I was away on a little vacation.

Sorry to learn to-day of the report of the committee in the Quay case, but still hope for favorable action by the Senate.

With thanks for all your courtesy, I am,

Very truly, yours,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE, Washington, D. C.

[John D. Archbold to Senator BOIES PENROSE.]

26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, February 21, 1900.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your kind note of yesterday with inclosures which latter I beg to return herewith. We think the report is so fair that we will not undertake to suggest any changes.

With many thanks, I am,

Very truly, yours,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

[John D. Archbold to Senator BOIES PENROSE.]

JULY 3, 1901.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Following the lamentable death of Senator Kyle, we are very strongly of the opinion that you should take the chairmanship of the Industrial Commission. This seems eminently fitting from every point of view. Your name as chairman would undoubtedly give to the report exceptional assurance of integrity and intelligence; you are the ranking senatorial member of the commission; the interests of your State are preeminent in the matter; and lastly, and we may hope not unfairly, we make it as a strong personal request.

May I venture to ask for an affirmative answer by wire, so that we may do what seems possible to aid in the matter.

With kind personal regards, I am,

Very truly, yours,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE, Philadelphia, Pa.

[John D. Archbold to Senator M. S. Quay.]

JULY 3, 1901.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The death of Senator Kyle, chairman of the Industrial Commission, at this critical juncture, makes it very important that the place be filled by a man abreast of the times as to our industrial and commercial evolution. We think that Senator PENROSE should take the place. He is the ranking senatorial member of the commission, and surely the interests of his State are very great in this matter.

Won't you strongly urge him to do so, and oblige,

Yours, very truly,

JOHN D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. M. S. QUAY, Beaver, Pa.

[John D. Archbold to Senator M. A. Hanna.]

AUGUST 21, 1901.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your kind favor of the 19th, and note the suggestion regarding PENROSE. I am this morning in receipt of a letter from Senator PENROSE's secretary, the former being absent in the far West, from which I quote an expression from the Senator: "Will be entirely satisfied with the election of Col. Clarke to the place referred to." I am writing now again urging that he be present at the meeting called early in September.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. M. A. HANNA, Cleveland, Ohio.

[John D. Archbold to Senator M. A. Hanna.]

AUGUST 19, 1901.

MY DEAR SENATOR: My attention is called to the fact of the appointment of Senator Thomas R. Bard of Hueneme, Cal., as a member of the industrial commission to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Senator Mantle, of Montana. I have further information that a determined effort will be made at the meeting early in September by the Democratic and disgruntled Republican members of the commission to make political capital against the so-called trusts. If Senator Bard can be counted on for sensible action in regard to this question, an effort should be made to have him present at the meetings. It is very desirable also to have him favor Col. Clarke for the chairmanship. Can you reach him, and will you do so?

Very truly, yours,

JOHN D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. M. A. HANNA, Cleveland, Ohio.

[John D. Archbold to Senator BOIES PENROSE.]

26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, November 24, 1902.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I most earnestly hope that it is in the line of your intention and desire to favor the reappointment of Hon. E. W. Smiley as chief clerk of the senate of Pennsylvania. His qualifications for the position need no word, I am sure, at my hands. I will esteem it a personal favor if you will aid in his reelection.

Yours, very truly,

JOHN D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE,
1331 Spruce Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

[John D. Archbold to Senator BOIES PENROSE.]

SEPTEMBER 22, 1902.

MY DEAR SENATOR: It proved that the Butler County gentleman named in your recent note to me is not in our employ, but I have fortunately succeeded in reaching him through a mutual friend, and I am very sure you will find him in line all right.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE, Philadelphia.

[John D. Archbold to W. R. Andrews, M. C.]

SEPTEMBER 5, 1900.

Hon. W. R. ANDREWS, Meadville, Pa.

DEAR SIR: I have your favor of August 31, and it will give me pleasure to write a letter at once as suggested by you. With the earnest hope that it will have some favorable effect, I am,

Very truly, yours,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

[John D. Archbold to C. W. Stone, M. C. Personal.]

OCTOBER 11, 1888.

Hon. C. W. STONE, Warren, Pa.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to our conversation of yesterday, it now gives me pleasure to inclose you certificate of deposit to your favor of $2,000. I have also written the letter suggested.

Truly, yours,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

[John D. Archbold to Senator BOIES PENROSE. Personal.]

26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, October 13, 1903.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In fulfillment of our understanding, it gives me great pleasure to hand you herewith certificate of deposit to your favor of $25,000, and with good wishes, I am,

Yours, truly,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE,
1331 Spruce Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

[John D. Archbold to A. J. Cassatt, president Pennsylvania Railroad. Personal.]

SEPTEMBER 6, 1900.

DEAR MR. CASSATT: In Mr. Patton's absence I venture to write you on a political question which seems to me of real importance and interest. In the twenty-seventh congressional district L. Emery, jr., the old-time agitator, is running for Congress against J. C. Sibley, of Franklin. Sibley has had, as you know, rather a variegated political career, but he is now again squarely in the Republican fold, and I think sound in every way. Emery's election would certainly be a great misfortune, and I venture to ask that you do everything possible in the matter in Mr. Sibley's favor, on the sure ground that all corporate and vested interests will have at least fair consideration and treatment at his hands.

With kind regards, I am,

Very truly, yours,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Mr. A. J. CASSATT, President,
Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa.

[John D. Archbold to W. A. Patton, Pennsylvania Railroad Co. Personal.]

OCTOBER 5, 1900.

DEAR MR. PATTON: In re the Emery-Sibley contest, it is reported that a good many of your W. N. Y. & P. men are actively for Emery, and especially a Mr. Wilmoth, a detective officer, of Bradford, Pa., who is said to be working hard for Emery. Judge Logan's department will know about him. Won't you see what you can do?

Very sincerely, yours,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Mr. W. A. PATTON,
Pennsylvania Railroad Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

[John D. Archbold to Willis J. Hulings.]

MARCH 29, 1900.

Gen. WILLIS J. HULINGS, Pittsburgh, Pa.

MY DEAR SIR: Responding to your favor of yesterday, I think you will readily see that we can not take the initiative in such a matter. Could you ask Sibley to go to the President on it? I think he would be as efficient a medium as could be employed.

Very truly, yours,

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

[Joseph C. Sibley, M. C., to John D. Archbold.]

COMMITTEE ON MANUFACTURES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
Washington, February 26 1900.

MY DEAR MR. A.: Yesterday I had a long talk with a friend in the Senate whom you know I have always regarded as one of the strongest men in that body, "Mr. B., a Democrat." He is wholly and unalterably opposed to the President's and Garfield's policy vs. corporations. I think he is prepared to make a great fight against the vicious principle that the Government can open my books or reveal my trade secrets because some one thinks I am engaged in making too much money.

He has the courage and the ability to make a legal argument on the floor of the Senate second to no man of that body.

Had you ought not to have a consultation with him some day?

One great man at the proper time would be a "tower of strength and safety."

He comes nearest to-day to being the leader of his party of any one man in it.

If you want to see him think I could arrange for him to call when in New York. I put in all day yesterday in the Democratic cloakroom of the Senate, and I guess I answered about 25 different Senators "What is the trouble in Kansas?" I told them that "it was an attempt to nullify the law of supply and demand."

The cotton growers could as well with their surplus crop this year demand some spinners to pay last year's prices. That increasing production from 6,000 barrels to 40,000 per day meant a surplus, and in oil, as in cotton, the surplus fixes the price of the whole crop.

If you think of anything for me to do let me know, but I guess the Members of the House of Representatives, including the Speaker, pretty well understand the situation.

I could quietly give away a dozen or two more of the little books. I have bought and given away many copies of Lloyd's "Newest England," and I think it is doing good work.

If at any time my long scribbles annoy you, chuck them in the basket; but one has, at times, to pour out wrath somewhere, and I make you the victim.

Sincerely, yours, JOSEPH C. SIBLEY.

P. S. In re power to fix railroad rates.

Mr. B. is for giving power to make rates, but will fight the idea of a separate court. I was sorry not to be able to change his views on that topic.

[B. J. Haywood, State treasurer of Pennsylvania, to James McManes, president People's Bank.]

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Harrisburg, Pa., July 31, 1896.

DEAR SIR: On Monday we will mail you check for $10,000 for credit of Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, general fund, which will make a credit to our account of $600,000. The understanding is that I am not to draw against any part of this $600,000 deposit until the Hon. R. R. Quay has paid or arranged satisfactorily to you the loan of $100,000 which you are to make to him next week.

Very truly, yours, B. J. HAYWOOD, State Treasurer.

JAMES MCMANES, Esq.,
President People's Bank, Philadelphia, Pa.

[John D. Archbold to Senator M. S. Quay. Personal.]

26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK,
July 18, 1898.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your favor of the 15th and will do as you request, provided that you finally say that you need so much. Please ask for it in installments, as needed, from time to time, not all at once.

I have your kind note about Walter and will do as you suggest.

Very truly, yours,
JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. M. S. QUAY, Mountville, Lancaster Co., Pa.

[John D. Archbold to Senator M. S. Quay.]

26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK,
September 22, 1898.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Answer to your favor of September 11 has been delayed because of my absence on vacation.

It now gives me pleasure to inclose you certificate of deposit to your favor for $12,500, in fulfillment of promise.

Very truly, yours, JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. M. S. QUAY,
199 States Avenue, Atlantic City, N. J.

[John D. Archbold to Senator M. S. Quay.]

26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK,
September 25, 1899.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In accordance with request in your favor to me of the 23d, I now beg to inclose you cashier's check, National City Bank of New York, to your favor for $10,000.

Very truly, yours, JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. M. S. QUAY,
Care W. A. Patton, Philadelphia, Pa.

[John D. Archbold to Senator BOIES PENROSE.]

MAY 5, 1899.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE, Philadelphia:

I would like to talk with you over the telephone to-morrow—Saturday—morning at 10.30. Can you give me a call number and address on which I can call you at that time. Please answer.

J. D. ARCHBOLD.

[John D. Archbold to W. R. Andrews, M. C.]

MAY 6.

Hon. W. R. ANDREWS, Washington, D. C.:

Your kind telegram received. Many thanks. I have had the talk.

JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

[John D. Archbold to Senator BOIES PENROSE. Personal.]

DECEMBER 7, 1899.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to our conversation by telephone and your favor of yesterday, one of my associates, who is on friendly personal terms with Mr. Smith, of the L. & N., has seen him and had a very full talk. It seems that Mr. Smith had just been in Washington. He seemed to know that Senator Lindsay would be unfavorable, but is quite sure that Senator Deboe will be all right. I have had a very strong letter written to both Senators Proctor and Ross, of Vermont, which I hope will have some influence with them. I have not as yet found any ground of approach to either Senator Turley, of Tennessee, or Senator Fairbanks, of Indiana. I have a possibility as to the latter, which I will know of to-morrow morning, but it is not sure. Unfortunately, Mr. Flagler was South. I communicated with him at once by telegraph after Mr. Quay's visit.

I earnestly hope that the outcome will be all right and will be glad to aid continuously in any way that I can. We all feel rather disappointed over the President's treatment of the corporation or so-called trust question. I inclose you a bit of to-day's Wall Street gossip on the subject.

I have taken the liberty of telegraphing you to-day, with reference to the appearance of our Mr. Howard Page to answer a recent adverse witness before the industrial commission. The witness referred to, George Rice, is so erratic and ridiculous as to defeat himself with anybody who would give his testimony careful consideration, but I think, aside from its unfairness to us, there is a possible political point in having it answered.

Very truly, yours, JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE, Washington, D. C.

[John D. Archbold to Senator BOIES PENROSE. Personal.]

DECEMBER 11, 1899.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your kind favor of Saturday. We appreciate highly your effort with the Industrial Commission with reference to Mr. Page's appearance. We are advised to-day that the examination is put over until to-morrow. I am making a further special effort to-day to reach Senator Fairbanks on the Quay case and hope to do so. We shall not soon forget Guffey's course in this whole matter.

I have favorable word from Mr. Flagler. With kind regards, I am

Very truly, yours,
JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE, Washington, D. C.

[John D. Archbold to Senator BOIES PENROSE.]

DECEMBER 13, 1899.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have been doing what I can and hope that some influence has gone, especially to Senator Fairbanks, that will have some effect. I, just at this moment, had a call from our friend, Gen. Charles Miller, of Franklin, Pa., who has asked a personal friend of his from Indianapolis, Ind., who knows Senator Fairbanks very well, to go to Washington at once and see what he can do.

I most earnestly hope that matters are progressing more favorably than the newspaper accounts seem to indicate.

Very truly, yours, JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE, Washington, D. C.

[John D. Archbold to Senator M. S. Quay. Personal.]

FEBRUARY 13, 1900.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to your note regarding the new California Senator, Senator PENROSE has already written to me on the subject, and I have asked our people to do everything they can through the Santa Fe, as we have no direct relations of any kind with the new Senator, and I am dubious about the effect of our efforts through the Santa Fe.

Very truly, yours, JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. M. S. QUAY, Beaver, Pa.

[John D. Archbold to Senator M. S. Quay.]

26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK,
October 30, 1902.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I duly received your favor of the 26th. Not because we think we should, but because of your enticing ways, I inclose your certificate of deposit for $10,000. I have heard that you have recently said some disagreeable things about me, for which I think you ought to be ashamed.

Very truly, yours, JNO. D. ARCHBOLD.

Hon. M. S. QUAY,
Hotel Walton, Philadelphia, Pa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] as modified.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to have the resolution read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the statement made by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] in the Senate on Wednesday, August 21, 1912, be, and is hereby, referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, appointed under Senate resolution No. 79, agreed to on April 29, 1912.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. REED. I send the following to the desk as an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate fully into all statements and questions of fact referred to in the statement of personal privilege made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] on the floor of the Senate, August 21, 1912; and, further, said committee is authorized and directed to investigate into and ascertain the amount of money expended by or on behalf of any candidate seeking the nomination of any political party formed or in the process of formation for President during the year 1912, or by any committee or person acting for or in behalf of such candidate, or in the interest of such candidate or party, and to ascertain the names of all persons, firms, or corporations contributing to any of the purposes aforesaid, and the amounts paid or contributed, and how and when paid, including all sums of money used to secure the election of delegates to any national convention or to influence the actions of delegates at said convention.

Said committee or subcommittee is authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate, and during any recess of the Senate or of Congress, and to hold sessions at such place or places as may be deemed most convenient for the purposes of the inquiry; to employ stenographers and such other clerical force as may be deemed necessary; to subpœna witnesses, send for persons, books, records, and papers, and to administer oaths.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri will, under the statute, have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. PENROSE. I was going to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that it would have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. REED. For what reason?

Mr. PENROSE. Because it has in it a provision for expenses to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. REED. I will ask that that be stricken out.

Mr. PENROSE. I was going to suggest to the Senator that I looked into this very carefully this morning, and I find that the resolution which the Senate has already passed gives the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, full power to subpœna witnesses, and authorizes the payment of the expenses out of the contingent fund of the Senate. It was for that reason that I modified my motion and made it simply a reference to that committee of the statement made by me, having in the meanwhile been assured by the chairman of the committee that he would proceed promptly. In line with that, I understand he has already sent for John D. Archbold, who will be here to-morrow.

I think if the Senator will strike out of his amendment the reference to expenses, and simply ask to have referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, the question of the expenses of the recent primaries of all parties, he will accomplish the object he has in view.

Mr. REED. I will modify the amendment by striking out the provision for the payment of expenses from the contingent fund and the provision with reference to the printing of the report.

Mr. PENROSE. The provision about subpœnaing witnesses, while it does not do any harm, is not necessary.

Mr. REED. But this directly calls for an investigation of the expenses at the recent primaries, which is what I want to get at.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri offer it as an amendment to be added to the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REED. Yes; I offer it in that way.

Mr. PENROSE. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will permit the Chair for a moment, the resolution will be read as it would read if amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the statement made by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] in the Senate on Wednesday, August 21, 1912, be, and is hereby, referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, appointed under Senate resolution No. 79, agreed to on April 29, 1912.

The Committee on Privileges and Eelections, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate fully into all statements and questions of fact referred to in the statement of personal privilege made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] on the floor of the Senate, August 21, 1912; and, further, said committee is authorized and directed to investigate into and ascertain the amount of money expended by or on behalf of any candidate seeking the nomination of any political party formed or in the process of formation for President during the year 1912 or by any committee or person acting for or on behalf of such candidate, or in the interest of such candidate or party; and to ascertain the names of all persons, firms, or corporations contributing to any of the purposes aforesaid, and the amounts paid or contributed, and how and when paid, including all sums of money used to secure the election of delegates to any national convention, or to influence the actions of delegates at said convention.

Said committee or subcommittee is authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate, and during any recess of the Senate, or of Congress, and to hold sessions at such place or places as may be deemed most convenient for the purposes of the inquiry; to employ stenographers and such other clerical force as may be deemed necessary; to subpœna witnesses; send for persons, books, records, and papers; and to adminster oaths.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the resolution.

Mr. POINDEXTER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. POINDEXTER. When was the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania introduced?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at the time, but it was some time during the afternoon of to-day.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask that it go over under the rule.

Mr. PENROSE. Has the Senator from Washington any objection to this inquiry?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know that I have any objection to the inquiry. I am perfectly free to say, however, that I would like to see the form of the resolution and to understand clearly its purposes. This drama that we witnessed here this afternoon, being played between the leading representatives of the Democratic Party and the representative of the old Republican machine of Pennsylvania, was a very unexpected development in the political situation, and any proposition which grows out of this joint work, team work, so to speak, between these two political forces, which would seem on the surface to be opposed to each other, is a matter that requires a little thought and examination before it be consented to. I should like to see the resolution and to have a little opportunity to consider it.

Mr. PENROSE. As far as concerns my motion, it is really unnecessary. The committee, under the resolution already passed by the Senate, has full authority to take up an investigation of the statements that I made, and whether the Senator from Washington persists in his objection or not, that investigation will proceed at half past 9 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not responsible for the Senator's statement, nor for what he proposes to do, nor for any investigation he refers to. I have no objection to his plan. My position has been fully stated—that I desire an opportunity to see this resolution and to examine and understand it, and that I hesitate to allow it to go through without examination on account of the peculiar combination of interests which seems to be backing it up since it was introduced here this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the objection, the resolution will go over and be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington a question. What is the peculiar combination of interests to which he refers?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well——

Mr. WARREN. What is before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WARREN. I understood that it had been objected to, and that under the rule it had gone over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been objected to, and it does go over and will be printed under the rule.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to answer the question of the Senator from Mississippi. The peculiar combination of interests to which I have referred is composed of the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator from Washington mean by that that there is any combination of interest between the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I made that statement upon what has occurred here in the Senate this afternoon—the joint efforts of the three Senators whom I have named, bringing out into very clear relief the one issue really that there is in the politics of the country to-day—upon the one side those measures of progress and improvement in political conditions which are represented by Col. Roosevelt, his platform, and his candidacy—and those opposed to him. It has brought out the fact that those who are working in harmony and in conjunction in opposition to that platform and those measures are the Senators I have just named.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. And the peculiarity about it is the apparent understanding and the harmony with which this combination operates.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I believe I am entitled to the floor.

Mr. WARREN. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I believe I am entitled to the floor in consequence of the consent of the Senator from Washington to permit an interruption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order raised by the Senator from Wyoming has been sustained.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yet do not quite distinctly understand, in spite of the intimation and insinuations——

Mr. POINDEXTER. There are no imputations and no insinuations. I am not in the habit of making insinuations or speaking by innuendo. On the contrary, I am in the habit of speaking rather too bluntly—too plainly—and there is nothing that I have in mind that is not upon the record, the public record, and the RECORD of the Senate. I base it upon what has occurred here this afternoon—upon the apparent bitterness and I might say rancor displayed in like degree by the representative of the crumbling, notorious Republican machine of Pennsylvania and two of the principal spokesmen of the Democratic Party in this Chamber—the apparent community of interest and the apparent——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must insist that objection having been made to the resolution, it goes over under the rule, and the question before the Senate——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand from that that I have no present opportunity to reply to the insinuation, intimations, and the assertions of the Senator from Washington?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor. He can speak on the pending motion——

Mr. WILLIAMS. It seems to me I had the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A point of order was made, and the regular order was called for, and the Chair held that the resolution had gone over under objection, and the regular order is the conference report on the appropriation bill which is under consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will I be permitted to say—I ask the Chair's opinion and I submit myself to the order of the Chair—that so far as I am concerned and so far as my utterance of opinion is concerned, that every syllable of the intimation that I could possibly be in any sort of alliance, confederation, or understanding with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania is absolutely false. I do not care one whit which faction of the Republican Party wins. Abiding in the absolute confidence that the Democratic Party will win, I have never found any reason in all my political history why I should have a particle of respect either for the machine, the stand-pat Republican organization, or for the so-called progressives. I would rather say "progresivistas."

Mr. POINDEXTER. How about Murphy's machine?

Mr. WILLIAMS. And, Mr. President, I shall not be deflected from the present question to that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think it is the same question. There is the community of interest—the natural community of interests, which I referred to—between those machines. They are bipartisan. This battle between the Republican machine and the Democratic machine is a sham battle—not a real battle.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there is no battle, or any sham battle, right now between the Democratic machine and the Republican machine. The real battle in issue right now is between the self-appointed representatives of the bull moose convention and the old stand-pat Republican machine represented by the Senator from Pennsylvania. I have no love for either; I have an equal hate for both; I have an equal distrust of both. The Senator from Washington can not deflect the argument. He can not undertake to make the appearance before the country that the Democratic Party is interested at all in this discussion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Pardon me. Wait a minute.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I have the floor I believe. I am perfectly willing to give the Senator from Mississippi an opportunity to correct a statement, or to ask a question, or to put himself right, but if he desires to make a speech upon this subject, I prefer not to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, Mr. President, of course I have no recourse except to sit down; but immediately after the Senator from Washington is through I will arise and will address the Senate in response to whatever he has said.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that there may be no misunderstanding that the question is upon agreeing to the conference report. Of course Senators may discuss that matter in any way they choose. The Chair can not control that.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. I hope the Senator from Washington will withdraw his objection to the resolution being referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I, of course, do not want in any way to influence him against what he thinks ought to be done, but I would like to see the matter disposed of, and I am perfectly satisfied, as far as I am concerned, that the investigation will result the same as this discussion has, greatly to the credit of Col. Roosevelt, and strengthen him very much throughout the country.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know what the resolution is. I did not understand that the proposition was to refer it to the committee. My understanding was that it was to be adopted.

Mr. BRISTOW. I understood that it was to refer it to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Am I right?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question was on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BRISTOW. I thought it was on referring the resolution to the committee.

Mr. POINDEXTER. At this moment I would have no objections to referring it, but I insist on my objection that it shall go over under the rule until to-morrow morning. As far as Col. Roosevelt is concerned, there is no resolution calling for an inquiry into any of his actions. There has been nothing which has been said here that indicates that any part of his conduct needs to be investigated. There is no charge that he received any money.

Mr. PENROSE. There has been nothing but a shower of bouquets and compliments all the afternoon.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There has not been published any letters from Mr. Archbold forwarding him any sum of money. I understood that the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania was to investigate that matter, and I think it ought to be done. The consideration of the matter of personal privilege upon which he addressed the Senate did not involve a personal privilege made by Col. Roosevelt or by anybody speaking for Col. Roosevelt.

The Senator from Mississippi says that my statement that there was a community of interest between the Senator from Pennsylvania and himself was false. I do not know in what sense he intended to use that word. I do not desire to have any unpleasant controversy with the Senator from Mississippi. The use of language of that kind does not accomplish anything in ascertaining the truth. It does not in any way change the record. It does not in any way lead to a proper conclusion upon the statements which have been made.

The Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Pennsylvania during the entire afternoon have been indulging in a harmonious and vehement tirade upon Col. Roosevelt.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. While the discussion of the last few days has been limited to matters which took place some eight years ago, an effort was made yesterday afternoon to amend the law in existence now so that it would have a salutary effect upon the coming election. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the pending resolution relates to present times, and I earnestly hope that the Senator from Washington will withdraw his objection so that this whole matter may be gone into with reference to what has happened recently as well as to what happened some four years or eight years ago.

Yesterday I could not see the logic of those who were anxious to bring up what happened eight years ago, and yet, by every effort known, finally to a vacation of the Chamber, the enactment of a law was prevented that would operate upon the coming election. I earnestly hope the Senator from Washington will withdraw his objection and let the resolution be adopted at this time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Minnesota is of the same mind on to-morrow morning I will probably have no objection. I have not made any objection; I only asked for the regular order, for I did not know of any occasion of putting the resolution through this evening. I do not understand that the committee is going to sit this evening to begin an investigation.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not know whether the pending resolution would enlarge the scope of the inquiry of the committee or not.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is one reason why I object. I do not know whether it would or not. I have not examined it.

Mr. CLAPP. It could only do one of two things. It either could not enlarge it, or it could enlarge it. The committee meets to-morrow morning at 9.30 to take up the hearing of Mr. Archbold. So it occurred to me that it would be well to let the resolution be adopted to-night for whatever it may be worth, as bearing upon any possible enlargement of the authority of the committee when they proceed to their work to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington will proceed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I want to repeat the fact that we are very glad to have developed that the Democratic Party, in so far as it has been represented by very distinguished Senators of that party who have spoken this afternoon, at least upon a number of the issues in this campaign, speak from the same standpoint and in a common cause with one of the prominent members of the national committee which presided over the Republican convention in Chicago, which convened there on June 18, and notwithstanding the fact that one candidate in the Republican Party had presented his cause to the people composing that party from Maine to California and had been indorsed by them, this national committee, whose cause these Democratic Senators are now adopting gave the nomination to the defeated candidate. This committee had as one of its most conspicuous members the representative of the Pennsylvania organization, which he himself has described in part this afternoon. That national committee proceeded, notwithstanding the verdict of the people, taken in a formal and lawful and deliberate election expressing the preference of the Republican Party for one candidate, in defiance of the wishes of the party as regularly expressed to give the nomination to another candidate—the candidate who secured these negro delegates from the State, among others, which the Senator from Mississippi represents, the States which his party in large part speaks for, and obtained those negro delegates, if not with the use of money at least with the use of what was equivalent to money—offices and political patronage and the preferment which they seek at the hands of the Republican Party in the Southern States, and except for which the party there has no object of existence.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was that element——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment. It was that element in the Republican Party, coming from States like Mississippi and Territories like Hawaii and the Philippine Islands, that furnished the political sentiment which, passing through the alembic of the national committee, formed itself into the nomination by the Republican Party of Mr. Taft for the Presidency of the United States.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the sentiment of the Republican Party and those are the elements in the party which this nominee represents, and it is with that element that the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Missouri are combining in their attacks upon the nominee who was the real choice of the party.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I do not intend to quarrel with the Senator about his conclusion. I know it is a mighty exasperating thing to have a man's idol exposed as a hypocrite, and any devotee of such an idol is quite likely to discredit and misconstrue the motives of the man who is exposing the iniquities; he is likely to not understand that he is only interested in seeing iniquity exposed and villainy proven.

Now, since the Senator has spoken of it, to what extent was patronage used to control the votes of delegates in Chicago and to get the delegates? Was that practiced to any great extent?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was practiced to the greatest extent of which it was capable.

Mr. REED. The Senator thinks that is an iniquitous thing, just as bad as the payment of money.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is the Senator asking me a question or making a statement?

Mr. REED. Yes; I ask the question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is not necessary to draw a nice balance between bribery with money and bribery with office. Morally they stand upon the same plane, in my judgment.

Mr. REED. I agree with the Senator about that; and I wish the Senator now to enlighten us as to the extent the stand-pat Republicans in Chicago resorted to these nefarious practices. I think if the Senator will tell us about that he and I would have a community of interest established in a few minutes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not understand the Senator from Missouri would want to bring out anything which would be damaging in any way to the stand-pat Republicans.

Mr. REED. You would not think so? Is the Senator serious?

Mr. POINDEXTER. My understanding was that there was a coalition.

Mr. REED. The Senator is not serious. He does not say that seriously.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment——

Mr. REED. He has never dreamed of a coalition between myself and the Senator from Pennsylvania. He does not dream of it now. I can relieve the Senator's anxiety. Whenever one Republican wants to tell on another I am going to help him tell and when the other Republican wants in turn to expose the iniquities of the fellow who told on him I am going to help him tell. There will be a community of interest between myself and the Senator who has the floor in a moment if he will now tell some of the iniquities that were practiced by the standpatters out there in Chicago.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should not like to detain the Senate to tell about all of them. I can tell a few of them.

Mr. REED. Well, just a few samples; of course, not all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to say that the difference between the Senator from Missouri and myself in the matter of this inquiry is that, so far as I am concerned, I would not limit it as he limits it to the two wings of the Republican Party, but I would also include the Democratic Party. I would make some inquiry into the $250,000 contribution of Mr. August Belmont to Mr. Parker in 1904. I do not think it ought to be a partisan investigation.

Mr. REED. The Senator is just a little bit inclined now, I would not say to dodge but to sidestep the issue.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, no.

Mr. REED. The issue is this: Because I asked the Senator from Pennsylvania some questions to which he returned answers that the Senator who has the floor did not like, the Senator has charged that there was a community of interest. Now, in order to show that I am quite impartial, I am asking the Senator if he will not now please lift the lid a little and let us have a view of the standpat Republicans, so that the whole country can get an impartial view of both sides. When the Senator attacks my party I will defend it, and when the Senator from Pennsylvania attacks it I will defend it as best I can.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is no danger, I apprehend, of the Senator from Pennsylvania attacking it.

Mr. REED. I think he has been doing it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Pennsylvania seems to be confining his attacks to Col. Roosevelt, and the Senator from Missouri seems to be confining his attacks to Col. Roosevelt.

Mr. REED. Oh, no.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The candidate who was nominated as the nominal candidate of the Republican Party by the votes of the black belt of the South and the Territories of the United States seems to have become a negligible quantity.

Mr. REED. Oh, no.

Mr. POINDEXTER. He seems to have become obscured in this rush on the part of Senators representing the old organizations, those representing the Republican Party and those representing the Democratic Party, to focus their fire upon the candidate whom they seem to regard as their formidable opponent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no.

Mr. REED. No; this was the afternoon to shoot bull moose, that is all. To-morrow we will go for the other branch of the party. But this is one reason why there is no contest between the Senator from Pennsylvania and ourselves this afternoon. You can hardly have a contest with a man who stands at the confessional and says, "Yes; I did get money from the corporations." There is no room for contest. But here is another gentleman who is denying it. Now, having a confession from one man we propose to have a confession from the other or prove his guilt, and we will do it by a former companion and partner just as quick as we will by any other witness. Then we intend, as far as possible, to eliminate them both and let the American people know that what we have charged for 20 years, that the elections of this country have been corrupted, and that the great corporations have used political leaders of the Republican Party as their tools—we propose to let the people know that, and to let them also know that Theodore Roosevelt was one of the gentlemen whose hands are most thoroughly tarred.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if in this pursuit of the big moose, which is fine game, hunting along with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], he has given an immunity bath to the Standard Oil Co. and to its beneficiaries, so that when this good time comes of which he speaks, when, by this little arrangement that he is making with the stand-pat element in the Republican Party, he says the Democrats will come into power, they will have a certificate of innocence and security from that party?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the only man who has ever assumed to give an immunity bath in this country to great corporation managers or to sanction a conspiracy among them was one Theodore Roosevelt when he authorized the consolidation of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. and the Steel Trust and agreed in advance to set aside the laws of the people of the United States. He is the only man who has ever tried to give immunity baths in this country.

Mr. POINDEXTER. O Mr. President, the record does not bear out that statement at all.

Mr. REED. And he is the only man who ever truckled—and I had forgotten to mention that—at the demand of George W. Perkins, impudently and insolently made, and stopped the prosecution of the Harvester Trust, that has been robbing the farmers of this country, the proof of which is here in a Senate document. He is the only man who sets aside the law, and he is the only man that I know of who grants immunity baths; but if the Senator knows where William H. Taft has granted immunity, if he knows where he has been getting any money that we do not know of now, if he knows of anything that he has done that is not already public property, then I wish he would tell us this afternoon.

I will say another thing, just so that my position may be clear. I think that from the moment William H. Taft wrote the letter to Theodore Roosevelt thanking him for having made him President of the American people and acknowledging his servitude to him, William H. Taft's pathway through the years has been one of complete, absolute failure, without a single ray of light to illumine the dark passage. I think William H. Taft will get all the money he can from the big corporations in this campaign, and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] does not deny that his crowd deal in that kind of campaign argument; but Theodore Roosevelt and many of Theodore Roosevelt's advocates wrap the garments of their righteousness around them; thank God they are not as other men; they make broad their phylacteries, enlarge the borders of their garments, stand on the street corners and make long prayers, and it appears they are now opening their meetings with hymns. I merely want the American people to know that they are the same crowd of fellows who got into office with the corrupt money of corporations. If the Senator from Pennsylvania wants to turn State's evidence, I am glad that he is here.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri in his pursuit of Roosevelt, with the aid and assistance of John D. Archbold and the Senator from Pennsylvania, should be so fortunate as to be successful in that hunt I do not suppose he would have the heart in him to turn around then and prosecute his associates and colleagues in this prosecution which he is waging against Col. Roosevelt.

Mr. REED. What associates and colleagues?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Missouri asked me to describe some of the actions——

Mr. REED. But, before the Senator leaves it, he said I would not stop to prosecute my associates and colleagues. To whom does the Senator refer or to what?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I said that if you, in company with the Senator from Pennsylvania, with the assistance of John D. Archbold and other Knights of the Round Table, succeeded in your quest of the Holy Grail, you then would not have the heart to turn around and prosecute your colleagues in that pursuit.

Mr. REED. What colleagues? Whom do you mean?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The ones whom I have mentioned.

Mr. REED. Archbold or the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; both of them.

Mr. REED. Which one?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Both of them.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President, I do not know what the Senator from Washington means by that question, but he knows that I have stood here in the Senate giving my aid to the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio early in this session directing the Attorney General to prosecute the Standard Oil Co. for its criminal practices.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, yes; I understood, if the Senator will yield for just a moment, that that was the attitude of the Senator and of his party; and that is why I am so astonished to see the combination they have now formed with those same people.

Mr. REED. Oh, well, Mr. President, the Senator is seeing shadows. The only combination there is is in the Senator's mind.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, it is a joint effort; we will call it that. I do not insist on the word "combination"; but it is a working together for a common end.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I never prosecuted a criminal in my life where anybody had turned State's evidence but that the attorney for the defendant always said I had formed a combination with the State's witness. [Laughter.]

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, it was true, was it not?

Mr. REED. No. It was only true in the sense that I used the witness to convict the criminal. I am willing, as prosecuting attorney for the moment, to listen now to whatever evidence the Senator has to produce against the "standpatters," and we will try to convict them both. It has been suggested that we will hunt bull moose to-day and elephants to-morrow.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will permit a suggestion, would he be kind enough to withdraw his objection to the resolution, and let it go, and then let us take up the appropriation bills, and after we have got them out of the way let the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Missouri settle this controversy to suit themselves. I merely make the suggestion. I hope the Senator will understand the spirit in which it is made.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If it were a matter of importance really whether I should withdraw my objection or not, I would be very glad to consider the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas; but it is not a matter of importance whether this resolution is considered to-night or whether it is considered to-morrow morning. I do not desire to interrupt the Senate and am not going to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me a word?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. REED. We have had a pleasant little passage with each other, but, in all seriousness, all in the world there is in this resolution is an attempt to extend the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania to an investigation of the money expended by all of the candidates and by all of the committees in the present presidential primaries, and it puts the hearing in the hands of the committee headed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP].

The reason I ask the Senator to let the resolution pass to-night is that we are in the closing days of the session, the business is crowded, and we may not get up the resolution again. It could be passed in a few moments if permitted to come up now. Whatever the facts are from any source in regard to any candidate, I want them fully developed; and, in all seriousness, while the Senator and I differ upon matters political, we do not differ, I know, on the question of desiring purity in American politics. I hope he will withdraw his objection and let us vote on the resolution.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I only desired to emphasize the fact that the political system which has governed this country, outside of the Constitution and outside of any statutes, by party organizations, which is absolutely unresponsive to the people and beyond the reach and control of the people, as demonstrated this summer, particularly at the convention in Chicago in conjunction with the votes of the people in the primary election which preceded it, is the same in both parties and that there is no difference between a Democratic boss and a Republican boss. A political institution—the political "boss"—has grown up in this country that was never heard of in any other country in the world, and never heard of in the United States until comparatively recent years, having its existence fortified and maintained by combinations with great pecuniary interests, as has been disclosed in the question of privilege upon which the Senator from Pennsylvania has spoken.

I only desire to point out—and it has been illustrated by the course of the debate—that there is no difference whatever between those interests in their combination with the Democratic Party and their combination with the Republican Party. I do not mean to insinuate anything. There is nothing back of my remarks. I do not mean to say that the Senators from Mississippi and Missouri have had any connection with those interests, because I do not believe they have had; I am satisfied they have not; but they belong to a party which has; they have worked with an organization which has, and which has sought to place itself in power by the same means, and which is now seeking to place itself in power again with the same assistance and with the same means. I desired to call attention to the fact that the only remedy for that condition, the only remedy against the political bosses, about whom you have talked here—Flinn, of Pittsburgh, and the corresponding representative of the trusts, as it is charged, Mr. Perkins, supposing they are all you charge them with being—the only way that the boss and his business ally can be eliminated from politics is to eliminate the party system, the plan of party government, by which they have controlled the nomination of candidates, which, in most instances, was equivalent to an election.

The people of this country do not care whether Mr. Flinn was a political boss in Pittsburgh, or whether Mr. Perkins was connected with great financial interests, if they can establish a system for carrying on this Government, in which neither Mr. Flinn nor Mr. Perkins nor any other political boss or pecuniary interest will have an opportunity to go back of the election returns, or to fix up a slate which will make the election a mere pretense of a choice of the officials of the Government, and destroy the system constituting the "invisible government," as it has been called, this extraconstitutional government by holdover committees, which go through the pretense of making investigations and having hearings upon contested delegates.

I happened to be present during one of these so-called hearings before the national committee at Chicago. It was conducted by allowing one side 45 minutes to make a statement and the other side 45 minutes, without allowing an opportunity to the opening side to make an additional statement. Of course, in closing, the Taft representatives stated things which suited their case. The national committee, which was supposed to be investigating, refused to allow an interruption, even for a question, to correct bald misstatements of fact as to the choice of delegates. The national committee refused to allow even five minutes for rebuttal statements to correct misstatements which had been made in the closing of the case by the Taft representatives. The national committee, which was asserting itself as an investigator supposed to be holding a hearing for the purpose of discovering the truth, refused to examine any of the evidence in the case, refused to examine documentary proof of the things which were alleged and placed before the committee; they absolutely ignored it; and when members of the committee sought to interrogate witnesses they were cried down by the majority of the committee and prevented from discovering the actual facts in the case. The truth of it was that the cases had been decided before hearing. There was nothing particularly new in that, except to the extent to which it was carried. The system was old, but it had never been abused to the extent to which it was abused at that particular time; and it may be for the good of the country that the abuse was carried to that extent, in order to put in a clear light before the people the system by which the Government has been carried on.

There is only one movement to do away with that system. You have one great man in the Democratic Party who fought it in your convention at Baltimore, and only by the support of the people and the force of public opinion was he able to gain, so far as he did, the great victory which he achieved in that convention; but when the victory was gained the candidate nominated was the candidate of the same old organization, governed by the same system.

What difference does it make how many primary-nomination laws are passed by the various States, if a committee appointed four years ago, a committee composed of men who have been repudiated by the voters of their party in their several States, meet together, with the power to hold sham hearings, such as I have just described, and to unseat delegates whom the people elected and to put in their places delegates of their own political complexion? I say the only movement to do away with that system is not in your party and it is not in the party or the organization represented by the Senator from Pennsylvania; and so there is cause for uniting those two parties against the Progressive movement, which proposes to do away with the system, to make political bosses and their combinations with corrupt business impossible, and to establish a system of affairs in this country out of which there never could grow circumstances like the disgraceful and humiliating disclosures which the Senate has been compelled to listen to here in the last two days.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in behalf of American manhood, in behalf of American womanhood, and in behalf of American honor and common honesty, I shall not go into a discussion of any of the proceedings of the Republican national convention at Chicago. I recognize, as does every other honest American, that there were two opposing equally dishonest forces there. One of them had made a whole lot of sham, fraudulent contests as to the rights of delegates to seats upon the floor, and subsequently confessed that over half of them were sham and fraudulent. The other unscrupulously possessed itself of a "steam roller," with the idea of running over the ground. God forbid that any Democrat should ever align himself upon either side of that most disreputable situation. It was not a new disreputable situation; it was an old one. It began in 1896, when Mark Hanna was directing the fortunes of the Republican Party in opposition to the Democracy at that time, and when it was publicly avowed by distinguished Republican so-called statesmen that anything that could defeat Bryan and free silver was justifiable.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] says that somebody was in search of the Holy Grail. It seems to me that is a sort of putting Tennyson into an abomination; but if the Republican Party was ever in the possession of the Holy Grail, or if any wing of it ever was in possession of the Holy Grail or was ever seeking anything like it, I do not remember it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My statement was not that the Republican Party was, but that the Senator from Pennsylvania, and the Senator from Missouri, and the Senator from Mississippi were.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah, then the partnership is utterly impossible. It may be possible that the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Mississippi were in search of the Holy Grail, but it is absolutely impossible that the Senator from Pennsylvania ever could have been in search of the Holy Grail, either in partnership with us or in partnership with anybody else or by himself. There is nothing that I hate more than the pretense and hypocrisy of that wing of the national Republican Party which calls itself the National Progressive except that wing of the Republican Party that calls itself Stand-pat. I do recognize that the so-called national Progressive Republican Party does possess the virtue of hypocrisy, which is the reverence that vice pays to virtue." The stand-pat wing of the Republican Party does not even possess that virtue. It is not even hypocritical. It does not even pretend to any virtue of any description.

The Senator speaks of the rule of the nigger delegates from the South. How long has it been going on in Republican national conventions? And when did he awake to voice his protest against it? And when did the chief bull moose awake to voice his protest against it? When did he awake, and how did he awake? He awoke——

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator from Mississippi will allow me to answer that question——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield, of course.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I awoke at the time when that element in the Republican Party named the candidate of the party in the face of a different choice by the great white Republican States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I will ask the Senator one more question. Did he awake in 1896, when Mark Hanna controlled that element of the Republican Party in order to nominate McKinley? Did he awake in 1900, when the same element was in control in order to nominate the succeeding Republican candidate, or in 1904, when every "nigger" delegate belonged bodily to Roosevelt, or in 1908, when he controlled all of them for Taft?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator asks a very pointed question, and I suppose it ought to be answered. But the same conditions did not exist at all in 1896. Mr. McKinley was supported by the predominant Republican sentiment of the white Republican States of the country. There is no comparison whatever between Mr. McKinley's nomination——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not asked the Senator from Washington whether the other conditions were the same or not. I admit——

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is a particular condition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I admit, in the interest of frankness, that they were not, but I do ask him whether that same condition existed then that existed afterwards, and I ask him as a man, belonging to a distinguished family that has left records in the State of Mississippi, whether he is willing to stand here and state that Mark Hanna did not use the nigger delegates to the Republican national convention just in the same way that Taft's deputies did this year?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I never had any association with Mark Hanna, and my knowledge of his political methods is largely from reading and from hearsay; but if I understand correctly Mr. Hanna's situation in the Republican Party, he was a leading exponent of that theory of politics to which the Senator from Pennsylvania belongs and against which the Progressive Republicans of this country have been waging war at least for the last three years, and with which during this afternoon, in the particular matter involved at least, the Senator from Mississippi has been cooperating.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington has divided his discourse like ancient Gaul was said to have been divided—into three parts. The first part is absolutely true, and the other parts are not absolutely true. That the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has in the past been cooperating with that wing of the Republican Party which exercised a corrupting influence upon American politics I admit. I not only admit it, but I assert it. That the so-called Progressive Party has ever departed from that line of politics I deny; and my denial is proved by the admitted fact that the chief Bull Moose is now seeking funds from all the trusts in America. It is furthermore established by the fact that the chief Bull Moose has announced a policy on the trust question which was first submitted to George Perkins and Pierpont Morgan, and approved by them, to wit, the policy of not disintegrating the trusts, but permitting them still to exist under governmental regulations and have them under a bureau in the city of Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Coupled, if the Senator will permit me, with the destruction of those special advantages and special privileges which have been the means of building up trusts in this country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And in that respect the Senator from Washington is almost as far wrong as he uniformly is. In the Theodore Roosevelt idea of regulating trusts there is none of the idea which he has just suggested—not a particle. The Roosevelt idea is to form some sort of a bureau at Washington, similar, as he says, to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which shall not disintegrate trusts, but which shall regulate trusts and divide the good trusts from the bad trusts. So far as the language dividing the good trusts from the bad trusts is concerned, that does not occur in the national platform, but it did occur in the previous utterances of the nominee of the Bull Moose convention.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait a moment. When a man comes down to the last analysis, if a bureau appointed by an Executive is to decide which is a good trust, and therefore should be permitted to remain in business; and which is a bad trust, and which, therefore, should be immediately booted out of business, a man of ordinary common sense, if he were not 11 years old, could distinguish that the Executive would have absolute control of interstate commerce. He would have power through his bureau or department to say to every great big business in the country, "You shall step out," or "you may remain in"; and, being an ordinary human being and not an angel, and even Theodore Roosevelt is not an angel; the Senator from Washington is not an angel, and even I myself, with all my virtues, am not an angel——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I admit that is true, but I am sorry to have you put it in the record.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Any ordinary man who is not an angel will be more likely to solve the question of which is a good or bad trust by asking on which side of "my policies" a particular trust stands.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Mississippi has taken such a direct issue that I hope he will allow me to make a brief statement in that connection. He says there is nothing in the program of the progressive movement in this country which has in view the abolishment of special privilege.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; I did not say that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think the record will show you said that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg your pardon. The record will not show that, the record can not show that. I said there was nothing in your program in favor of the disintegration of trusts.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I made the statement that the policy of allowing large combinations of business to exist, where conditions required it, was coupled with the proposition that they should not enjoy special advantages and special privileges, and the Senator flatly contradicted my statement——

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I did I did not mean to do it, because I do remember that the Senator did say that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. So far as concerns the Senator's notion about the effect of a commission that it would be subject to the control of the President, that illustrates the faculty which the Senator has for dressing up an idea in beautiful form and surrounding it with attractive imaginings so as to give it a semblance of the absolute truth. The Senator knows perfectly well that a commission can be established that is not subject to Executive control at all, and with which the Executive would have nothing whatever to do.

A commission can be established, on the contrary, which is subject to the control of Congress, and it ought to be subject to the control of Congress.

And, so far as concerns the Senator's assertion that it would lead to bureaucratic law, bureaucratic government——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I really thought the Senator rose merely for the purpose of asking me a question, but I still yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will conclude right now. I said that there could not be any such thing as that properly, because the powers of such a commission ought to be fixed and limited by statute. The Interstate Commerce Commission is not a creature of the Executive, neither is it necessary that an industrial commission should be the creature of the Executive. The great agency by which the great Standard Oil Co. was built up in this country——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, Senators are urging me on every side to finish my address as soon as possible, and I yielded to the Senator from Washington to ask a question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one word and I will take my seat. The great agency was favoritism in railroad rates, and if it had been put upon an equal basis with its competitors in that regard it probably never would have developed as it did.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator has attempted to narrow the discussion. The Democrats in the House of Representatives long antedated Mr. Roosevelt in their efforts to terminate railroad rebates. The Senator has attempted in his previous discourse to show that the Democratic Party was particularly attacking that faction of the Republican Party which was in favor of the election for a third term, in contradiction of all American precedents, of Theodore Roosevelt. The Senator can not make that effect upon the country, because it would not be true, and because the Senator, of all men with whom I am personally acquainted, would be the least willing to make an untruthful impression. I have no higher contempt for anything than I have for the so-called Progressive Republican Party, except my contempt for the stand-pat Republican Party. The Senator has just mentioned the fact that his Bull Moose candidate pretends that he wants to strike down special privilege. Yes, he pretends it; his platform says he does, but history contradicts him; his own biography contradicts him. He has never raised his voice in favor of disintegrating a single trust in the United States.

He has frequently said that the trust business was a natural evolution, naturally evolved and historically developed, and that we could not go back to the old business of competition, free competition; and he has suggested that we should have a bureau in the city of Washington, not a bureau appointed by Congress, as the Senator would have us believe, but a bureau appointed by the President.

Mr. POINDEXTER. To whom is the Senator referring in stating "his policies"?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Theodore Roosevelt, of course. I did not know that you had the slightest doubt upon that question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not hear.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I forgot to give his given name after about 10 minutes of conversation about him, and I kept on calling him "he," "him," and "his." But I hoped that the Senator's intelligence, which I so highly honor, had kept up with the discourse.

Theodore Roosevelt, he—and of course he is the chief "he" in America, and he is the bull moose and par excellence a he—whenever I say "he" in this discourse I mean "him," regardless of the ungrammatical expression of submitting a subjective to the accusative—he never dared to advocate and he never came out in favor of the disintegration of a single trust. He always stopped short. He says, "I want a bureau, I want a commission." He never advocated a commission to be appointed by Congress, but a commission to be appointed by the President. And this commission was to decide whenever a good trust should remain in business and whenever a bad trust should go out of business. Now, wise men always take counsel when they are discussing general questions. When they are discussing a question deductively they take counsel of the inductive philosophy, of history, and biography. What is the history of this gentleman who wants now to stand out from under the burden of being a Republican. By the way, he can not do it; neither can the Senator from Washington. They are both Republicans; they have both been responsible for all the sins and shames and disgraces and toleration of special privileges, and denial of equal opportunities that the Republican Party has put upon this country for the last 30 or 40 years. What is his history in connection with this question? Did he ever quarrel with George W. Perkins, although George W. Perkins dared him to quarrel, although Knox Smith wrote a letter to him saying, "Perkins says, 'If you do not let us alone, we will fight.'"

No, he did not quarrel with Perkins. He did not quarrel with the Perkins trust. He dared not quarrel—hero of San Juan, and alone in Cuba, as he writes himself, he surrendered basely, servilely. He agreed with Knox Smith that that particular fight was not worthy of being carried on against the great Standard Oil interest, and he quit. President Taft, who is not a distinguished Executive, but was a lawyer and thought therefore he ought to execute the laws equally against everybody, proceeded, as far as he could, to execute the laws against the Standard Oil Co., including George Perkins and Pierpont Morgan and the balance of them. They had previously served notice upon Roosevelt that if he dared to do it they would fight. I suppose they thought that notice was sufficient for Taft, but Taft, under the leadership of the Attorney General, proceeded in an unthoughted moment to try to execute the laws against them, and they kept their word and proceeded to fight Taft, and the consequence was that Perkins has contributed, God knows how much, to the bull moose campaign, and behind him stands, as I believe, Pierpont Morgan with the balance of the purse.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. All I have to say, if the Senator will yield to me, is that if they have contributed anything to that campaign they have contributed it to a mighty good cause.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, now is that not funny; is not that absolutely comic? All you have got to do is to say that your cause is a good cause and then, of course, you can make all your trusts in America contribute to it. I was trying to prove that Theodore Roosevelt had made a distinction between good trusts and bad trusts, and inadvertently and without the slightest idea of stumbling upon the political fact, I have discovered that the Senator from Washington thinks that the distinction between a good trust and a bad trust is that a good trust contributes to your campaign fund and a bad trust does not.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, that is just another specimen of poor logic coupled with eloquence.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That may be, Mr. President. I am the least egotistical of all human beings. I never imagined that I had any power of logic nor had any acumen as a debater. It is cruel for a master of the logical art, like the Senator from Washington, to refer to my obvious defects. The only mistake in the statement of the Senator from Washington is attributing to me some degree of eloquence. I never even had that. I am just an ordinary Mississippi farmer without much complete understanding of any public question, but with a tolerably fair farmer's understanding of facts.

The fact is that I was attacking the late President of the United States upon the ground that he made a distinction between good trusts and bad trusts upon the ground that good trusts contributed to his campaign and bad trusts did not. I leave it to the Senate as to whether the Senator from Washington did not afterwards confess by what he said that he shared the opinion which I had attributed to the late President of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to yield the floor in a second. The Senator from Washington said that we, on this side, have been indulging in a tirade against Theodore Roosevelt. The Senator from Washington is by ancestry a sort of Mississippian. I remember an old story. A man's dog got after a man down in Mississippi in the county in which old George H. Poindexter lived and the man hit the dog on the head with the handle of his whip and killed him. The fellow came up to him and said, "Why didn't you hit my dog with the whiplash of your whip?" He said, "Why didn't your dog come at me with his other end?" [Laughter.]

Now, the Republican Party is divided into two camps. Just as soon as Taft makes himself appreciable we will fight him, too. Just the minute the Republican Party decides that Taft is the biting end we have plenty in store for him—God knows the Progressives have provided enough, and, by the way, a good deal that is not true.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one word.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait one minute. Let me tell the Senator from Washington to keep his soul in patience. We have cannon—with proper and suitable habiliments of one sort or another—to direct against the common enemy, and we are not going to waste any of our ammunition, except where somebody comes out and proposes to fight, and when they do we are ready.

The Senator tells us that he thinks perhaps we may be mistaken on the 4th of March next. I assure him that as one of the political prophets of this country who has shown his right to the name by having been wrong about seven times in succession, I think next year neither Roosevelt nor Taft will be in it. By that time Woodrow Wilson will be President of the United States, and at that time we will appeal to the Senater from Washington to vote in favor of real, good, common-sense Democratic legislation in spite of his former Republican affiliations.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, in connection with the Senator's former Republican affiliations, I should like to ask the question now, because it applies to him peculiarly, At what particular moment he found out that the Republican Party was ruling American politics through the Negro vote? There have been only three Republican Presidents ever elected without the Negro vote, and one of them happened to have been Theodore Roosevelt. McKinley was elected a second term without the Negro vote. During all this time the Negro delegates in the Republican national conventions stood there as the equals by Republican admission, by Republican confession, and by Republican profession of any white man who was there.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. When the general election took place, with the exception of three national presidential elections, no Republican ticket has ever been elected by a majority of the white vote of the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On that question which the Senator asks I have already answered it fully, and I will let it stand upon that answer. Promising not to interrupt the Senator again, I am not surprised to hear him state what he hopes as to the Democrats being successful and in power March 4, but I was gratified to hear the Senator admit and to hear him assert that the political campaign is to be fought between his party and the Progressives who have nominated Col. Roosevelt.

Mr. WILLIAMS. O, Mr. President, the absolute and encyclopedic power of the Senator from Washington to misunderstand what has been said to him is miraculous. I have said nothing of that sort. I do not admit that in the contest which the Democratic Party has to wage against both of these factions of the old enemy of the Democratic Party the progressive element will be in the majority, even in the Republican Party, at all. It is the contrary, in so far as I can predict. I am not a prophet and never have been. Old Marlin Stubblefield told me two months after I was elected to Congress, "John, never turn prophet, because prophets are mostly derned fools." But in as far as a man can undertake to prophesy at all, I will prophesy that Theodore Roosevelt will not carry the electoral vote of three States in the American Union, and that the Democratic Party will still have to fight its old enemy, with a lot of its new enemies privately voting for Taft.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very glad to hear that, in view of the statement the Senator made a moment ago that he was wrong seven times out of eight in his prophecies.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I confess that that criticism is absolutely just. As a prophet I am not a prophet known outside of my own country, nor am I very reputably known even there. I have made a very great many mistakes. I have often thought that the Democratic Party would win when that opinion was my sincere and honest opinion, and it did not win; and my opinion now is my sincere and honest opinion.

Do you know what I really think? When the American people get through considering the false pretenses and hypocrisy and limelight play of Theodore Roosevelt, in view of the sober light of his past career, during seven years of which as President he never pretended that he even wanted to disintegrate a single trust and during the seven years of which he never expressed an idea in favor of reducing a single item of a single tariff bill—not one, and he has not expressed it yet—they will bury him under a mountain of adverse ballots. He is the only one of the three candidates who has not advocated any tariff reduction. His mind seems to run only to a more proper distribution of the loot. He is the only one of the three candidates who, in obedience to the almost mandatory order of the American people, has not. When the American people get through considering him and his pretenses in comparison with his achievements they will be awfully tired. They will not vote for him at all. Here he stands for initiative, referendum, and recall, woman's suffrage, anything anywhere that anybody wants; and when he went out of the White House he did not stand for a single, solitary one of these things. With seven years of power he never tried to put a single, solitary one of them into effect. In fact, if what I hear in a sort of private, confidential way be true, and no gentleman ever betrays a confidence, he spent the great part of the seven years' time ridiculing the whole business, especially woman's suffrage, to which he has become a very recent convert.

I do not believe there is a man in the Senate Chamber who, in the bottom of his heart, believes that Theodore Roosevelt's present professions and past performances can be brought into any accord at all. I do not believe there is one intelligent man in the country who believes it. I do not believe there is one intelligent man in America who does not know that the only reason why he seized upon these things right now is that he hopes by their instrumentality to be President of the United States.

I have no personal animosity against the man. He was always kind and courteous to me and I always so to him. I do not love Taft any better than I love him. I have an equal contempt for the political philosophy of both of them. Here is an ultraconservative and reactionary who does not want the American Government to move forward a step. Here is an ultraradical who wants the American Government to revolutionize itself over night. I have no use for either. In between them stands Woodrow Wilson, the present governor of the State of New Jersey, who answers to the description given in a chapter of one of his books by John Fiske: "Jefferson was a conservative reformer"—conservative as to means, diplomatic as to methods, a reformer, and a radical reformer as to ends to be attained.

Neither Taft nor Roosevelt can possibly furnish the solution of present problems. The one man who can furnish it is not an ultrareactionist nor an ultramad, self-confident, self-opinionated, egotistical radical, but a conservative reformer—a man who has the information to understand, in the first place, the condition of the country; and, in the next place, to carry policies out that will cure present evils, and the wisdom coupled with the courage to be radical about nothing.

There is no difference at all, Mr. President, between an ultraconservative and an ultraradical. Extremes meet. The worst enemy of reform in the world is an ultraradical. The worst enemy of conservation in the world is an ultraconservative. I want in the White House a man a little more radical than I am, because I know if necessary I can check him up. I do do not want anybody there more conservative than I am, because I know that both Houses and all the public can not hurry him up.

I am surprised that the Senator from Washington, with his good old Mississippi name, with his good Democratic teaching, is not out to-day upon the stump advocating the election of Woodrow Wilson.

One other word and I am through. The Senator said something about whether we are going to give an immunity bath to the Senator from Pennsylvania. No; we are not going to give him any immunity bath. We are not going to give any Bill Flinn any immunity bath either. We are not going to give this man Archbold any immunity bath either. If this Republican Congress does not put them all through the first and the second and the third degree, the next Democratic Congress that meets will put them all through. We have no favorites to play in this game. I know that this game of corruption in the Republican Party was not only a corruption used against the Democracy, but was the attempted corruption of one faction in the Republican Party against another and the attempted corruption of the other faction against that. You both are equally corrupt all the time. You have stood for special privilege; you have stood against equal opportunity, and you have all stood for it. Some of you have got ashamed of it and are now quitting the game, and you are trying to play with us in your game here at the eleventh hour, while we have been fighting for equal opportunity and justice and honesty for God knows how many years. Because you came in at the eleventh hour you want to be put at the head of the procession. Even Scripture does not say that. It admits the eleventh-hour convert to forgiveness, but it never did make him the captain in command of the cohorts of reform.

I yield to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE].

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24322) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24602) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24996) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25166) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL (S. DOC. NO. 940).

Mr. BOURNE. I present the conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill. I ask that it be printed and lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed and lie over.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21279) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 23, 26, 28, 30, 33, 34, 35, 43, 44, 63, 78, 79, 95, 109, 115, 117, and 122.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 24, 25, 27, 29, 31, 32, 38, 39, 41, 42, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 61, 62, 64, 66, 67, 70, 71, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 80, 82, 83, 84, 85, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 93, 94, 96, 97, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 107, 108, 111, 112, 113, 116, 119, 120, 121, 123, 124, and 125, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "two hundred" and insert the words "one hundred and fifty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "six hundred" and insert the words "six hundred and fifty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "six hundred" and insert the words "five hundred and fifty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "seven hundred and forty thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "seven hundred and fifty-two thousand one hundred and seventy-five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 58, 59, and 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 58, 59, 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"For inland transportation by railroad routes, $47,646,000: Provided, That a joint committee shall be appointed, composed of three members of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and three members of the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to be designated by the respective chairmen to make inquiry into the subject of postage on second-class mail matter and compensation for the transportation of mail and to report at the earliest practicable date, and for this purpose they are authorized, by subcommittee or otherwise, to sit during the sessions or recess of Congress, at such times and places as they may deem advisable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summons and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to employ such clerical, expert, and stenographic assistance as shall be necessary, and to pay the necessary expenses of such inquiry there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $25,000 to be paid out upon the audit and order of the chairman or acting chairman of said committee. From and after the passage of this act the Post Office Department shall not extend or enlarge its present policy of sending second-class matter by freight trains: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid for carrying the mail over the bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo., other than upon a mileage basis: And provided further, That the Postmaster General may, in his discretion, pay within the present law a fair and reasonable price for the special transfer and terminal service at the Union Station at East St. Louis, Ill., and at the Union Station at St. Louis, Mo., including the use, lighting, and heating of the mail building and transfer service at St. Louis, Mo., provided the amount so paid shall not exceed $35,000: Provided further, That on account of the floods in the Mississippi Valley commencing about April 1, 1912, the Postmaster General, for the purpose of adjusting compensation on such railroad routes in the second section as were affected by the floods and the consequent diversion of mails, is hereby authorized and directed to take the weights of mails ascertained on such routes during the successive working days from February 15 to April 3, 1912, both inclusive, and for the remainder of the weighing period from April 4 to May 29, 1912, both inclusive, to estimate the weights by applying to the weights taken during the period from February 15 to April 3, 1912, both inclusive, the ratio shown to exist between the weights taken on all routes during the first 49 days of the quadrennial weighing period of 1908 and the weights taken on such routes during the last 56 days of the said weighing period, the actually ascertained weights and the estimated weights to form the basis for the average daily weight upon which to adjust the compensation according to law on such railroad routes for the transportation of mails during the quadrennial term beginning July 1, 1912, notwithstanding the provision of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1905, requiring that the average daily weight shall be ascertained by the weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days, not less than 90, as the Postmaster General may direct."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 65: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 24 and 25 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "twenty-two million nine hundred and forty-one thousand seven hundred and eleven" and insert in lieu thereof the words "twenty-two million four hundred and sixty-five thousand one hundred and seventy-one"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 68: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In this amendment strike out the words "ninety thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "ninety-seven thousand five hundred"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "one hundred and eight thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "eighty-three thousand two hundred and fifty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 72: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "sixty" and insert the word "thirty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 81: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 81, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "nine hundred and ninety-six" and insert in lieu thereof the words "five hundred and thirty-one"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 86: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 86, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 24 of the bill, line 14, after the word "thirteen," insert the following: "nineteen hundred and fourteen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 92: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "thirteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventeen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 98: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 98, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That a joint committee shall be appointed, composed of five Members of the Senate to be designated by the chairman of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and five Members of the House to be designated by the chairman of the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to make inquiry into the subject of Federal aid in the construction of post roads and report at the earliest practicable date, and for this purpose they are authorized by subcommittee or otherwise to sit during the sessions or recess of Congress, at such times and places as they may deem advisable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summons and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to employ such clerical, expert, and stenographic assistance as shall be necessary, and to pay the necessary expenses of such inquiry there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000, to be paid out upon the audit and order of the chairman or acting chairman of said committee.

"And provided, That there is hereby appropriated the sum of $500,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in cooperation with the Postmaster General in improving the conditions of roads to be selected by them over which rural delivery is or may hereafter be established, such improvement to be for the purpose of ascertaining the increase in the territory which could be served by each carrier as a result of such improvement, the possible increase of the number of delivery days in each year, the amount required in excess of local expenditures for the proper maintenance of such roads, and the relative saving to the Government in the operation of the Rural Delivery Service, and to the local inhabitants in the transportation of their products by reason of such improvement, and report the results in detail to Congress: Provided, That the State, or the local subdivision thereof in which such improvement is made under this provision, shall furnish double the amount of money for the improvement of the road or roads so selected. Such improvement shall be made under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture.

"That the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General are hereby directed to report to Congress within one year after the ratification of this act the result of their operations under this act, the number of miles of road improved, the cost of same, and such other information as they may have acquired in connection with the operation of this act, together with such recommendations as shall seem wise for providing a general plan of national aid for the improvement of postal roads in cooperation with the States and counties, and to bring about as near as possible such cooperation among the various States as will insure uniform and equitable interstate highway regulations, and for providing necessary funds for carrying out such plans of national aid, if it shall be deemed feasible to provide the same or any part thereof otherwise than by appropriation from the Treasury for that purpose."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 105: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 105, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided further, That on and after September 30, 1912, letter carriers of the Rural Delivery Service shall receive a salary not exceeding $1,100 per annum: Provided, however, That because of the compensation herein provided no rural letter carrier shall receive less salary than before the passage of this act"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 106: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 12 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "holders," insert the following: "And also, in the case of daily newspapers, there shall be included in such statement the average of the number of copies of each issue of such publication sold or distributed to paid subscribers during the preceding six months"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 36 of the bill, in line 13, after the word "States," strike out the word "employed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 114: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 37 of the bill, in line 18, after the word "after," strike out the word "June" and insert in lieu thereof the word "September"; and on page 39 of the bill, in line 14, after the word "after," strike out the word "June" and insert in lieu thereof the word "September"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 118: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 118, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 8. That hereafter fourth-class mail matter shall embrace all other matter, including farm and factory products not now embraced by law in either the first, second, or third class, not exceeding 11 pounds in weight nor greater in size than 72 inches in length and girth combined, nor in form or kind likely to injure the person of any postal employee or damage the mail equipment or other mail matter and not of a character perishable within a period reasonably required for transportation and delivery.

"That for the purposes of this section the United States and its several Territories and possessions, excepting the Philippine Islands, shall be divided into units of area 30 minutes square, identical with a quarter of the area formed by the intersecting parallels of latitude and meridians of longitude, represented on appropriate postal maps or plans, and such units of area shall be the basis of eight postal zones, as follows:

"The first zone shall include all territory within such quadrangle in conjunction with every contiguous quadrangle, representing an area having a mean radial distance of approximately 50 miles from the center of any given unit of area.

"The second zone shall include all units of area outside the first zone lying in whole or in part within a radius of approximately 150 miles from the center of a given unit of area.

"The third zone shall include all units of area outside the second zone lying in whole or in part within a radius of approximately 300 miles from the center of a given unit of area.

"The fourth zone shall include all units of area outside the third zone lying in whole or in part within a radius of approximately 600 miles from the center of a given unit of area.

"The fifth zone shall include all units of area outside the fourth zone lying in whole or in part wihin a radius of approximately 1,000 miles from the center of a given unit of area.

"The sixth zone shall include all units of area outside the fifth zone lying in whole or in part within a radius of approximately 1,400 miles from the center of a given unit of area.

"The seventh zone shall include all units of area outside the sixth zone lying in whole or in part within a radius of approximately 1,800 miles from the center of a given unit of area.

"The eighth zone shall include all units of area outside the seventh zone.

"That the rate of postage on fourth-class matter weighing not more than 4 ounces shall be 1 cent for each ounce or fraction of an ounce; and on such matter in excess of 4 ounces in weight the rate shall be by the pound, as hereinafter provided, the postage in all cases to be prepaid by distinctive postage stamps affixed.

"That except as provided in the next preceding paragraph postage on matter of the fourth class shall be prepaid at the following rates:

"On all matter mailed at the post office from which a rural route starts, for delivery on such route, or mailed at any point on such route for delivery at any other point thereon, or at the office from which the route starts, or on any rural route starting therefrom, and on all matter mailed at a city carrier office, or at any point within its delivery limits, for delivery by carriers from that office, or at any office for local delivery, 5 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 1 cent for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

"For delivery within the first zone, except as provided in the next preceding paragraph, 5 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 3 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

"For delivery within the second zone, 6 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 4 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

"For delivery within the third zone, 7 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 5 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

"For delivery within the fourth zone, 8 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 6 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

"For delivery within the fifth zone, 9 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 7 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

"For delivery within the sixth zone, 10 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 9 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

"For delivery within the seventh zone, 11 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 10 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

"For delivery within the eighth zone and between the Philippine Islands and any portion of the United States, including the District of Columbia and the several Territories and possessions, 12 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 12 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

"That the Postmaster General shall provide such special equipment, maps, stamps, directories, and printed instructions as may be necessary for the administration of this section; and for the purposes of this section, and to supplement existing appropriations, including the hiring of teams and drivers, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $750,000.

"The classification of articles mailable as well as the weight limit, the rates of postage, zone or zones, and other conditions of mailability under this act, if the Postmaster General shall find on experience that they or any of them are such as to prevent the shipment of articles desirable, or to permanently render the cost of the service greater than the receipts of the revenue therefrom, he is hereby authorized, subject to the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission, after investigation, to reform from time to time such classification, weight limit, rates, zone or zones, or conditions, or either, in order to promote the service to the public or to insure the receipt of revenue from such service adequate to pay the cost thereof.

"The Postmaster General shall make provision by regulation for the indemnification of shippers, for shipment injured or lost, by insurance or otherwise, and, when desired, for the collection on delivery of the postage and price of the article shipped, fixing such charges as may be necessary to pay the cost of such additional services.

"The Postmaster General may readjust the compensation of star-route and screen-wagon contractors if it should appear that as a result of the parcel-post system the weight of the mails handled by them has been materially increased. Before such readjustment, however, a detailed account must be kept as to the amount of business handled by such star-route or screen-wagon contractors before and after this section becomes effective for such a period as to clearly demonstrate the amount of the increase, and that such increase in the weight of the mails was due to the adoption of the parcel-post system.

"That the establishment of zones and postage rates of this section shall go into effect January 1, 1913.

"That this act shall not in any affect the postage rate on seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, scions, and plants as fixed by section 482 of the Postal Laws and Regulations.

"That for the purpose of a further inquiry into the subject of the general parcel post and all related subjects a joint committee of six persons (Members of Congress), three of whom shall be appointed by the President of the Senate and three by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, is constituted, with full power to appoint clerks, stenographers, and experts to assist them in this work. That the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall furnish such data and otherwise render such assistance to the said committee as may be desired or available. For the purpose of defraying the expenses of this committee the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated out of the moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The committee shall report fully to Congress at the earliest date possible.

"That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this section are hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 126: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "That the Postmaster General may expend for the service of the Post Office Department during the months of July and August, 1912, a greater amount than that provided for by the joint resolutions extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under certain contingencies, approved July 1, August 1, and August 15, 1912: Provided, That the total expenditures under this act for the whole of the fiscal year 1913 shall not exceed the amounts thereby appropriated"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JONATHAN BOURNE, JR.,
BOIES PENROSE,
J. H. BANKHEAD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOHN A. MOON,
D. E. FINLEY,
JOHN W. WEEKS,
Managers on the part of the House.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 25531).

Mr. BACON. I want to be heard on this question for a comparatively brief time, not very long. I really do not wish to go on to-night if I can be indulged until to-morrow. We have been here now more than nine hours. It is very warm. I do not feel that I should like to do so. I do not think anything will be lost by letting it go over.

Of course, I do not expect to occupy any undue length of time, but I regard this as a very important question. It is more than probable, because of being attached to a conference report in the closing days of the session, they may be able to get through something that they would not otherwise get through; but I am unwilling for this provision to go on the statute books without expressing my reasons for objecting to it. I wish to have the opportunity to do so; and I do not think it is an unreasonable request that the matter go over until tomorrow. This matter has been thrust upon us to-day. I did not know of it at all until this afternoon. I think the conference committee far exceeded their powers. I think it was a gross abuse of the opportunity furnished those who were in charge of the conference to engraft upon the report something entirely foreign to the bill; something which had not been before either House. I would be very glad if the matter could go over until to-morrow.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Georgia knows that, so far as I am concerned, I have always been inclined to accommodate all Senators. I call his attention to the fact that I have been here all these hours and have not had time even to get my meals. I had charge in the morning of the legislative appropriation bill, which ought not to have taken 10 minutes to pass. I think the Senator from Georgia favored us with some considerable discussion on that bill. He was very interesting, as he always is, but he spoke in regard to conditions in Mexico; in fact, he went through a discussion of our relations with Mexico and with Nicaragua. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is not in good health; he expects to leave the city to-night and to leave the country to-morrow night or the next day. I have endeavored to accommodate him, as I wish the Senator from Georgia would, and, if he does not feel too fatigued, I wish he might proceed to-night.

Now, one word in regard to what the Senator has said about this being new matter. The Senator is mistaken about that. We had under the old law a three-year enlistment. The bill came from the House with a five-year term of enlistment, and there was put on in the Senate a provision for a reserve, which went through the Senate. The conferees have composed the differences, as they always do, by undertaking to unite the two and to work out this matter. It is not sprung upon the Senate; it is not new matter; it may be new to the Senator, and perhaps he did not notice it when it went through the Senate, but it is entirely within the lines of the usual procedure. If the Senator feels that he can finish to-night, it will accommodate the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I should be glad to see him so accommodated.

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, I could only do so at very serious personal discomfort. I will say that to the Senator. I do not expect any presentation that I shall make will unduly delay the passage of the measure or the action of the Senate upon it, but I should greatly regret to be forced to go on to-night. Like all other Senators, I am weary with the day's session. We have been here since 10 o'clock this morning.

Mr. WARREN. As the Senator knows, the chairman of the committee is not now in the Chamber.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator from Delaware has not spent any more time in the Chamber than I have, nor quite so much—that is, I mean during the day's session. I am not speaking of the length of service. I presume that other matters can be attended to if the Senate wishes to remain in session so as to save their consuming time to-morrow morning.

Mr. WARREN. If it is in order to reach a conclusion while I am endeavoring to get into communication with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, without displacing this matter, I could make a conference report upon another bill, and, if there is no objection, we could act upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The presentation of a conference report is a privileged matter.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I present the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill. The Secretary need not read the statement, but let it go in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming submits a conference report, which will be read.

The Secretary read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 9, 11, 12, 13, 16, 17, 18, 21, 22, 25, 28, 29, 30, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 46, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 55, 57, 60, 61, 64, 65, 66 68, 74, 75, 78, 80, 95, 96, 100, 101, 103, 104, 109, 113, 114, 123, 125, 127, 136, 137, 138, 140, 141, 142, 143, 147, 149, 150, 151, 153, 160, 164, 166, 167, 170, 173, 174, 177, 183, 184, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 193, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 205, 210, 212, 213, 214, 217, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 229, 231, 233, 234, 235, 240, 241, 242, 249, 250, 251, 259, 261, 262, 263, 264, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 274, 275, 277, 280, and 284.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 7, 8, 15, 19, 20, 23, 24, 26, 31, 39, 40, 41, 44, 56, 58, 59, 62, 67, 71, 72, 79, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 94, 99, 105, 106, 107, 110, 112, 115, 117, 118, 119, 121, 129, 130, 131, 132, 139, 145, 152, 154, 156, 162, 165, 168, 169, 171, 175, 176, 180, 181, 185, 192, 194, 195, 201, 202, 203, 204, 206, 207, 208, 209, 211, 215, 218, 219, 227, 230, 237, 243, 244, 245, 247, 248, 252, 253, 254, 265, 266, 278, 279, 281, 282, 283, 285, 286, 287, and 289, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 17 of said amendment, after the word "building" and before the semicolon, insert the following: ": Provided, That the additional work herein authorized on the said old building, together with the cost of the addition to the heretofore authorized building, shall all be done within the limit of $250,000, fixed in the above-mentioned act of June 25, 1910"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$144,770"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,500,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$17,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,658,845"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$300,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$412,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"Hereafter all plans and specifications for the construction of buildings in the National Zoological Park shall be prepared under the supervision of the municipal architect of the District of Columbia, and all plans and specifications for bridges in said park shall be prepared under supervision of the engineer of bridges of the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$225,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Transpose line 1 on page 54 of the bill to precede the matter inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 63: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Cave Hill Cemetery, Louisville, Ky., purchase of additional land: For the purchase of additional land in Cave Hill Cemetery, at Louisville, Ky., for the burial of soldiers of the Union Army in the late Civil War and in the War with Spain, $25,000: Provided, That the amount of land herein authorized to be purchased and the price paid therefor shall be within the discretion of the Secretary of War"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended as follows: On page 62 of the bill, in line 1, after the word "occurring," insert the following: "by death or resignation"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 70: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum first proposed insert "$100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$50,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 76: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 76, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$35,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 77: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$5,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 93: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"International Waterways Commission: For continuing until December 31, 1912, the work of investigation and report by the International Waterways Commission, authorized by section 4 of the river and harbor act approved June 13, 1902, $10,000: Provided, That report as to the progress of the work be made by the American commissioners to Congress at the beginning of the next session."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 97: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 97, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$45,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 98: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 98, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$437,360"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 102: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$421,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 108: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 108, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,995,660"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For the repair of roof and skylights on the Pension Office Building, $4,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 120: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "To enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to temporarily employ additional clerks as follows: Eight clerks, at the rate of $1,200 per annum each; 8 clerks, at the rate of $1,000 per annum each; 8 copyists, at the rate of $900 per annum each; in all, $21,700, or so much thereof as may be necessary"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 122: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 122, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 124: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 124, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 126: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 1 and 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following ", 1912 and 1913"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 128: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 128, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$700,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 133: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 133, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, and on page 98 of the bill, in lines 18 and 19, strike out the following words: ", the sum hereby appropriated to be"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 134: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 134, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For temporary employment of clerks for the purpose of bringing up arrears of work upon the returns of surveys in the General Land Office: Four clerks, at the rate of $1,200 per annum each; three clerks, at the rate of $1,000 per annum each; two copyists, at the rate of $900 per annum each; four copyists, at the rate of $720 per annum each; in all, $10,920, or so much thereof as may be necessary"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 135: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 135, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed, at the earliest practicable date, to make a survey of the sewer system of the city of Hot Springs, abutting the Hot Springs Reservation, Ark., and to prepare plans and estimate of the cost of increasing the present storm drainage system as well as the present sanitary sewer system of the city of Hot Springs, the report of survey, including estimate of cost of the work, to be submitted to Congress as soon as practicable after the 1st day of December, 1912. The expenses incurred hereunder shall not exceed $10,000; one half of such expenses shall be paid out of the revenues derived from privileges and otherwise on the Hot Springs Reservation, and the other half shall be paid by the city of Hot Springs, Ark."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 144: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 144, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For inquiries and investigations into the mining and treatment of ores and other mineral substances, with special reference to safety and waste, $50,000: Provided, That no part thereof may be used for investigation in behalf of any private party, nor shall any part thereof be used for work authorized or required by law to be done by any other branch of the public service."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 146: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 146, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum last named in said amendment insert "$3,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 148: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 148, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the proposed sum insert "$583,100"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 155: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 155, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "of" in said amendment insert the word "actual"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 157: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 157, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$80,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 158: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 158, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 159: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 159, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 161: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 161, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$75,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 163: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 163, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 172: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 172, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$92,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 178: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 178, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the words "one year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 179: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 179, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 6 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "prevent," insert the words "or authorize"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 182: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 182, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "including not to exceed $10,000 for necessary employees at the seat of government"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 216: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 216, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$193,120"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 228: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 228, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$335,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 232: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 232, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$90,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 236: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 236, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,525,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 238: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 238, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$15,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 239: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 239, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$30,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 246: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 246, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Joint Committee on Printing, as provided for in an act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents, approved January 12, 1895, and acts amendatory thereof: Clerk, $3,000, to be paid by the Secretary of the Senate"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 255: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 255, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$132,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 256: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 256, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,252,880"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 257: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 257, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,949,900"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 258: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 258, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$145,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 260: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 260, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$290,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 273: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 273, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$500,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 276: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 276, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$28,980,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 288: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 288, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 10. That section 8 of the District of Columbia appropriation act, approved June 26, 1912, shall not take effect or be operative during the fiscal year 1913 except to the extent that it prohibits the payment of membership fees or dues in societies or associations: Provided, That during the fiscal year 1913 expenses of attendance of officers or employees of the Government at any meeting or convention of members of any society or association shall be incurred only on the written authority and direction of the heads of executive departments or other Government establishments or the government of the District of Columbia; and a detailed statement of all such expenses incurred from June 30 until December 1, 1912, shall be submitted to Congress on or before January 1, 1913."

And the Senate agree to the same.

F. E. WARREN,
GEO. C. PERKINS,
C. A. CULBERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
SWAGAR SHERLEY,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

STATEMENT.

Amount of bill as passed House	$109,567,974.40
Reduction by Senate	75.00
Total	109,567,899.40
Added by Senate	6,754,830.80
As passed by Senate	116,322,730.20
Restored by conference	75.00
Total	116,322,805.20
Reduction in conference	4,283,620.80
Total of bill as agreed on	112,039,184.40
Added by Senate	6,754,830.80
Senate recessions	4,283,620.80
House recessions	2,471,210.00

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. While we are waiting, I ask that the Senate resume the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, upon which we were about to vote this morning.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 26371) making appropriation for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Georgia a moment I wish to say that I am not able to get in communication with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, but I will take the responsibility of asking that the conference report on the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 25531) go over, at the same time asking unanimous consent that it may come up and be disposed of the first thing in the morning after the Journal has been read.

Mr. BACON. I have no objection to any time being fixed for the conference report to be considered. The only reason I want it to go over is that I am really weary and the heat is very intense. I do not wish it to be understood that I expect to make any very elaborate speech upon it, and I am very sorry that I have to say anything at all, but I am desirous that my reasons against this measure shall be presented. If it is enacted into law, I intend to devote some future efforts to its repeal, and I want to have it known now why I am opposed to it. I am not opposed to it simply for the present, but I expect to continue so, and if I can in the future get it off the statute books I shall certainly do so. I say that in order that it may not be understood that I propose to make any very long or any very elaborate speech, for I do not so intend; but it is really very inconvenient, after a long and weary day, to be compelled to go on at this time of the evening.

Mr. WARREN. I think we could agree to take up the conference report on the Army appropriation bill the first thing in the morning after the reading of the Journal and the routine morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that after the reading of the Journal the Senate will proceed to the further consideration of the conference report on the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I have no desire to object to that request, but the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill has finally been agreed upon all around, and is satisfactory to everyone. It is on the table. Of course it can not pass the House until it passes here, and if we could take that up this evening before we leave and close it up, I think it would be very well to do so.

Mr. WARREN. I will be glad to yield to the Senator for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Wyoming that——

Mr. BACON. I was going to say that it seems to me, in view of the progress we are making, there will be no trouble in the next two days in disposing of these matters about which there has been a general agreement.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, under the rules of the other House, after a conference report is agreed to here, it goes over to that body, and it must lie over a day and be printed. So, of course, if the report leads to any debate here, it will make it very late at this stage of the session in being disposed of. I think the Senator from Minnesota is right in wanting to take care to-night of the matter to which he has referred. I hope I may have unanimous consent for what I have asked.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL (S. DOC. NO. 938).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill, which will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the conference report, which is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 5, 6, 12, 13, 16, 18, 27, 34, 35, 38, 39, 42, 43, 50, 52, 59, 63, 64, 65, 70, 72, 76, 77, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 95, 99, 108, 109, 115, 125, 127, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 152, 153, and 154.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 9, 14, 15, 17, 24, 30, 31, 33, 40, 44, 45, 46, 47, 51, 53, 54, 55, 58, 62, 66, 74, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 84, 85, 97, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 124, 128, 136, 144, 145, 148, 149, 151, and 155, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "two hundred and fifty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "three hundred and twenty-five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "thirty-five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "ninety"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "four hundred and twenty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "four hundred and eighty." After the word "dollars," in line 11, page 5, insert the following: ": Provided, That out of the above amount the following expenditures shall be made, to wit: Thirty thousand dollars for the construction of buildings for agency headquarters on the Coeur d'Alene Reservation in Idaho; $10,000 for general repairs and improvements at the Yankton Agency in South Dakota; $15,000 for improvements at the Fort Bidwell School in California, as follows: Seven thousand dollars for the erection and construction of a water and electric-light system, $3,000 for sewerage system, $3,000 for a steam laundry, and $2,000 for complete heating system of the school and accessory buildings"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8 of the proposed amendment, after the word "to," strike out the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifteen"; in line 8 of the proposed amendment, after the word "and," strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "nine"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "twenty-eight"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "four"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "twenty-two"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "fifteen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For the development of a water supply for domestic and stock purposes and for irrigation for nomadic Papago Indians in Pima County, Ariz., $5,000.

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to make an investigation of the conditions on the Papago Indian Reservation in Arizona with a view to determining the possibility of enlarging the irrigation system for the protection and irrigation of the Indian lands and the development of a water supply for domestic and stock purposes, $5,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made together with an estimated limit of cost of said project and shall submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to make an investigation of the conditions on the White Mountain or San Carlos Indian Reservation in Arizona, with respect to the necessity of constructing, for the use of the Indians, suitable bridges across the San Carlos Creek and the Gila River, in the vicinity of San Carlos, on said reservation, $1,000, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made, together with an estimated limit of cost of construction of said bridges, at such sites as he may select, and submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to make an investigation of conditions on the Yuma Reservation, in California, with respect to the necessity of constructing, for the use of the Indians, a bridge across the Colorado River between Fort Yuma, Cal., and the town of Yuma, Ariz., $1,000, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause plans, surveys, and reports to be made, together with an estimated limit of cost of said bridge, and to submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 32: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the Senate amendment, after the word "Reservation," strike out the word "thirty-three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$52,362.62"; on page 11 of the bill, in line 13, strike out the first two words of said line, to wit, "and third"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the proposed amendment, after the word "Indians," insert the words "in full settlement"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "one hundred and thirty-eight"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the proposed amendment, after the word "appropriated," strike out the word "for" and insert in lieu thereof the words "to complete"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "twenty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the amendment, after the word "of," strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "Congress" in line 12 of the proposed amendment, strike out the colon and insert in lieu thereof a period; strike out the remainder of said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 61: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$66,600"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "sixty-six"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 68: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "fifty-eight"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 71: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the amendment, after the word "attorney," strike out the word "four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "thirty thousand"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 75: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$38,000"; in line 10, page 20, of the bill, strike out the words "hundred and fifty dollars"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 83: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "twenty-six thousand five hundred"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 93: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "for erection of silo and purchase of ensilage cutter and other farm machinery, $2,000; for purchase of milch cows and other live stock and poultry, $2,000; for erection and completion of hospital building and equipment of same $12,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "forty-six thousand"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 93: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed and insert "$7,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 94: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 94, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$90,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 96: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 96, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to extend for a period of one year the time for the payment of any annual installment due or hereafter to become due on the purchase price for lands sold under the act of Congress approved June 17, 1910, entitled 'An act to open to settlement and entry under the general provisions of the homestead laws of the United States certain lands in the State of Oklahoma, and for other purposes,' and upon the payment of interest for one year in advance, at 5 per cent per annum upon the amount due, such payment will be extended for a period of one year, and any payment so extended may annually thereafter be extended for a period of one year in the same manner: Provided, That the last payment and all other payments must be made within a period not exceeding one year after the last payment becomes due by the terms of the act under which the entry was made; that all moneys paid for interest as herein provided shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians as a part of the proceeds received for the lands: Provided further, That failure to make any payment that may be due, unless the same be extended, or to make any extended payments at or before the time to which such payment has been extended as herein provided, will forfeit the entry and the same shall be canceled, and any and all payments theretofore made shall be forfeited: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall affect any valid adverse claim initiated prior to the passage of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 98: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 98, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the amendment, after the word "employees," strike out the words "one hundred and seventy-four" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two hundred"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 100: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "sale," at the end of said amendment, insert the following: ": Provided, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, no moneys shall be expended from the tribal funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes without specific appropriation by Congress, except as follows: Equalization of allotments, per capita and other payments authorized by law to individual members of the respective tribes, tribal and other Indian schools for the current fiscal year under existing law, salaries and contingent expenses of governors, chiefs, assistant chiefs, secretaries, interpreters, and mining trustees of the tribes for the current fiscal year, and attorneys for said tribes employed under contract approved by the President, under existing law, for the current fiscal year: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to continue the tribal schools of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations for the current fiscal year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 101: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 101, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For expenses incident to and in connection with collection of rents of unallotted lands and tribal buildings, such amount as may be necessary: Provided, That such expenditures shall not exceed in the aggregate 10 per cent of the amount collected."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 102: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to make the appraisement and sale hereinafter provided, $5,000: Provided, That the houses and other valuable improvements, not including fencing and tillage, placed upon the segregated coal and asphalt lands in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, in Oklahoma, by private individuals while in actual possession of said land and prior to February 19, 1912, and not purchased by the Indian nations, shall be appraised independently of the surface of the land on which they are located and shall be sold with the land at public auction at not less than the combined appraised value of the improvements and the surface of the land upon which they are located. Said improvements shall be sold for cash and the appraisement and sale of the same shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and 95 per cent of the amount realized from the sale of the improvements shall be paid over, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to the owner of the improvements, and the appropriation hereinbefore made for this purpose shall be reimbursed out of the 5 per cent retained from the sale of the said improvements: Provided, That any improvements remaining unsold at the expiration of two years from the time when first offered for sale shall be sold under such regulations and terms of sale, independent of their appraised value, as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided further, That persons owning improvements so appraised may remove the same at any time prior to the sale thereof, in which event the appraised value of the improvements and land shall be reduced by deducting the appraised value of the improvements so removed: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to improvements placed on said lands by coal and asphalt lessees for mining purposes, but improvements located on lands leased for mining purposes belonging to, or heretofore paid for by, the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations shall be appraised and the appraised value thereof shall be added to the appraised value of the land at the time of the sale: Provided further, That where any cemetery now exists on the said segregated coal and asphalt lands, the surface of the land within said cemetery, together with the land adjoining the same, where necessary, not exceeding 20 acres in the aggregate to any one cemetery, and where a church was in existence on said lands on February 19, 1912, land not exceeding 1 acre for each church may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be sold to the proper party, association, or corporation under such terms, conditions, and regulations as he may prescribe, provided application to purchase the same for such purpose is made within 60 days from the date of the approval of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "resold," in line 7 of the proposed amendment, strike out the colon and insert in lieu thereof a period, and strike out the remainder of the amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 104: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 104, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment insert the following: ", to June 30, 1913"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 105: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 105, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For the construction of a sanitary sewer system in Platt National Park, Okla., to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $17,500: Provided, That the said sum shall be available whenever a like amount is appropriated and made available by the town of Sulphur, Okla., for the same purpose: Provided further, That whenever said appropriation is made by the town of Sulphur, Okla., the entire amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the total appropriation made by this act and the town of Sulphur, Okla., shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 106: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 13 of the proposed amendment, after the word "family," strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That before such payment shall be made, the heirs or legal representatives of said John W. Noble and R. V. Belt shall sign a receipt in full for all claims for the services above specified and file the said receipt with the Secretary of the Interior"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 107: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 107, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "Huff," in line 18 of the proposed amendment, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a colon and the following: Provided, That before such payments shall be made in full, said Albert J. Lee shall sign a receipt in full for all claims for services as herein specified and file the same with the Secretary of the Interior"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "thirteen," at the end of said amendment, insert the following: ": Provided, That this appropriation shall not be subject to the limitation in section 1 of this act, limiting the expenditure of money to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay for the relief of the Kickapoo Indians in Mexico the sum of $15,000 to be expended in the payment of taxes, salary of farmers, maintenance and repairs of irrigation ditches, indebtedness for supplies already furnished, court costs and obligations heretofore incurred in settlement of land titles, said sum to be paid to the treasurer of a corporation to be known as the Kickapoo Community of Mexico, to be organized under the laws of the State of Arizona, the organization of said corporation shall be authorized by a majority of the members of the Mexican Kickapoo Indians now residing in the State of Sonora in the Republic of Mexico, in council assembled."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 112: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be sent to the First National Bank of Douglas, Ariz., checks payable to the order of the individual Indian owners who are members of the band of Mexican Kickapoo Indians now resident in the Republic of Mexico, for and in the amount of all moneys known as lease money now on deposit with or in any manner under the control of the agents and officers of the Interior Department and all like money due or becoming due or collectible by them prior to the 1st day of January, 1914, and belonging to any of the said Mexican Kickapoo Indians."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 113: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 7 and 8 of the proposed amendment, after the word "than," strike out the words "February 1, 1913," and insert in lieu thereof the words "December 1, 1912"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 114: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For the relief and settlement of the Apache Indians now confined as prisoners of war at Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., on lands to be selected for them by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War, $200,000, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War may prescribe."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 122: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 122, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "eleven"; in line 20, page 28, after the first word "dollars," insert ": Provided, That $4,000 of this amount shall be used in the construction and maintenance of an irrigation system for the use of said school"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 123: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 123, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "forty-three"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 126: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "sixty-two thousand five hundred"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 129: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 129, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend the unexpended balance, which is hereby reappropriated, of the appropriation of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, appropriated by the act approved March 3, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 1074), 'for the purpose of constructing a bridge across the Duchesne River at or near the town of Theodore, Utah,' for the purpose of straightening the said Duchesne River at or near said bridge, with a view to protecting said bridge."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 130: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 130, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For cash payment to the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, or for expenditure for their benefit, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000, said amount to be reimbursed out of the appropriation, when made, to cover the net amount of the judgment rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of said Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, dated February 13, 1911."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 137: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the conditions on the Yakima Indian Reservation in the State of Washington with a view to determine the best, most practicable, and most feasible plan for providing water for such lands of said reservation as may be irrigated and to cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made thereon, together with an estimated limit of cost of such irrigation project and to submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912, together with such facts and reasons in support of the same as may be necessary to advise Congress fully in regard thereto."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 143: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 143, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 146: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 146, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "eighteen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 147: That the House recede from its disagreement of the amendment of the Senate numbered 147, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$57,170"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 150: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 150, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment, after the word "Wisconsin," strike out the word "nine" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seven"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 156: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 156, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "thirty-five thousand and twenty-five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 157: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 157, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For continuing the work of road and bridge construction on the Shoshone Reservation, Wyo., $10,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905: Provided, That this amount shall be expended, as far as practicable, in the employment of Indian labor."

And the Senate agree to the same.

MOSES E. CLAPP,
CHARLES CURTIS,
GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JNO. H. STEPHENS,
C. D. CARTER,
CHAS. H. BURKE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I would suggest that the report was read in the Senate the other day. There were only two items which were the subject of discussion, both of which have now been satisfactorily adjusted, and, unless the Senate cares to have the entire report again read, I suggest that the further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks that the further reading of the report be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 7 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, August 23, 1912, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate August 22, 1912.

PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

INFANTRY ARM.

Maj. Wendell L. Simpson, Fifteenth Infantry, to be lieutenant colonel from August 16, 1912, vice Lieut. Col. Fielder M. M.

Beall, Twenty-eighth Infantry, retired from active service August 15, 1912.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy from the 7th day of June, 1912, upon the completion of three years' service as ensigns (subject to the examinations required by law):

George Joerns,
Cortlandt C. Baughman,
William T. Mallison,
Herbert A. Jones,
Chauncey E. Pugh, and
Herman E. Welte.

Ensign Jere H. Brooks to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy from the 7th day of June, 1912, upon the completion of service as an ensign of three years plus service during suspension from promotion after failure at examination (subject to the examinations required by law).

Asst. Surg. David G. Allen to be a passed assistant surgeon in the Navy from the 3d day of October, 1911, upon the completion of service as an assistant surgeon of three years plus service during suspension from promotion after failure at examination, and to correct the date from which he takes rank as previously confirmed (subject to the examinations required by law).

The following-named assistant surgeons to be passed assistant surgeons in the Navy from the 14th day of April, 1912, upon the completion of three years' service as assistant surgeons (subject to the examinations required by law):

John G. Ziegler and
William M. Kerr.

The following-named assistant naval constructors to be naval constructors in the Navy from the 21st day of October, 1912, upon the completion of eight years' service as assistant naval constructors (subject to the examinations required by law):

Isaac I. Yates,
George C. Westervelt,
Charles W. Fisher, jr.,
Holden C. Richardson,
John H. Walsh,
Edward C. Hamner, jr., and
Emory S Land.

Gunner William H. Dayton to be a chief gunner in the Navy from the 22d day of March, 1912, upon the completion of six years' service as a gunner (subject to the examinations required by law).

The following-named commanders to be captains in the Navy from the 1st day of July, 1912, to fill vacancies (subject to the examinations required by law):

George W. Kline,
Harrison A. Bispham, and
Charles M. McCormick.

The following-named lieutenant commanders to be commanders in the Navy from the 1st day of July, 1912, to fill vacancies (subject to the examinations required by law):

Thomas S. Wilson and
Henry A. Pearson.

The following-named lieutenants to be lieutenant commanders in the Navy from the 1st day of July, 1912, to fill vacancies (subject to the examinations required by law):

George W. Steele, jr.,
John W. Timmons,
John G. Church, and
Paul Foley.

Lieut. John T. Bowers to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy from July 28, 1912, to fill a vacancy (subject to the examinations required by law).

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Virgil Baker to be a lieutenant in the Navy from March 4, 1911, to fill a vacancy (subject to the examinations required by law).

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Stuart W. Cake to be a lieutenant in the Navy from May 10, 1912, to fill a vacancy (subject to the examinations required by law).

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants in the Navy from July 1, 1912, to fill vacancies (subject to the examinations required by law):

Charles A. Woodruff,
Francis M. Robinson,
John F. Connor,
George A. Alexander,
James P. Olding,
Charles S. McWhorter,
Sherwoode A. Taffinder, and
Lesley B. Anderson.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Reuben L. Walker to be a lieutenant in the Navy from July 28, 1912, to fill a vacancy (subject to the examinations required by law).

Medical Inspector Philip Leach to be a medical director in the Navy from the 29th day of July, 1912, to fill a vacancy (subject to the examinations required by law).

Medical Inspector Lloyd W. Curtis to be a medical director in the Navy from the 7th day of August, 1912, to fill a vacancy (subject to the examinations required by law).

Surg. Charles F. Stokes to be a medical inspector in the Navy from the 2d day of June, 1911, to fill a vacancy (subject to the examinations required by law).

Surg. Rand P. Crandall to be a medical inspector in the Navy from the 29th day of July, 1912, to fill a vacancy (subject to the examinations required by law).

Surg. George T. Smith to be a medical inspector in the Navy from the 7th day of August, 1912, to fill a vacancy (subject to the examinations required by law).

Passed Asst. Surg. James H. Holloway to be a surgeon in the Navy from the 20th day of July, 1912, to fill a vacancy (subject to the examinations required by law).

Passed Asst. Surg. John L. Neilson to be a surgeon in the Navy from the 29th day of July, 1912, to fill a vacancy (subject to the examinations required by law).

Passed Asst. Surg. Frederick W. S. Dean to be a surgeon in the Navy from the 7th day of August, 1912, to fill a vacancy (subject to the examinations required by law).

Passed Asst. Paymaster Noel W. Grant to be a paymaster in the Navy from the 8th day of December, 1911, to fill a vacancy (subject to the examinations required by law).

CONSULS.

Charles Forman, of Louisiana, to be consul of the United States of America at Turks Island, West Indies, vice Joseph A. Howells, resigned.

George M. Hanson, of Utah, to be consul of the United States of America at Hobart, Tasmania, vice Henry D. Baker, nominated to be consul at Nassau.

Perry C. Hays, of Montana, to be consul of the United States of America at Zanzibar, Zanzibar, vice Alexander W. Weddell, nominated to be consul at Catania.

Frank Anderson Henry, of Delaware, to be consul of the United States of America at Guadeloupe, West Indies, vice Frederick T. F. Dumont, nominated to be consul at Madrid.

Walter A. Leonard, of Illinois, to be consul of the United States of America at Stavanger, Norway, vice P. Emerson Taylor, nominated to be consul at Trinidad.

David J. D. Myers, of Georgia, to be consul of the United States of America at Puerto Cortes, Honduras, vice Claude I. Dawson, nominated to be consul at Valencia.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Lewis R. Barrett, of New Jersey, to be collector of customs for the district of Great Egg Harbor, in the State of New Jersey, in place of Walter Fifield, resigned.

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE MINT.

Frank A. Leach, of California, to be superintendent of the mint of the United States at San Francisco, Cal., in place of Edward Sweeny, deceased.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

Shipwith Coale to be postmaster at Jackson, Ala., in place of Clyde P. Loranz. Incumbent's commission expired December 11, 1911.

ILLINOIS.

W. H. Alexander to be postmaster at Pana, Ill., in place of Alexander H. McTaggart. Incumbent's commission expired February 20, 1909.

William S. Chittenden to be postmaster at Park Ridge, Ill., in place of William S. Chittenden. Incumbent's commission expired December 11, 1911.

Mary E. Sullivan to be postmaster at Riverside, Ill., in place of Cornelius Sullivan, deceased.

Dominick Turigliatti to be postmaster at Toluca, Ill., in place of Charles A. Brown. Incumbent's commission expired April 22, 1912.

MINNESOTA.

Paul H. Tvedt to be postmaster at Nashwauk, Minn., in place of Paul H. Tvedt. Incumbent's commission expired March 31, 1912.

NEW JERSEY.

William C. Howell to be postmaster at Blairstown, N. J., in place of William C. Howell. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1912.

OHIO.

Frederick Greenwood to be postmaster at Minerva, Ohio, in place of George F. McDonald. Incumbent's commission expired May 26, 1912.

OKLAHOMA.

Charles D. Campbell to be postmaster at Apache, Okla., in place of Charles D. Campbell. Incumbent's commission expired March 20, 1912.

A. D. Dailey to be postmaster at Edmond, Okla., in place of Elta H. Jayne. Incumbent's commission expired May 23, 1912.

Presley H. Gallion to be postmaster at Arapaho, Okla., in place of Cyrus Howenstine. Incumbent's commission expired April 28, 1912.

PENNSYLVANIA.

James E. Rupert to be postmaster at Conneautville, Pa., in place of James E. Rupert. Incumbent's commission expired April 28, 1912.

TEXAS.

John J. Bartlett to be postmaster at Hughes Springs, Tex., in place of John J. Bartlett. Incumbent's commission expired April 28, 1912.

Belle W. Bridges to be postmaster at Mason, Tex., in place of Belle W. Bridges. Incumbent's commission expired December 12, 1909.

John L. Burke to be postmaster at Elgin, Tex., in place of John L. Burke. Incumbent's commission expired May 15, 1912.

David Doole, jr., to be postmaster at Brady, Tex., in place of David Doole, jr. Incumbent's commission expired April 2, 1912.

John M. Hill to be postmaster at Cooledge, Tex., in place of John M. Hill. Incumbent's commission expired April 22, 1912.

Louis Elmer Hill to be postmaster at Alvarado, Tex., in place of Louis Elmer Hill. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1911.

Leland S. Howard to be postmaster at Roscoe, Tex., in place of Leland S. Howard. Incumbent's commission expired April 28, 1912.

Oscar Hunt to be postmaster at Canyon, Tex., in place of Oscar Hunt. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1911.

Anna J. Roach to be postmaster at Atlanta, Tex., in place of Anna J. Roach. Incumbent's commission expired December 12, 1909.

John G. Ross to be postmaster at Garrison, Tex., in place of John G. Ross. Incumbent's commission expired April 28, 1912.

Nicholas D. Smith to be postmaster at Dublin, Tex., in place of Nicholas D. Smith. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1911.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate August 22, 1912.

SECRETARIES OF EMBASSIES.

Hoffman Philip to be secretary of the embassy at Constantinople, Turkey.

Alexander Benson to be second secretary of the embassy at Rome, Italy.

Franklin Mott Gunther to be second secretary of the embassy at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

Frederick A. Sterling to be second secretary of the embassy at St. Petersburg, Russia.

Frank D. Arnold to be third secretary of the embassy at Tokyo, Japan.

Fairman R. Furness to be third secretary of the embassy at St. Petersburg, Russia.

Hallett Johnson to be third secretary of the embassy at London, England.

Henry F. Tennant to be third secretary of the embassy at Mexico, Mexico.

SECRETARIES OF LEGATIONS.

William W. Andrews to be secretary of the legation at Lisbon, Portugal.

Harry E. Nolan to be secretary of the legation at Panama, Panama.

SECRETARIES OF LEGATIONS AND CONSULS GENERAL.

Sheldon L. Crosby to be secretary of the legation and consul general at Bangkok, Siam.

Ralph B. Strassburger to be secretary of the legation and consul general to Roumania, Servia, and Bulgaria.

Craig W. Wadsworth to be secretary of the legation and consul general at Teheran, Persia.

CONSULS GENERAL.

Fleming D. Cheshire to be consul general at Canton, China.

Edwin S. Cunningham to be consul general at Singapore, Straits Settlements.

Heaton W. Harris to be consul general at Frankfort on the Main, Germany.

Charles A. Holder to be consul general at Christiania, Norway.

Will L. Lowrie to be consul general at Lisbon, Portugal.

CONSUL GENERAL AT LARGE.

James E. Dunning to be consul general at large.

CONSULS.

Leo Allen Bergholz to be consul at Kingston, Jamaica.
Frederic W. Cauldwell to be consul at Tapachula, Mexico.
Arthur Garrels to be consul at Alexandria, Egypt.
Edward J. Norton to be consul at Bombay, India.
Julian Potter to be consul at Rouen, France.
Alexander W. Weddell to be consul at Catania, Italy.
Charles L. Hoover to be consul at Carlsbad, Austria.
Henry D. Baker to be consul at Nassau, New Providence, Bahamas.
David R. Birch to be consul at Bahia, Brazil.
Frederick T. F. Dumont to be consul at Madrid, Spain.
Claude I. Dawson to be consul at Valencia, Spain.
Charles N. Daniels to be consul at Sherbrooke, Quebec, Canada.
W. Roderick Dorsey to be consul at Jerez de la Frontera, Spain.
Robert Frazer, jr., to be consul at Malaga, Spain.
Franklin D. Hale to be consul at Huddersfield, England.
Albert H. Michelson to be consul at Hanover, Germany.
John Ball Osborne to be consul at Havre, France.
Charles B. Perry to be consul at Turin, Italy.
Nicholas R. Snyder to be consul at Leipzig, Germany.
P. Emerson Taylor to be consul at Trinidad, West Indies.
Robert J. Thompson to be consul at Sheffield, England.
Southard P. Warner to be consul at Harbin, China.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Lewis R. Barrett to be collector of customs for the district of Great Egg Harbor, N. J.

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE MINT.

Frank A. Leach to be superintendent of the mint at San Francisco, Cal.

APPRAISER OF MERCHANDISE.

Frederick A. Higgins to be appraiser of merchandise in the district of New York.

DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF CORPORATIONS.

Francis Walker to be Deputy Commissioner of Corporations in the Department of Commerce and Labor.

SURVEYORS OF CUSTOMS.

Charles B. Quinn to be surveyor of customs for the port of Memphis, Tenn.

Charles L. Peacock to be surveyor of customs for the port of Chattanooga, Tenn.

POSTMASTERS.

ILLINOIS.

W. H. Alexander, Pana.
William S. Chittenden, Park Ridge.
Mary E. Sullivan, Riverside.
Dominick Turigliatti, Toluca.
William H. Whitehouse, Mount Olive.

KANSAS.

Theodore Iten, jr., Ellinwood.
Harvey J. Penney, Hays.

NEW JERSEY.

Judson W. Parker, Verona.

OHIO.

M. G. Bell, Bellefontaine.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

O. G. Oyloe, Brookings.

TENNESSEE.

Samuel F. Carroll, Lenoir City.

VIRGINIA.

Beverly A. Davis, Rockymount.

WITHDRAWAL.

Executive nomination withdrawn August 22, 1912.

POSTMASTER.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

John R. Tolbert, jr., Abbeville.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, August 22, 1912.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, help us to praise and magnify Thy holy name by the purity of our thought, the wisdom of our speech, the nobility of our acts, that we may be one with Thee. "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together." Thus may we be indeed followers of Him who spake as never man spake, the paragon of perfection, who died like a God and opened the gates of heaven to every living soul. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Pensions to call up the conference reports on Senate bills 6384 and 6851 and move their adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 6384. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1224).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6384) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers or sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 2.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, and agree to the same.

DAN. A. DRISCOLL,
IRA W. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.
P. J. MCCUMBER,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

Amendment No. 1, the case of Rebecca Strouther (S. 799): This is a case where the Senate proposes to grant a pension to the beneficiary as the dependent mother of a soldier who was stabbed by a comrade. The item was stricken from the bill by the House on the grounds that injury was not received while in line of duty. In the opinion of your conferees, the soldier, being in his bunk when he was stabbed, was in line of duty, and hence it is recommended that the House recede from its amendment striking that item from the bill.

Amendment No. 2, the case of Maggie Boutiette (S. 2850): The beneficiary is the widow of a scout and guide in the Indian uprisings. The House struck the item from the bill on the grounds that soldier's death was not due to service. The soldier's service was recognized by act of Congress, and the Senate passed this item upon the grounds that as Congress had recognized the service of the soldier that recognition should not be withheld from the widow. The House recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 3, Mary Meade Sands (S. 5655): The House struck this item from the bill on the grounds that the widow has some $15,000 worth of property, producing her an income in addition to her pension of $30 per month, and that a showing of dependency is not made. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House.

DAN. A. DRISCOLL.
IRA W. WOOD.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 6851. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1223).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6851) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1, 6, 7, 8, and 10.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, and 9, and agree to the same.

DAN. A. DRISCOLL,
IRA W. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.
P. J. MCCUMBER,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

Amendment No. 1, the case of John A. Connolly (S. 347): The House struck the item from the bill on the grounds that soldier's disability is not shown to be due to service. But in view of the fact that soldier did incur malarial poisoning in the service, which is a progressive disease, it is possible that his condition is now due to that disability. The House recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 2, the case of Benjamin A. Yates (S. 757): The soldier is now pensioned at $8 per month. The Senate passed the bill at $12 per month. The soldier has not applied for pension for a number of years and is suffering from a progressive disease. According to the rules of both committees he should exhaust all rights at the bureau, hence the House struck the item from the bill, and the Senate recedes from its disagreement to that amendment.

Amendment No. 3, the case of James Tompach (S. 1481): The House struck this item from the bill on the grounds that the soldier is suffering from a progressive disease and has not made application at the bureau for a number of years. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to that amendment.

Amendment No. 4, Albert W. Kelley (S. 2557): The House struck this item from the bill on the grounds that the soldier's disability is not due to service and on the further grounds that bills for the relief of this soldier in the Sixtieth and Sixty-first Congresses were adversely acted upon by that body. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment.

Amendment No. 5, Andrew L. Weatherford (S. 2616): The House struck this item from the bill on the grounds that claimant has not exhausted all rights at the bureau, not having had his claim there rejected. If his disability has increased he should get relief at the bureau. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to this amendment.

Amendment No. 6, Roscoe C. Tartar (S. 3188): The House struck this item from the bill on the grounds that soldier's condition is not due to service. The soldier did incur disability in the service and is in bad physical condition. The House recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 7, the case of Otto Paulson (S. 3589): The House struck this item from the bill on the grounds that evidence of incurrence of disability in the service is not satisfactory. Evidence of the Member who introduced the bill is that the soldier was a strong, healthy young man when he entered the service, and that upon his return home has not been able to hold any position on account of ill health. The House recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 8, Tivis C. Simmons (S. 3715): The House struck this item from the bill on the grounds that the evidence was not conclusive as to disability, except malaria, being of service origin. A further examination of the evidence leads them to believe that rheumatism, resulting from malarial poisoning, brought on soldier's present condition, and the House recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 9, Emily J. Chambers (S. 6117): The House struck this item from the bill on the grounds that the soldier had not served full time in the Indian wars, and the widow did not marry him until some 25 years after service was performed. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to this amendment.

Amendment No. 10, John Mooney (S. 6309): The House struck this item from the bill on the grounds that the evidence was not conclusive as to disability being due to service. A further examination of the testimony shows that 11 neighbors testified that soldier was in good health prior to enlistment, but since his return has been in poor health, whereas two neighbors testify that some years before his enlistment the soldier had an attack of rheumatism. The preponderance of evidence being in favor of the soldier, the House recedes from its amendment.

DAN. A. DRISCOLL,
IRA W. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 25713 and to move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25713) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The Senate amendment was read.

The question was taken, and the Senate amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 23112. An act to extend the limits of the port of entry of New Orleans, La.; and

H. R. 25282. An act to authorize the Union Pacific Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 957. An act relating to bills of lading.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 21094. An act to create a Commission on Industrial Relations;

H. R. 25282. An act to authorize the Union Pacific Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River; and

H. R. 23112. An act to extend the limits of the port of entry of New Orleans, La.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 957. An act relating to bills of lading; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

DAM ACROSS COOSA RIVER, ALA.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I am authorized by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to call up the bill S. 7343.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will read the authorization.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have here, Mr. Speaker, the action of the committee that there was a quorum present, signed by the chairman and the clerk.

The SPEAKER. Are those the minutes of the committee?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. First, the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 7343. An act to authorize the building of a dam across the Coosa River, Ala., at a place suitable to the interest of navigation about 7½ miles above the city of Wetumpka.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state——

The SPEAKER. First, the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Alabama Power Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Alabama, its successors and assigns, are authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across Coosa River, in the State of Alabama, at a place suitable to the interest of navigation about 7½ miles above the city of Wetumpka, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved June 23, 1910, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters,' approved June 21, 1906."

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make the point that there is no quorum present. I want these speeches to be heard by a quorum present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. A quorum will be here shortly. I ask the gentleman not to do that.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will withdraw it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of gentlemen who desire to oppose this bill, if there are any, if they would like to have some time.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the gentleman from Alabama I am not opposed to the bill, providing we put certain amendments on it.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not think we can agree on the amendments.

Mr. FOSTER. No; but I think we would like to have a little time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] if agreeable, that they offer their amendments now and have them pending, and agree on a time for debate. How would an hour and a half do, equally divided between the two sides?

Mr. FOSTER. That would be all right.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama, then, that he ask unanimous consent that the——

Mr. MANN. Make it two hours.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Make it two hours, and that amendments may be offered now, so that everybody may understand them and have them pending.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we may have two hours for debate, one hour to be controlled by myself and one hour by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], in which to discuss this matter, and that amendments be introduced and pending so that they may be discussed.

The SPEAKER. That would not cut off anybody from offering amendments at the end.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the purpose of the gentleman is to have the previous question operate at the end of the two hours to cut off amendments?

Mr. HEFLIN. At the end of two hours.

Mr. MANN. If my colleague offers amendments such as were proposed the other day, I think I would like to offer some amendments to the amendments.

Mr. HEFLIN. We can have them all pending, and the previous question ordered at the end of two hours.

Mr. MANN. Suppose at the end of two hours we have opportunity to offer amendments, and at the end of two hours——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think it will be all right if the gentlemen will offer their amendments as soon as they possibly can.

The SPEAKER. Let us see if we can get this right. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] asks unanimous consent that the debate on this bill shall continue for two hours, one half of the time to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER]; and that during the two hours anybody can offer an amendment and have it pending, and at the end of two hours the previous question shall be ordered on the bill and amendments to its final passage. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. That is, the vote would be taken on the amendment at the end of two hours?

The SPEAKER. Yes; of course. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have really no objection if I may have some of the time to oppose the bill in its present form.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] that I shall be glad to accommodate him.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Five minutes will be sufficient.

Mr. FOSTER. All right.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for one hour.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to consume only about five minutes in opening the debate.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the election contest of McLean against Bowman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the election contest of McLean against Bowman.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I can not yield any time now.

Mr. GARRETT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Elections is not present. I remember from the RECORD that there was some reason interjected the other day, and for the present I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects, and the gentleman from Alabama is recognized for an hour.

DAM ACROSS COOSA RIVER IN ALABAMA.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill conforms to the general dam act. Quite a number of permits have been granted by the General Government to dam navigable streams under the very same provision that we now seek to invoke in building a dam across the Coosa River. The bill which I call up for consideration at this time is a bill that has been unanimously reported by the Senate committee and almost unanimously passed by the Senate. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of this House has authorized me to bring it up for consideration here. It is very important that this bill pass at this session of Congress. It is an exact copy of my bill now on the calendar.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I would like to ask this question. I have an amendment which I propose to offer. Would the gentleman like me to offer it now?

Mr. HEFLIN. Just send it up and have it pending, and not to be taken out of my time, however.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It will not take any time away from the gentleman.

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, I will take but five minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] will yield to you out of his time.

It is very important that this bill be passed at this session of Congress. The capital for building this dam by the Alabama Power Co. at Lock 18 on the Coosa River has been arranged for, and I desire to state to the House at the outset that they will contribute more to the construction of this dam in the Coosa River—more toward making that river navigable—than the General Government has contributed in 22 years.

There is nothing mysterious about this desire to dam the Coosa River. It is a splendid power site, and will be, when developed, useful to our people. Some of these gentlemen who imagine that they are conservationists are standing in the way of industrial development, and they are hampering the work of navigation.

Congress has already granted a permit to build a dam at Lock 12 on the Coosa project. It did so four or five years ago. That dam is under construction. The capital required to build that dam was obtained upon the terms of that act, passed under the provisions of the general dam act. Now, if gentlemen would hamstring this measure to build a dam at Lock 18, they will have made a distinction between Lock 12 and Lock 18. They did not hamper our people in getting capital under the Lock 12 provision, but they do hamper us in getting capital under Lock 18 if their amendments should be adopted.

The capital, I will state, that was secured from English capitalists and Canadian capitalists, together with some furnished by gentlemen in my own State, was secured under the provisions of the general dam act passed years ago. It was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. The Federal Government reserves the right and the power to change, alter, or repeal at any time acts passed under its provisions. I ask these gentlemen who pretend to want to encourage industry and enterprise, why hamper us now in the effort to dam the Coosa at Lock 18 by unauthorized Federal restrictions? These gentlemen have a mistaken idea about what conservation is. Oh, conservation, many an ignorant blunder is committed in thy name. Some of these gentleman do not know anything more about conservation than the schoolboy did about the human anatomy. The teacher called upon him to write an essay on the human anatomy. The great, big, gawky boy, 17 years old, reported in a few days, and this is what he wrote:

> The human anatomy is divided into three parts, the head, the "chist," and the stomach. The head contains the brains, if there is any. The stomach contains the liver and the lights, and the chist, it holds the bowels. There are five bowels—a, e, i, o, u, and sometimes w and y.

[Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to say anything more at this time. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

Mr. SPARKMAN. Before that, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HEFLIN. I have yielded to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I just wanted to ask a question or two of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Very well.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Has this improvement that is proposed to be made there received the approval of the Chief of Engineers?

Mr. HEFLIN. It has.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Could the gentleman give us any idea of the extent of the navigable features that this improvement will add to that stream?

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, I do not know just how much of the river will be made navigable, but the Alabama Power Co. will spend $1,600,000 in the construction of this dam, and that is more than the Federal Government has appropriated for navigable purposes on that river in 22 years.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I did not know but that the gentleman could give me particular information on that point.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I have several times stated to the House the position of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce as to granting the consent of Congress for private owners, on their own land, to construct, at their own expense, dams for the development of water power in navigable rivers. I have deprecated the unfair conduct of obstructionists under the false, misleading, and fraudulent name of "conservationists," unjustly assumed, in objecting to consideration by which only debate on specific propositions could be had and amendments proposed and voted on. Those gentlemen have preferred to hide behind the bulwark of objecting to consideration and then indulge in what they call general debate, which consists in railing at particular individuals, misrepresenting the attitude of the committee, and deluging the country with gush, poppycock, and innuendo, which, boiled down, means unconstitutional centralization as imperialistic and autocratic as that of Xerxes or Ptolemy in relation to the particular matter. The committee had not intended to advert to the subject any more until arrangements could be had for consideration, as talk is worthless without an opportunity for action. To this end we were endeavoring to reach a basis by which action could be had. That effoft has failed. In fact, the conciliatory attitude assumed for the sole purpose of securing harmony and action at this session has been misunderstood and abused. The objections on Monday and the repetition of the old stock-in-trade innuendos on Tuesday scatter to the winds all hope of agreement and all those efforts are at an end. I have nothing to do with the personal issues between gentlemen, nor would I be surprised to find some bad men and some bad projects in the development of water power. They are found everywhere in this sinful world, from Eden down. According to the opinions of the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Illinois, there are two in this House, but I do not agree with their reciprocal statements that they are the two. I do not mean to give offense to any of my colleagues. I have high regard for all who have spoken. What I complain of is that they refuse to consider the principles involved and the scheme under which progress is to be made in this respect, insisting that the committee assume the burden of investigating in detail all the physical features involved, which under our scheme it is the duty of the War Department to do. The reason for this mistake, however, is found in their other fundamental error, that the Federal Government has some right and title to the water powers of the country, although it does not spend one cent nor acquire any property rights to the titles, and that it has the right both to charge rent and collect taxes from the private property of citizens in water power. Laboring under those hallucinations, the charge is repeated that the committee had no hearing nor investigations of the projects involved, and that such a reckless practice is the policy of the committee. The following is the truth, and any contrary statement or contention is fallacious: The right of the Government in the streams is to promote the navigation thereof. The only other right it can ever have is not in the streams, but may arise hereafter to control rates and practices of power companies, if ever they begin to transmit the power generated across State lines. That being the policy as to dams built at the expense of persons other than the Government, the committee, in accordance with the general dam act, refers every bill to the Chief of Engineers through the Secretary of War. They make a thorough and exhaustive investigation in every instance, and the report of the Chief of Engineers on each of these bills shows that that is true, and every assertion to the contrary is false. That investigation covers the relation of the dam to navigation and constitutionally can not cover anything else. In these cases, it is true, the Secretary of War suggested two things entirely ultra vires, contrary to the principles of our Government, violative of private rights, and regardless of local authority, to wit, that the Government should reserve and assert what it has not and can not have without paying for it, a title in water power; and second, a right to regulate and control the distribution, practices, and rates of power companies without waiting for them to enter the domain of interstate commerce and thereby come within the jurisdiction of the Federal Gvernment.

Recognizing those doctrines as heretical, the committee ignored them and followed the findings of the Chief of Engineers, who had thoroughly investigated the subject. The objectors have not aided the committee by offering any information nor valid objection to any of the projects. Further referring to the policy under the general dam act, this preliminary investigation does not end the duty of the War Department. When a bill is passed, the consent of Congress being granted in accordance with the general dam act, it imposes on the Chief of Engineers the duty in approving plans and specifications of prescribing in connection therewith all necessary provisions for the protection of the interests of the Government, and he has done it in every case under the general dam act. This brings us to the other false charge, a thousand times recklessly repeated in the sensational press and by the men who pander to the sensational press and flourish by their laudation, such flourish as it is, to wit, that no provision is made for the protection of the people. The consent of Congress in every case is granted that the person, natural or artificial, authorized and to be controlled by the State in which the project is located may construct a dam in a navigable stream. The only additional safeguard necessary to prescribe being that navigation shall not be obstructed thereby, but promoted. The constitutional right of the owner to the use of his property and the constitutional reserved power of the State to sanction or forbid the project, to control and regulate the property and derive revenue from taxing it, are not questioned by our action at all, but required; and the Federal Government has no business or concern with it. The doctrine, implied by some and asserted by others, that the Federal Government can take away from the State every right and duty to regulate the security of property and the rights of its citizens sound very strange to thinking people in this Republic. There is but one way given under the Constitution whereby the Federal Government can derive revenue from water power, unless developed at the expense of the Treasury, and that is by a general, uniform excise tax on all water power and all water-power sites. Whenever the Government finds itself in such a strait that it must seek to usurp to itself the last vestige of resources for raising revenue and leave nothing on which the States may maintain their government it will be a sad day for the Republic. This propaganda, filled with hallucination and innuendo, bristles, however, with one clear and distinct false doctrine, and that is the idea that nothing can be done in this country except by the Federal Government; that private property and morality and business interests can not be fostered under the good old democratic way of supervision and regulation by local authority. The truth is, that is the only way, and whenever centralists and misguided enthusiasts succeed in overturning that plan, progress, honesty, morality, and liberty will be gone forever from the land. If all those gentlemen will suspend their fads and prejudices and devote the next three months to studying the Constitution and the report of Senator NELSON and the letter from Bishop Candler, printed herewith under leave to print, they will return to the next session with much clearer ideas and with a much fairer and better frame of mind for approaching consideration and action upon this question with a view solely to the following two, and the only two, relevant questions: First, what can we do under the Constitution in granting the consent of Congress to permit private owners to develop and use their private property in the shape of dam sites and at the same time promote the navigation of the rivers in which they are to be located? And, second, what is expedient in the way of good governmental policy? Shall we do what we constitutionally can do, and less if necessary, to encourage capital to aid in the development and progress of the country, or shall we continue to blight all hope and prospect of development and prosperity from the source in question by imposing terms so harsh or unconstitutional that certain litigation and uncertain profits will deter all energy and capital from making an effort? Senator NELSON's report follows:

[Report of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate, on S. Res. 44, directing the Committee on the Judiciary to report to the Senate on the power of the Government over the development and use of water power within the respective States.]

POWER OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT OVER THE DEVELOPMENT AND USE OF WATER POWER.

Mr. NELSON, from the subcommittee to which was referred S. Res. 44, submitted the following:

To the Committee on the Judiciary:

Your subcommittee which was directed to report on the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate be, and it is hereby, directed to report to the Senate, at as early a date as possible in the next regular session of Congress, upon the power and authority of the National Government over the development and use of water power within the respective States, and especially:

First. Has the National Government any authority to impose a charge for the use of water power developed on nonnavigable streams, whether State or interstate?

Second. Has it any authority in granting permits to develop water power on a navigable stream to impose and enforce conditions relating to stated payments to the Government, regulation of charges to consumers, and determination of the right to make use of such developed power?

Third. Has it authority in disposing of any of its lands, reserved or unreserved, necessary and suitable for use in connection with the development or use of water power on a nonnavigable stream, whether State or interstate, by lease or otherwise, to limit the time for which such development may continue, or to impose and enforce charges for the use and development of such water power, or to control and regulate the disposition of such water power to its consumers?

have considered the same and report as follows:

The interrogatories embraced in the foregoing resolution involve the rights of riparian owners, the rights of the States, and the rights of the Federal Government in the navigable and nonnavigable streams and watercourses of the country. A solution and understanding of these several rights will tend to answer and solve the question propounded.

NAVIGABLE STREAMS.

The rule of the common law, that only those streams are held navigable in which the tide ebbs and flows, and only so far as such ebb and flow, has not been adopted and does not prevail in this country. With us the question of navigability is one of fact in each case. If a stream can be used for commerce or trade, in any form, to any substantial extent, even for the floating of rafts of logs or lumber, it is held to be a navigable stream. (The Genessee Chief, 12 How., 443; the Daniel Ball, 10 Wall., 557; the Montello, 20 Wall., 430; Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S., 324; Water Power Co. v. Water Commissioners, 168 U. S. 349.)

Most of our streams and watercourses are in fact more or less navigable in some of their reaches, and the nonnavigable portions serve as feeders for, and are so connected with, the navigable sections that it is difficult and scarcely practicable to apply a separate rule for each. This must needs be so where ample regulation of the navigable section can only be secured through regulation of the nonnavigable section. In such cases, for the purposes of interstate commerce, the Federal Government has full regulative power over the entire stream, the nonnavigable as well as the navigable sections.

In United States v. Rio Grande Irrigation Co. (174 U. S., 690) the Supreme Court, in passing upon certain statutes relating to the use of water for mining and irrigation purposes, makes this declaration:

To hold that Congress, by these acts, meant to confer upon any State the right to appropriate all the waters of the tributary streams which unite into a navigable watercourse, and so destroy the navigability of that watercourse in derogation of the interests of all the people of the United States, is a construction which can not be tolerated. It ignores the spirit of the legislation and carries the statute to the verge of the letter and far beyond what under the circumstances of the case must be held to have been the intent of Congress (p. 706–707).

TITLE OF THE STATES IN THE BEDS AND WATERS OF NAVIGABLE STREAMS.

The several States of the Union are each primarily the proprietors of, and have the sovereignty over, the beds and waters of the navigable streams and watercourses within their respective borders, subject only to the rights of the Federal Government under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution (par. 3, sec. 8, Art. I), and to the rights of the Federal Government as owner of the riparian lands (par. 2, sec. 3, Art. IV), which rights will hereafter be referred to and enlarged upon.

In the case of Martin v. Waddell (16 Peters, 367), where the question of tidelands and tidewaters was involved, the Supreme Court of the United States makes this clear and comprehensive declaration:

For when the Revolution took place the people of each State became themselves sovereign; and in that character hold the absolute right to all their navigable waters, and the soils under them, for their own common use, subject only to the rights since surrendered by the Constitution to the General Government.

The same doctrine was laid down by the court in the case of Pollard v. Hagan (3 How., 212), and it was held to apply to the newer States in as full a measure as to the original States of the Union. In this case the court concludes its opinion as follows:

By the preceding course of reasoning we have arrived at these general conclusions: First. The shores of navigable waters and the soils under them were not granted by the Constitution to the United States, but were reserved to the States respectively. Second. The new States have the same rights, sovereignty, and jurisdiction over this subject as the original States. Third. The right of the United States to the public land and the power of Congress to make all needful rules and regulations for the sale and disposition thereof conferred no power to grant to the plaintiffs the land (tidewater land) in controversy.

In the case of Barney v. Keokuk (94 U. S., 324), Justice Bradley declares that the correct principles were laid down in the foregoing cases, and then adds:

These cases related to tidewater, it is true; but they enunciate principles which are equally applicable to all navigable waters.

The rule laid down in the foregoing cases is reaffirmed and amplified with the citation of numerous authorities in the case of Shively v. Bowlby (152 U. S., 1).

RIPARIAN TITLE.

It is the rule of the common law that a grant of land upon the borders of a navigable stream carries the grant only to the high-water line, while a grant of land bordering upon a non-navigable stream carries the title to the center of the stream, subject to the public easement in the water of the stream. While this is the rule of the common law, the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Hardin v. Jordan (140 U. S., 371), has determined that the limits and extent of the riparian ownership is governed by the law of the State in which the land is situated. Justice Bradley, who delivered the opinion in this case, after discussing the question and citing numerous authorities, concludes as follows:

We do not think it necessary to discuss this point further. In our judgment the grants of the Government for lands bounded on streams and other waters, without any reservation or restriction of terms, are to be construed as to their effect according to the law of the State in which the lands lie (p. 384).

The case of Shively v. Bowlby, heretofore cited, approves of and adheres to this rule, and the following cases indorse and adhere to the rule: Barney v. Keokuk (94 U. S., 324), St. Louis v. Myers (113 U. S., 566), Packer v. Bird (137 U. S., 661), St. Louis v. Rutz (138 U. S., 226), Mitchell v. Smale (140 U. S., 406), Grand Rapids v. Butler (159 U. S., 87), Water Power Co. v. Water Commissioners (168 U. S., 349), Kean v. Calumet Canal Co. (190 U. S., 452), United States v. Chandler Dunbar Co. (209 U. S., 447).

The rule of riparian ownership as to grants of land bordering on streams is diverse in the various States. Some States hold that the grant extends only to high-water mark; other States hold that it extends to low-water mark; while another class of States—and perhaps the most numerous—hold that the grant extends to the middle of the stream, subject to the public easement in the water of the stream. But whatever may be the law in this respect as to the effect of the grant, it only relates to the proprietorship in the banks and bed of the stream and not to the ownership of the water in the stream.

In those States which hold that the title of the riparian owner only extends to the high or low water mark the title to the bed of the stream is deemed to be in the State, and whether the title to the bed of the stream is in the riparian owner or in the State, in either case the sovereignty over and the paramount title to the water of the stream is deemed to be in the State, but it holds it not absolutely but in trust for all lawful public uses, and in subrogation to the rights of the Federal Government.

PROPRIETORSHIP AND CONTROL OF THE WATER IN STREAMS.

While the riparian proprietor may be the absolute owner of the bed of the stream, he has no such proprietorship in the water of the stream. The water is a movable thing, and as to that he has only a usufruct. His rights in the water are subject to the sovereignty and control of the State, to the rights of the other riparian owners, and to the public easement or use. Lord Chief Justice Hale in his De Juris Maris (Hargrave, p. 6), in the quaint law language of those days, states:

Though fresh rivers are in point of propriety, as before, prima facie of a private interest; yet, as well fresh rivers as salt, or such as flow and reflow, may be under these two servitudes, or affected with them—viz, one of the prerogatives belonging to the King, and another public interest, or belonging to the people in general.

Commenting on a case in which the riparian owner claimed the title up to the thread of the stream in the Severn River as against the King, Lord Hale says (Hargrave, p. 36):

But though the subject may thus have the propriety of a navigable river part of a port, yet these cautions are to be added, viz: First, that the King has yet a right of empire or government over it in reference to the safety of the kingdom and to his customs, it being a member of a port, prout inferius dicitur; second, that the people have a public interest, a jus publicum, of passage and repassage with their goods by water and must not be obstructed by nuisances or impeached by exactions, * * *. For the jus privatum of the owner or proprietor is charged with and subject to that jus publicum which belongs to the King's subjects; as the foil of an highway is, which though in point of property it may be a private man's freehold, yet it is charged with a public interest of the people, which may not be prejudiced or damnified.

Sir J. Leach, vice chancellor, in the case of Wright v. Howard (1 Simons & Stuart's Reports, 203), an English case in chancery, decided in 1823, explains the right of a riparian as follows:

The right to the use of the water rests on clear and settled principles. Prima facie, the proprietor of each bank of a stream (not tidal) is the proprietor of half the land covered by the stream, but there is no property in the water. Every proprietor has an equal right to use the water which flows in the stream, and, consequently, no proprietor can have the right to use the water to the prejudice of any other proprietor. Without the consent of the other proprietors, who may be affected by his operations, no proprietor can either diminish the quantity of water, which would otherwise descend to the proprietors below, nor throw the water back upon the proprietors above.

Chancellor Kent, in his Commentaries, states the common-law rule in these words:

Every proprietor of lands on the banks of a river has, naturally, an equal right to the use of the water which flows in the stream adjacent to his lands, as it was wont to run (currere solebat), without diminution or alteration. No proprietor has the right to use the water to the prejudice of other proprietors above or below him unless he has a prior right to divert it or a title to some exclusive enjoyment. He has no property in the water itself, but a simple usufruct while it passes along. Aqua currit et debet currere ut currere solebat is the language of the law. Though he may use the water while it runs over his land as an incident to the land, he can not unreasonably detain it or give it another direction, and he must return it to its ordinary channel when it leaves his estate. (3 Com., 439.) (Stein v. Burden, 29 Ala., 127.)

In the case of Head v. Amoskeag (113 U. S., 9), involving the right of the riparian owner to construct and maintain a mill-dam on his own land under a statute of New Hampshire, Justice Gray, who delivered the opinion of the court, declares:

We prefer to rest the decision of this case upon the ground that such a statute, considered as regulating the manner in which the rights of proprietors of lands adjacent to a stream may be asserted and enjoyed, with a due regard to the interests of all, and to the public good, is within the constitutional power of the legislature (p. 21).

He further declares:

The right to the use of running water is publici juris and common to all the proprietors of the bed and banks of the stream from its source to its outlet. Each has a right to the reasonable use of the water as it flows past his land, not interfering with a like reasonable use by those above or below him (p. 23).

In the case of the United States v. Rio Grande Co. (174 U. S., 690), in considering a nonnavigable reach of the Rio Grande River, in the Territory of New Mexico, Justice Brewer, who delivered the opinion of the court, after quoting the foregoing paragraph from Chancellor Kent, adds:

While this is undoubted, and the rule obtains in those States in the Union which have simply adopted the common law, it is also true that as to every stream within its dominion a State may change this common-law rule and permit the appropriation of the flowing waters for such purposes as it deems wise.

That the sovereignty and control over, and paramount title to, the waters in a stream is in the State is further established by that line of decisions sustaining the rule of public ownership, and "prior appropriation," prevailing in the mining and semi-arid States, and acquiescing in its application to the lands of the United States. (Jennison v. Kirk, 98 U. S., 45; Broder v. Water Co., 101 U. S., 274; Gutiers v. Albuquerque Co., 188 U. S., 545; Boquilla Cattle Co. v. Curtis, 213 U. S., 339.)

The case of Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S., 46) was a controversy between two States, one recognizing the doctrine of public ownership and prior appropriation and the other the common-law rule. Chief Justice Shaw, in the case of Elliott v. Fitchburg Railway Co. (10 Cush., 191), describes the rights of the riparian owner under the common-law rule in the following terms:

The right to flowing water is now well settled to be a right incident to property in the land; it is a right publici juris, of such a character that, while it is common and equal to all through whose land it runs, and no one can obstruct or divert it, yet, as one of the beneficial gifts of Providence, each proprietor has a right to a just and reasonable use of it as it passes through his land; and so long as it is not wholly obstructed or diverted, or no larger appropriation of the water running through it is made than a just and reasonable use, it can not be said to be wrongful or injurious to a proprietor lower down. What is such a just and reasonable use may often be a difficult question, depending upon various circumstances. To take a quantity of water from a large running stream for agricultural or manufacturing purposes would cause no sensible or practicable diminution of the benefit to the prejudice of a lower proprietor; whereas, taking the same quantity from a small running brook passing through many farms would be of great and manifest injury to those below, who need it for domestic supply or watering cattle; and therefore it would be an unreasonable use of the water, and an action would lie in the latter case and not in the former. It is therefore to a considerable extent a question of degree; still the rule is the same, that each proprietor has a right to a reasonable use of it, for his own benefit, for domestic use, and for manufacturing and agricultural purposes. * * *

That a portion of the water of a stream may be used for the purpose of irrigating land we think is well established as one of the rights of the proprietors of the soil along or through which it passes. Yet a proprietor can not, under color of that right or for the actual purpose of irrigating his own land, wholly abstract or divert the water course or take such an unreasonable quantity of water or make such unreasonable use of it as to deprive other proprietors of the substantial benefits which they might derive from it if not diverted or used unreasonably. * * *

This rule, that no riparian proprietor can wholly abstract or divert a watercourse, by which it would cease to be a running stream, or use it unreasonably in its passage and thereby deprive a lower proprietor of a quality of his property, deemed in law incidental and beneficial, necessarily flows from the principle that the right to the reasonable and beneficial use of a running stream is common to all the riparian proprietors, and so each is bound to use his common right as not essentially to prevent or interfere with an equally beneficial enjoyment of the common right by all the proprietors. * * *

The right to the use of flowing water is publici juris and common to all the riparian proprietors; it is not an absolute and exclusive right to all the water flowing past their land, so that any obstruction would give a cause of action; but it is a right to the flow and enjoyment of the water, subject to a similar right in all the proprietors to the reasonable enjoyment of the same gift of Providence. It is, therefore, only for an abstraction and deprivation of this common benefit or for an unreasonable and unauthorized use of it that an action will lie.

The assertion of public ownership and of prior appropriation, already referred to, is thus described by Justice Field in the case of Jennison v. Kirk (98 U. S., 453). After describing the system of discovery and appropriation and development of mining claims, he adds the following:

But the mines could not be worked without water. Without water the gold would remain forever buried in the earth or rock. To carry water to mining localities when they were not on the bank of a stream or lake became, therefore, an important and necessary business in carrying on mining. Here, also, the first appropriator of water to be conveyed to such locality for mining or other beneficial purposes was recognized as having, to the extent of actual use, the better right. The doctrine of the common law respecting the right of riparian owners was not considered as applicable, or only in a very limited degree, to the conditions of miners in the mountains. The waters of rivers and lakes were, consequently, carried great distances in ditches and flumes, constructed with vast labor and enormous expenditures of money, along the sides of mountains and through canyons and ravines, to supply communities engaged in mining as well as for agriculturists and ordinary consumption. Numerous regulations were adopted, or assumed to exist, from their obvious justness, for the security of these ditches and flumes, and for the protection of rights to water, not only between different appropriators, but between them and the holders of mining claims. These regulations and customs were appealed to in controversies in the State courts, and received their sanction; and properties to the value of many millions rested upon them. For 18 years, from 1848 to 1866, the regulations and customs of miners, as enforced and molded by the courts and sanctioned by the legislation of the State, constituted the law governing property in mines and in water on the public mineral lands.

These water rights, by prior appropriation, as described by Justice Field, were recognized and confirmed by congressional legislation in 1866 and in 1870. Those acts are now sections 2339 and 2340 of the Revised Statutes. Justice Field further adds:

It will thus be seen that the Federal statutes merely gave a formal sanction to the rules already established. Those rules had been built up in reliance on the tacit acquiescence of the United States, the true owner of the lands and waters on which appropriations were made, and these statutes acquiesced therein expressly "a voluntary recognition of a preexisting right rather than the establishment of a new one."

In the case of Broder v. Natoma Water Co. (101 U. S., 274) the Supreme Court, in referring to the contention that these statutes established a new right, uses the following language:

We are of the opinion that it is the established doctrine of this court that rights of miners, who had taken possession of mines and worked and developed them, and the rights of persons who had constructed canals and ditches to be used in mining operations and for purposes of agricultural irrigation, in the region where such artificial use of the water was an absolute necessity, are rights which the Government had, by its conduct, recognized and encouraged and was bound to protect before the passage of the act of 1866, and that the section of the act which we have quoted was rather a voluntary recognition of a preexisting right of possession, constituting a valid claim to its continued use, than the establishment of a new one.

While the common-law rule prevails—in some instances with slight modifications—in all of the States, except the so-called semiarid or mining States, there can be no doubt that it is in the power of these common-law States, by virtue of their sovereignty, to modify or change the rule of the common law. In the language of Justice Brewer (in U. S. v. Rio Grande Co., 174 U. S., 702–703):

It is also true that as to every stream within its dominion a State may change this common-law rule and permit the appropriation of the flowing waters for such purposes as it may deem wise.

The same justice, in the case of Colorado v. Kansas (206 U. S., 94), describes the power of the State as follows:

It may determine for itself whether the common-law rule in respect to riparian rights or that doctrine which obtains in the arid regions of the West of the appropriation of waters for the purposes of irrigation shall control. Congress can not enforce either rule upon any State. (See also McGilvra v. Ross, 215 U. S., 70.)

We append hereto Exhibit A, which names most of the States in which the rule of prior appropriation prevails, and also gives the constitutional and statutory provisions, with some of the decisions of the courts relating to the subject in each of these States.

PROPERTY AND RIGHTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Except as the owner of riparian lands and except for the purpose of regulating interstate commerce, the United States has no property in or sovereignty over the streams or watercourses within the boundaries of the several States. The sovereignty and ultimate control is in the State, and the proprietorship is either in the State or in the riparian owner, or in both, according to the constitutions and laws of the several States, and the power of the Federal Government over the streams is no greater in the so-called public-land States than in the States east of the Mississippi River. In Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S., 92), already cited, Justice Brewer declares:

As to those lands within the limits of the States, at least of the Western States, the National Government is the most considerable owner and has power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting its property. We do not mean that its legislation can override State laws in respect to the general subject of reclamation. While arid lands are to be found mainly, if not only, in the Western and newer States, yet the powers of the National Government within the limits of those States are the same (no greater and no less) as those within the limits of the original thirteen, and it would be strange if, in the absence of a definite grant of power, the National Government could enter the territory of the States along the Atlantic and legislate in respect to improving by irrigation or otherwise the lands within their borders.

THE RIGHTS OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AS RIPARIAN OWNER.

Through the treaty of independence and subsequent treaties with Great Britain, through cessions from foreign countries, and some of the original States of the Union, and through discovery and exploration and by virtue of its national sovereignty, the Federal Government became the proprietor of a vast domain of unsettled and undeveloped lands. Chancellor Kent (1 Com., 257) describes the title of the United States to this domain in the following language:

Upon the doctrine of the court in Johnson v. McIntosh, 1823 (8 Wheat., 543), and Fletcher v. Peck, 1810 (6 Cranch, 142, 143), the United States own the soil as well as the jurisdiction of the immense tracts of unpatented lands included within their territories, and of all the productive funds which those lands may hereafter create. The title is in the United States by the treaty of peace with Great Britain, and by subsequent cessions from France and Spain, and by cessions from the individual States.

By paragraph 2, section 3, Article IV of the Constitution, Congress was given plenary control over this public domain in the following terms:

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; * * *

The power thus conferred on Congress is as full and complete as the power, conferred by another paragraph of the Constitution, to regulate foreign and interstate commerce. The power of Congress is paramount and plenary in each case. Justice Brewer, in the case of The United States v. Rio Grande Co. (174 U. S., 690, 703), declares:

Although this power of changing the common-law rule as to streams within its dominion undoubtedly belongs to each State, yet two limitations must be recognized: First, that in the absence of specific authority from Congress a State can not by its legislation destroy the right of the United States as the owner of lands bordering on a stream to the continued flow of its waters, so far at least as may be necessary for the beneficial uses of the Government property. Second, that it is limited by the superior power of the General Government to secure the uninterrupted navigability of all navigable streams within the limits of the United States. In other words, the jurisdiction of the General Government over interstate commerce and its natural highways vests in that Government the right to take all needed measures to preserve the navigability of the navigable watercourses of the country even against any State action.

The rights of the Federal Government as riparian owner is that of a riparian owner at common law. (Sturr v. Beck, 133 U. S., 541; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal., 336.) This right vested in the Federal Government when it acquired its public domain and of this right it is not divested on the admission of a State into the Union, for this right is expressly reserved by the Constitution. The title of the Federal Government to the public lands in the States where the rule of prior appropriation prevails antedates the admission of those States into the Union, and over that title the Constitution reserved plenary power of disposal and regulation to the Federal Government. It is only when the Federal Government has entirely parted with that title and it has passed into other ownership that the power of regulation on the part of the Federal Government becomes extinct. The water on the riparian land of the Federal Government is an appurtenance of the land of which it can not be divested without its consent, no more than of its riparian lands. In the case of the United States v. Winans (198 U. S., 371) it was held that the Federal Government had the power to reserve a fishing right for the Yakima Indians in the Columbia River, and that such reservation, though made when the State was a Territory, bound the future State. And in the case of Winters v. The United States (207 U. S., 564) it was held that the Federal Government had the right to reserve the water in the Milk River for the benefit of the Indians and officers of the Government on the Fort Belknap Reservation, in Montana, and that this reservation of the water, though made while Montana was a Territory, bound it after it became a State. The court affirms and asserts the doctrine and rule in these terms:

Another contention of appellants is that if it be conceded that there was a reservation of the waters of Milk River by the agreement of 1888, yet the reservation was repealed by the admission of Montana into the Union February 22, 1889 (ch. 180, 25 Stat., 676), "upon an equal footing with the original States." The language of counsel is that "any reservation in the agreement with the Indians, expressed or implied, whereby the waters of Milk River were not to be subject of appropriation by the citizens and inhabitants of said State, was repealed by the act of admission." But to establish the repeal counsel rely substantially upon the same argument that they advance against the intention of the Government to reserve the waters. The power of the Government to reserve the waters and exempt them from appropriation under the State laws is not denied, and could not be. (The United States v. The Rio Grande Ditch & Irrigation Co., 174 U. S., 690, 702; United States v. Winans, 198 U. S., 371.)

In the case of Camfield v. United States (167 U. S., 518) the court declares:

> While we do not undertake to say that Congress has the unlimited power to legislate against nuisances within a State, which it would have within a Territory, we do not think the admission of a Territory as a State deprives it of the power of legislating for the protection of the public lands, though it may thereby involve the exercise of what is ordinarily known as the police power, so long as such power is directed solely to its own protection. A different rule would place the public domain of the United States completely at the mercy of State legislation.

These opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States have been concurred in by some of the courts of those States in which the rule of prior appropriation prevails.

Judge Rudkin of the Supreme Court of the State of Washington (now a Federal district judge) in the case of Kendall v. Joyce (48 Wash., 492–493) declares:

> It has never been contended that a mere squatter on public land who subsequently sells out or abandons his claim acquires, or can acquire, riparian rights in a stream flowing through the land. Riparian rights are a mere incident to ownership in the soil, and, while they may relate back by fiction of law to the date of the settlement or filing, by virtue of the patent subsequently issued, yet they do not vest until patent issues, for up to that time the patent to the land with all its incidents is vested in the United States, utterly beyond the power or control of State legislatures. And the party thereafter acquiring title from the Government acquires the land with all its incidents.

In the case of Cruse v. M'Cauley (96 Fed. Rep., 369) the United States Circuit Court for Montana, through Judge Knowles, declares:

> It must be conceded that the United States, as the proprietor of the land over which the South Fork of McDonald Creek flowed, had a right to the flow of the waters thereof over its land, as an incident thereto. In the eastern part of Montana the United States acquired its title to land by virtue of what is called the "Louisiana purchase." There can not be one rule as to the right to the flow of water over its lands in Montana and another rule as to its lands in Iowa and Missouri. In these last-named States there can be no doubt of the rule that the National Government would be entitled to water which is an incident to its land. As the United States then owns the waters which are an incident to its lands, it can dispose of them separate from its lands if it chooses. Section 2339, Revised Statutes, provides:
>
> "Whenever by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes, have vested and accrued and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and decisions of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same."
>
> The practical construction of this statute has been that as long as land belonged to the United States the waters flowing over the same was subject to appropriation for any of the purposes named, when such appropriation was recognized by the local customs, laws, or decisions of the courts. But if the water was not so appropriated when it flowed over the public domain, it was not subject to appropriation after the land over which it flowed became private property. Patents of the United States to lands contain this clause:
>
> "Subject to any vested and accrued water rights for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes," etc.
>
> Certainly this means subject to such water rights as existed at the time when the patent took effect. * * *
>
> If a person receives a patent from the United States for land subject only to accrued water rights—that is, existing water rights—and as an incident to or a part of this land there is water flowing over the same or upon the same, he would have all the rights the United States had at that time. I do not think any State law or custom can take away such rights, except for some public purpose.

The Federal Government has the undoubted right to lease its riparian and other lands with all their appurtenances. (United States v. Gratiot, 14 Pet., 526.)

Congress has also the undoubted power to create and establish forest reserves on the lands of the United States within any State, and to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to make proper rules and regulations for the use of the same, and to charge a compensation for the use of any portion of the reservation; and such a statute amounts to a revocation of the implied license to graze the public lands, referred to and sustained in the case of Buford v. Houtz (133 U. S., 320). (See United States v. Grimaud, 220 U. S., 506; Light v. United States, 220 U. S., 523.)

In this connection it may be observed that the right to occupy and use the public lands of the United States for canals and ditches, for the appropriation of water for agricultural and mining purposes, is based upon and conferred by the following acts: July 26, 1866 (R. S., sec. 2339), and July 9, 1870 (R. S., sec. 2340). There is, in addition to these acts, the right-of-way law contained in the act of March 3, 1891. (26 Stat., p. 1101.) It is through these laws and not by virtue of any State authority that the use of the public domain for the appropriation of water is conferred and acquired.

It is further to be noted that the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., 847), confers the following-described power upon the President in these terms:

> That the President may, at any time in his discretion, temporarily withdraw from settlement, location, sale, or entry any of the public lands of the United States, including the District of Alaska, and reserve the same for water-power sites, irrigation, classification of lands, or other public purposes to be specified in the orders of withdrawals, and such withdrawals or reservations shall remain in force until revoked by him or by an act of Congress.

In the light of the constitutional provision and of the interpretation placed upon it by the decisions of the Supreme Court and other courts in respect to this subject, it seems clear that the Federal Government, through Congress, has the power to lease its riparian lands, with the waters appurtenant thereto, situate within the several States, for such a period, on such terms, and for such rent as Congress in its discretion may prescribe, but the lessee would, at most, only acquire the common-law usufruct in the water of the appurtenant stream, as defined by Chancellor Kent and Chief Justice Shaw.

THE POWER OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT UNDER THE INTERSTATE-COMMERCE CLAUSE OF THE CONSTITUTION.

For the purpose of promoting and regulating foreign and interstate commerce Congress is given plenary power over all the navigable waters of the United States, to the end of improving and maintaining their navigability; and this power is not limited to the navigable sections of streams, but extends to the tributaries and feeders of the same, for without the control of these the power over the navigable sections might become wholly impotent. (United States v. Rio Grande Co., 174 U. S., 690.) Neither can any limits be placed upon the methods of improving the navigability of streams nor upon the means by which commerce can be carried on upon the same.

Science has in recent years evoked from the great storehouse of nature the hidden and well-nigh limitless power of electricity and utilized the same in various ways for the promotion of commerce, industry, and the domestic and social well-being of mankind. The bounds of such power and use can not well be defined or foretold. That such power has become and may still much further become one of the great instrumentalities of commerce is evident. While sail, aside form the oar, was the only known motive power on water the limits of navigation was confined to tide water. The discovery of steam extended navigation on our streams far beyond the limits of tide water, and who can tell how much further hydroelectrical power generated by a dam in a stream may extend navigation on that or some other stream? The water in a stream may not only be used to float and carry a vessel, a boat, or a barge, but it may also be used to furnish the motive power for the navigation of the same. And a dam erected in a stream carrying interstate commerce can well be utilized for this double purpose; and Congress, having jurisdiction over the improvement and regulation of an interstate navigable stream, has ample power to resort to all reasonable means for the improvement of navigation and the promotion of commerce on such a stream. (Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat., 1.)

If, for the purpose of improving the navigability of a stream carrying interstate commerce, the Federal Government constructs and maintains a dam, with locks and gates, the Government has the undoubted right to establish and maintain, in connection with such dam, an electric-power plant for the purpose of furnishing motive power to operate such locks and gates. And the Federal Government has the right to sell, lease, or rent, for compensation, any surplus power that may arise from and be an incident to such an improvement of navigation. (Kaukauna Water Power Co. v. Green Bay & Mississippi Canal Co., 142 U. S., 254.)

This case relates to the construction of a dam for purposes of navigation and the use of the surplus water incident thereto. In 1846 Congress made a grant of land to the State of Wisconsin for the improvement of the navigation of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers. The State assumed the grant and the work. In the act of assumption it was provided among other things:

> Whenever a water power shall be created by reason of any dam erected or other improvements made on any of said rivers, such water power shall belong to the State, subject to the future action of the legislature.

The court, in passing upon the effect of this reservation to the State, declares:

> But if, in the erection of a public dam for a recognized public purpose, there is necessarily produced a surplus of water, which may properly be used for manufacturing purposes, there is no sound reason why the State may not retain to itself the power of controlling or disposing of such water as an incident of its right to make such improvement. Indeed, it might become very necessary to retain the disposition of it in its own hands, in order to preserve at all times a sufficient supply for the purposes of navigation. If the riparian owners were allowed to tap the pond at different places and draw off the water for their own use, serious consequences might arise, not only in connection with the public demand for the purposes of navigation, but between the riparian owners themselves as to the proper proportion each was entitled to draw—controversies which could only be avoided by the State reserving to itself the immediate supervision of the entire supply. As there is no need of the surplus running to waste, there was nothing objectionable in permitting the State to let out the use of it to private parties, and thus reimburse itself for the expenses of the improvement.

The court, after further comments and the citation of three Ohio cases, adds:

> The true distinction seems to be between cases where the dam is erected for the express or apparent purpose of obtaining a water power to lease to private individuals, or where in building a dam for a public improvement a wholly unnecessary excess of water is created, and cases where the surplus is a mere incident to the public improvement and a reasonable provision for securing an adequte supply of water at all times for such improvement.

Also, see Green Bay Co. v. Patten Co. (172 U. S., 58), relating to the same water power and dam after the Federal Government had taken over the work and improvement.

In general, it may be said that whenever the Federal Government is engaged in improving the navigability of a stream on which there is interstate commerce, if by reason and in consequence of such improvement, and as an incident thereto, surplus power is created, the Federal Government has the right to lease or sell such power on such terms and for such compensation as it may deem just.

Congress, as in the case of Wisconsin, Ohio, and other States, can delegate the work of improving portions of navigable rivers to States, municipalities, private corporations, and individuals, and if in connection with such improvement and as an incident thereto surplus power is created, Congress may authorize those to whom the right of improvement is delegated to lease and secure compensation for such surplus power. In such cases those to whom the power of making the improvement is delegated are the agents for and stand in place of the Federal Government. But unless such work of improvement is primarily made for the purpose of improving the navigation on streams or other waters carrying interstate commerce, the Federal Government could not confer the power to obtain compensation for the use of the water.

Provision has been made in several acts of Congress for the utilization of surplus water power on navigable streams. In a part of the cases the dam or other improvement has been carried on and made directly by the United States; in other cases by private parties. Senate document No. 57, first session Sixty-second Congress (see Exhibit B appended hereto), contains a list of the cases where so-called water-power privileges have been granted. The case of the Black Warrior River in Alabama has been added to the document since it was issued.

ANSWER TO THE INTERROGATORIES PROPOUNDED IN THE RESOLUTION.

Coming now, in the light of the Constitution and of the construction and interpretation put upon it by the courts in the authorities we have cited, to the direct consideration of the interrogatories propounded in the foregoing resolution, and before attempting to directly respond to the same, it must be borne in mind that it is always difficult to give a satisfactory and instructive answer to a hypothetical or abstract question. It is much easier to solve a concrete case.

As to the first interrogatory, the only answer we can make is this: That whether a stream is navigable or nonnavigable, State or interstate, the rights of the Federal Government as riparian owner are practically the same; and barring any power that may rest in the Federal Government under the commerce clause of the Constitution, that Government has manifestly the right to lease, for compensation and on such terms as it sees fit, its riparian lands with the water appurtenant thereto, but the lessee would not acquire a greater right or interest in such water than the usufruct as defined by the common law, and such right or interest would be subject to and charged with any right acquired under the act of July 26, 1866 (R. S., sec. 2339). The Federal Government has no water power aside from the usufruct to lease in such case; and if the utilization of the water in a stream is sought beyond such usufruct and for other purposes, authority therefor must be obtained from the State where the residuary power over the water resides.

Responding to the second interrogatory, we are of the opinion, divorcing the question from riparian rights, that the Federal Government, in authorizing the construction and maintenance of a dam on a navigable stream by States, municipalities, or private parties, for the chief and primary purpose of improving the navigation of the stream, has the same right to prescribe the terms and compensation for the use of the surplus power, created as an incident to the main improvement, as the Government would have in case it had itself built the dam or made the improvement, and that the Government having delegated the power of building such dam to private parties might well confer upon them as compensation for the work thus undertaken the right to do what the Government itself could do in case it had itself constructed the work. In this connection, and as a further response to the interrogatory, it must be noted that the mere grant by the Federal Government of authority to construct a dam in a navigable river, not for purposes of navigation, but really for the creation of a water power, is merely a license or permit, the effect of which is that if the dam is constructed and operated conformable to plans approved by the Government it will not be deemed an obstruction or impediment to navigation. And in such case the Government would be authorized to charge a nominal license fee for inspecting and passing upon the plans and for watching over the work to see that it conforms to the plans and is properly maintained; but the regulative power of the Government would not extend to the use of the water for other purposes than navigation and interstate commerce. In such a case it seems to us that the Federal Government has no water power to sell or charge compensation for, for it is only authorized by the Constitution to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, which in this case means navigation.

As to the third interrogatory, it may be remarked that it has in part been responded to in the answer to the first interrogatory. And as a further answer we will add that the Federal Government has under the Constitution plenary power to sell or lease its riparian lands with the water appurtenant thereto, and that if on any such land there is a water-power site, that, as a part of the riparian land, can of course be sold or leased. The Federal Government has no water power distinct or separable from its riparian lands or any water-power site on the same. The only water power the Federal Government owns is the common-law usufruct in the water appurtenant to its riparian lands. In leasing its riparian lands with their appurtenant water, which is all the Government has to lease within the limits of a State, it can no doubt prescribe such terms as it sees fit in respect to rent, duration of lease, and the uses to which the leased premises may be put. It can say in its lease to the lessee: "If you succeed in creating and maintaining a water power on the premises I lease you, you will be required to rent such power on such and such terms. This condition will be in your lease; without it I will not lease you the premises. If you accept a lease with this condition and fail to comply with the condition, your lease will be forfeited." In this connection it must be borne in mind, however, that the leasing of the water-power site as a part of the riparian lands of the Federal Government does not in and of itself confer the right to create a water power. At most, as we have already stated, it merely confers the common-law right of usufruct in the water. If any other or further use of the water in the stream is required, the right to such use must be obtained from State authority, and therefore it is difficult to see how water power can be established in such cases without the cooperation or consent of the State.

Several acts have been passed by Congress relating to obstructions and the construction of dams in navigable rivers. Among these, to which we call your attention, is the act of September 19, 1890 (26 Stat., 426), which contains important provisions for the removal or change in bridges that are found to be an obstruction to navigation by the Secretary of War, and other provisions relating to the construction of wharves, piers, bridges, etc.

The act of July 13, 1892 (27 Stat., 88), relates particularly to the construction of wharves, piers, and bridges over navigable waters, and requires the approval of the Secretary of War for any improvement or bridge. (See sec. 3, p. 110.)

Section 10 of the act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1121), prohibits the creation of any obstruction to the navigable capacity of any of the waters in the United States not affirmatively authorized by Congress, etc., and prohibits the construction of any breakwater, jetty, or other obstruction in any river or water of the United States except on plans recommended by the Chief of Engineers and authorized by the Secretary of War. Section 9 of the same act prohibits the construction of any bridge, dam, etc., over any navigable river without the consent of Congress and without the approval of plans by the Chief of Engineers and Secretary of War.

The act of June 21, 1906 (34 Stat., 386), relates to the construction of dams by parties other than the Federal Government, and the act of June 23, 1910 (36 Stat., 593), is amendatory of the preceding act, and lays down many important rules and regulations for the construction of dams in navigable rivers, etc.

EXHIBIT A.

CALIFORNIA.

California was admitted into the Union in 1850, and the only provision in the act for admission of September 9 (9 Stat., 453) relating to water rights is "that navigable waters are declared common highways and forever free to the inhabitants of the State and citizens of the United States without any tax, impost, or duty therefor."

Section 1 of article 14, constitution, 1879 (p. 443, vol. 1, Am. Chs., Cons., and Oc. L.), provides:

> The use of all waters now appropriated or that may hereafter be appropriated for sale, rental, or distribution is hereby declared to be a public use and subject to the regulation and control of this State, in the manner to be prescribed by law.

Section 1410, California Civil Code, provides:

> The right to the use of running water flowing in a river or stream, or down a canyon or ravine, may be acquired by appropriation.

Section 1411, California Civil Code, provides:

The appropriation must be for some useful or beneficial purpose, and when the appropriator or his successor in interest ceases to use it for such purpose the right ceases.

Section 1422, which, as originally enacted, provided that "The rights of riparian proprietors are not affected by the provisions of this title," i. e., the title relating to the appropriation of water, was enacted March 21, 1872, with section 1410 and the following sections, but repealed March 15, 1887. (Stats. and Amendts., p. 114.) This repealing act contains the following provision:

The repeal of this section shall not in any way interfere with any rights already vested.

One who bases his right on appropriation of water over land then part of the public domain acquires no right superior to those attaching to riparian lands which at the time of the appropriation were private. (Hargrave v. Cook, 108 Cal., 78.) 1895.

In the case of Hill v. Newman (5 Cal., 446), Justice Bryan in explaining a water right said:

The right to running water is defined to be a corporeal right, or hereditament, which follows or is embraced by the ownership of the soil over which it naturally passes * * *. From the policy of our laws, it has been held in this State to exist without private ownership of the soil—upon the ground of prior location upon the land, or prior appropriation and use of the water.

And in the case of McDonald & Blackburn v. Bear River & Auburn Water & Mining Co. (13 Cal., 232, 233), Justice Baldwin put it in this language:

The ownership of water as a substantive and valuable property, distinct, sometimes, from the land through which it flows, has been recognized by our courts; and this ownership, of course, draws to it all the legal remedies for its invasion. The right accrues from appropriation; this appropriation is the intent to take, accompanied by some open, physical demonstration of the intent and for some valuable use. We have held that there is no difference in respect to this use, or rather purpose, to which the water is to be applied; at least, that an appropriation for the uses of a mill stands on the same footing as an appropriation for the use of mines.

The rule of the common law as to riparian rights in its extreme rigor is not adapted to the conditions existing in this State. It is relaxed to a certain extent, and moreover right to the use of water may be procured by prior appropriation thereof where the absolute title to the soil has not passed from the Government or State. But where the title to the riparian soil is in private parties it seems to be the law that they are under the protection of the common-law rule. The rights in water acquired by a riparian proprietor are attached to the soil and pass with it (Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal., 255) and may be lost only by grant, condemnation, or prescription. (Hargrave v. Cook, 108 Cal., 77; Bathgate v. Irvine, 126 Cal., 142; Eddy v. Simpson, 3 Cal., 249; Pet v. Santa Rosa, 119 Cal., 392; Gould v. Stafford, 77 Cal., 66; Union M. & M. Co. v. Ferris, 2 Sawy., 176; Union M. & M. Co. v. Dangby, 2 Sawy., 450; Land & Water Co. v. Hancok, 85 Cal., 219.)

Justice Heydenfeldt, in a leading case (5 Cal., 147), said:

The miner who selects a piece of ground to work must take it as he finds it, subject to prior rights, which have an equal equity on account of an equal recognition from the sovereign power. If it is upon a stream the waters of which have not been taken from the bed, they can not be taken to his prejudice; but if they have been already diverted, and for as high and legitimate purpose as the one he seeks to accomplish, he has no right to complain, no right to interfere with the prior occupation of his neighbor, and must abide the disadvantage of his own selection.

Chief Justice Murray, in Hill v. King (8 Cal., 338), speaking on this subject said:

The only test as between parties where the lands belong to the United States or this State is priority of location, and whether a party locates above or below the claim of another his right depends or originates in appropriation alone; he must take subject to the higher right of those who were first in point of time to appropriate. If the parties both claimed as riparian proprietors, then each alike would be entitled to the reasonable use of the water for proper purposes. But in such case the supraripariam proprietor must so do the same as to do his neighbor the least possible injury.

IDAHO.

The constitution of Idaho, 1889, section 1 of article 15, contains the same provision as section 1 of article 14 of the California constitution, supra (pp. 943, 944, vol. 2, Am. Ch., Con., and O. L.), with the additional provision that the use "of all water originally appropriated for private use, but which after such appropriation has heretofore been or may hereafter be sold, rented, or distributed" is also a public use.

Section 3 provides:

The right to divert and appropriate the unappropriated waters of any natural stream to beneficial use shall never be denied. Priority of appropriation shall give the better right as between those using the water; but when the waters of any natural stream are not sufficient for the service of all those desiring the use of the same, those using the water for domestic purposes shall (subject to such limit as may be prescribed by law) have the preference over those claiming for any other purpose; and those using the water for agricultural purposes shall have preference over those using the same for manufacturing purposes. And in any organized mining district, those using the water for mining purposes, or milling purposes connected with mining, shall have preference over those using the same for manufacturing or agricultural purposes. But the usage by such subsequent appropriators shall be subject to such provisions of law regulating the taking of private property for public and private use as referred to in section 14, article 1, of this constitution.

Section 3240, Revised Statutes, puts the control of water within the borders of the State in the State and declares that all waters are the property of the State; section 3242 provides for acquiring the right to the use of water by appropriation, and section 3243 that it must be for a useful and beneficial purpose.

The State engineer is prohibited from granting permits to divert waters of a lake, pond, or pool situated wholly upon lands of a person or corporation except to the owner. (Chap. 230, Sess. Laws, 1911.)

In the case of Drake v. Earhart (2 Idaho, 716) it was held that a prior appropriator of the water of a stream, all of which he claimed, had used, and needed for irrigation, was entitled to the whole as against a patentee of land through which the stream flowed, though no custom to that effect was shown.

Said Chief Justice Beatty (p. 720):

The important question * * * is what, if any, rights the appellant has to any of that water as a riparian proprietor. His claim is not based upon prior or any appropriation under our Territorial laws, but upon the fact that the stream in question flows by its natural channel through his land; hence that he is entitled to the use thereof allowed by the common law. This doctrine of riparian proprietorship in water as against prior appropriation has been very often discussed and nearly always decided the same way by almost every appellate court between Mexico and the British possessions and from the shores of the Pacific to the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains, as well as by the Supreme Court of the United States. While there are questions growing out of the water laws and rights not fully adjudicated, this phantom of riparian rights, based upon facts like those in this case, has been so often decided adversely to such claim and in favor of prior appropriation that the maxim "first in time, first in right" should be considered the settled law here. * * * It is the lineal descendant of the law of necessity.

It is evident, therefore, that in the State of Idaho, according to the constitution, statutes, and decisions of the courts, all waters are in full control of the State, subject to appropriation for beneficial uses and the sale, rental, or distribution thereof.

MONTANA.

Section 15, article 3, constitution, 1889, provides (p. 2302, vol. 4, Am. Ch., Con., and O. L.):

The use of all water now appropriated or that may hereafter be appropriated for sale, rental, distribution, or other beneficial use, and the right of way over lands of others for all ditches, drains, flumes, canals, and aqueducts necessarily used in connection therewith, as well as the sites for reservoirs necessary for collecting and storing the same, shall be held to be a public use. * * *

Section 4432, Revised Statutes, 1907 (in part):

The State is the owner of all land below the water of a navigable lake or stream.

Section 4840, Revised Statutes, 1907 (approved Mar. 16, 1901):

The right to the use of any unappropriated water of any natural stream, watercourse, spring, dry coulee, or other natural source of supply, and of any running water flowing in the streams, rivers, canyons, and ravines of this State, may hereafter be acquired by appropriation.

Section 4846, Revised Statutes, 1907, gives the United States, through the Secretary of the Interior, the right to appropriate the waters of streams or lakes within the borders of the State in the same manner as an individual.

In the case of Columbia Mining Co. v. Holter (1 Mont., 300) Chief Justice Warren, in speaking of the doctrine of prior appropriation, used this language:

By appropriation a man acquires only the right of possession and user of water, qualified by the right of others to its use, in such manner as shall not materially diminish or deteriorate it at the place of his appropriation in quantity or quality.

From the above sections it would appear that the right of the United States to the streams and waters therein in this State is no greater than that of an individual—i. e., to acquire a right therein by appropriation.

WASHINGTON.

Section 1, article 17, constitution, 1889 (p. 4001, vol. 7, Am. Ch., Con., and O. L.):

The State of Washington asserts its ownership to the beds and shores of all navigable waters in the State up to and including the line of ordinary high tide, in waters where the tide ebbs and flows, and up to and including the line of ordinary high water within the banks of all navigable rivers and lakes: Provided, That this section shall not be construed so as to debar any person from asserting his claim to vested rights in the courts of the State.

Section 2:

The State of Washington disclaims all title in and claim to all tide, swamp, and overflowed lands patented by the United States: Provided, The same is not impeached for fraud.

Section 1, article 21:

The use of the waters of the State for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes shall be deemed a public use.

Justice White:

The provision of article 17, section 1, of the constitution was evidently for the purpose of establishing the right of the State to the beds of all navigable waters in the State, whether lakes or rivers, or fresh or salt, to the same extent the Crown had in England in the sea and in the arms and inlets thereof and in the tidal rivers, and to eliminate the distinctions existing under the rule of the common law in this respect.

A lower riparian owner can not be deprived of his right to the usual and undiminished flow of water without the exercise of eminent domain, even where the upper proprietor is a municipal corporation which seeks to divert the waters for necessary public use. It was contended that by section 1, article 17, the State could authorize the diversion of a stream for the use of the inhabitants of a city, it being a public use and a paramount necessity superior to every other use. Justice White said further:

Though this section has the effect, as has been held by this court in Eisenbach v. Hatfield (2 Wash., 236) and Harborland Commissioners v. State (2 Wash., 530), of vesting in the State the entire and exclusive ownership of the beds and shores of all navigable waters, it should not be construed as affecting the rights of riparian proprietors upon nonnavigable watercourses, though their source is in navigable waters. The use of the water in such nonnavigable streams is not inconsistent with the retention of the fee in the bed of navigable waters in the State. The provision of section 16, article 1, of the constitution protects private property from confiscation for public use; and the proviso to article 17, section 1, clearly indicates that so far as rights had become vested, notwithstanding the other provisions of this section, the owner thereof should have the right to assert them in the courts; and, if this language means anything, it is that those rights should be protected and guarded by the courts. (24 Wash., 499, 500, 501, New Whatcom v. Fairhaven Land Co.)

Section 6316, Remington & Ballinger's code, 1910:

The right to the use of water in any lake, pond, or flowing spring in this State or the rights of the use of any water flowing in any river, stream, or ravine of this State, for irrigation, mining, or manufacturing purposes, or for supplying cities, towns, or villages with water, or for waterworks, may be acquired by appropriation and as between appropriators the first in time is the first in right.

Section 6325, Remington & Ballinger's code, 1910, gives the right to any person, corporation, or association of persons, and section 6326 the right to riparian proprietors to appropriate surplus and unappropriated waters for purposes of irrigation and mining.

Section 4102 provides for the procuring of right of way across intervening lands for ditches, etc.

"The common-law doctrine of riparian rights in the use of waters of a stream has become a rule of property in this State." (Nesalhous v. Walker, 45 Wash., 621.)

A prior appropriator of water over public lands can not be defeated of his rights by subsequent homesteaders on the land. (Thorpe v. Tenem, 1 Wash., 566.)

NORTH DAKOTA.

Article 17, section 210, constitution, 1889 (p. 2885, vol. 5, Am. Ch., Con., and O. L.):

All flowing streams and natural watercourses shall forever remain the property of the State for mining, irrigating, and manufacturing purposes.

Section 4798, Revised Codes, 1905:

The owner of the lands owns the waters standing thereon, or flowing over or under its surface, but not flowing in a definite stream. Water running in definite stream formed by nature, over or under the surface, may be used by him as long as it remains there; but he may not prevent the natural flow of the stream or of the natural springs from which it commences its definite course, nor pursue or pollute the stream.

Section 7604:

All waters within the limits of the State from all sources of water supply belong to the public, and except as to navigable waters, are subject to appropriation for beneficial use.

Section 7639 gives the United States the right to appropriate waters within the State the same as an individual.

The homestead settlers have superior rights over subsequent miner's claims. (Sturr v. Beck, 6 N. Dak., 71; 133 U. S., 541.)

A riparian owner may use reasonable quantity of water for irrigation purposes. An appropriator who acquires subsequent rights can not complain of use made of water by upper riparian proprietor. (Lone Tree Ditch Co. v. Cyclone Ditch Co., 15 S. Dak., 519.)

In the case of Bigelow v. Draper (6 N. Dak., 152) Justice Corless said:

At common law the owner of lands through which a nonnavigable stream flowed was possessed of the title to the bed of the stream as well as of the right to a reasonable use of the water. The land under the water was his; the right to a reasonable use of the stream was as much his property as the land itself. The course of the stream could not be so diverted as to cause it to cease to flow in its accustomed channel upon his property. These doctrines of the common law were in force in the Territory of Dakota at the time of the adoption of the constitution of this State. By virtue of them the riparian owners in the Territory were vested with specified property rights in the bed of all natural watercourses, and in the water itself. Such rights were under the protection of the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution, which protects property against all State actions that does not constitute due process of law. It follows that section 210 of the State constitution would itself be unconstitutional in so far as it attempted to destroy those vested rights of property, if it should by construction be given a scope sufficiently wide to embrace such matters. For this reason we feel constrained to hold, despite its broad language, that section 210 was not framed to divest the rights of riparian owners in the waters and beds of all natural watercourses in the State.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Section 192, Revised Code, 1903:

The ownership of land below ordinary high-water mark and the land below the water of a navigable lake or stream is regulated by the laws of the United States, or by such laws of the State as the legislature may enact.

Section 278, Revised Code:

The owner of the lands owns the waters standing thereon or flowing over or under its surface, but not flowing in a definite stream. Water running in definite stream formed by nature over or under the surface may be used by him as long as it remains there, but he may not prevent the natural flow of the stream or of the natural springs from which it commences its definite course, nor pursue nor pollute the stream.

Section 289, Revised Code:

Except where the grant under which the land is held indicates a different intent, the owner of the upland, when it borders upon a navigable lake or stream, takes to the edge of the lake or stream at low-water mark, and all navigable rivers shall remain and be deemed public highways. In all cases where the opposite banks of any streams not navigable belong to different persons the stream and the bed thereof shall become common to both.

Section 2563, Revised Code:

Any person or persons, corporation or company, who may have or hold a title or possessory right to any mineral or agricultural lands within the limits of this State shall be entitled to the usual enjoyment of the waters of the streams or creeks in said State for mining, milling, agricultural, or domestic purposes: Provided, That the right to such use shall not interfere with any prior right or claim to such waters when the law has been complied with in doing the necessary work.

Section 2567, Revised Code:

The waters of the streams or creeks of the State may be made available to the full extent of the capacity thereof for mining, milling, agricultural, or domestic purposes, without regard to deterioration in quality or diminution in quantity, so that the same do not materially affect or impair the rights of the prior appropriator.

Sections 2564 and 2568 give right of way through and over any tract or piece of land for the above purposes and provide for damages for such cutting over lands.

To the contention that the provisions of section 278, Revised Code, were of no effect after the adoption of the prior appropriation doctrine, Justice Corson, in the case of The Lone Tree Ditch Co. v. Cyclone Ditch Co. (15 S. Dak., 525), said:

The Government has by these provisions (secs. 2339 and 2340, U. S. Rev. Stats.) recognized the right to appropriate water and taking the same from its natural channel. The legislature of this State has properly provided for the making of such appropriation, but the right of the riparian owners to the use of such waters which have become vested are such as are prescribed by section 2771, Compiled Laws (sec. 278, Rev. Code). In our opinion, therefore, the provisions of section 2771 are still in force, and this seems to have been the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in Sturr v. Beck. * * *

In that State (California) as in this, two systems prevail: One for acquiring the use of water for irrigation purposes by appropriation, and the other the common-law right to the use of water not so legally appropriated for irrigation purposes, by the riparian owner.

UTAH.

Section 1, article 17, constitution, 1895 (p. 3728, vol. 6, Am. Ch., Con., and O. L.):

All existing rights to the use of any of the waters in this State for any useful or beneficial purpose are hereby recognized and confirmed.

Section 1288x5, Compiled Laws, 1907, provides that right to the use of unappropriated waters may be acquired by appropriation for a beneficial use; section 1288x6, that the application to State engineer must be made before commencing actual appropriation; section 1288x17, date of receipt of application determines priority; section 1288x19, that the water of all streams and other sources is the property of the public subject to the use thereof.

Section 1288x10, as amended March 20, 1911, provides that—

An application for water made by a homesteader, desert entryman, or person in possession of land under contract to purchase the same, such water to be used exclusively upon the land of such person, may be approved without reference to prior conflict.

Section 1288x21 provides for secondary rights in water; for acquiring right of way over adjacent land for ditches, and so on, by eminent domain; and for just compensation to the owner of land injured thereby.

A municipal corporation took possession and control of the waters of a certain stream with the express consent of the original locators and had held the stream more than seven years; held, that it acquired the ownership of the water under the statute of limitations. (Springville v. Fulmer, 7 Utah, 450.)

A prior appropriator of water of a certain stream can not so increase his demands and use the water as to deprive a subsequent appropriator of his rights acquired before such increased demands and use.

Justice Cherry, in the case of Becker v. Marble Creek Irrigation Co. (15 Utah, 228, 229), said:

The waters of a prior appropriator are fixed by the extent of his appropriation for a beneficial use, and others may subsequently appropriate any water of a stream not so used by a prior appropriator; and such latter appropriation becomes a vested right, and entitled to as much protection as the former, and a right of which he can not be deprived except by voluntary alienation or forfeiture by abandonment. The rights of the former being thus fixed, he can not enlarge his rights to the detriment of the latter by increasing his demands or by extending his use to other lands, even if used for a beneficial purpose.

As illustrative of the necessity and importance of applying the doctrine of appropriation in this State, hear what Justice Blackburn, in the case of Stowell v. Johnson (7 Utah, 225), has to say:

Riparian rights have never been recognized in this Territory, or in any State or Territory where irrigation is necessary; for the appropriation of water for the purpose of irrigation is entirely and unavoidably in conflict with the common-law doctrine of riparian proprietorship. If that had been recognized and applied in this Territory it would still be a desert, for a man owning 10 acres of land on a stream of water capable of irrigating 1,000 acres of land or more, near its mouth, could prevent the settlement of all the land above him.

So it is apparent that in the State of Utah the doctrine of prior appropriation is applied to the use of water in its extreme rigor.

WYOMING.

The following are sections of the Wyoming constitution, 1889, relating to water rights (p. 4117, vol. 7, Am. Ch., Con., and O. L.):

Section 31, article 1. Water being essential to industrial prosperity of limited amount, and easy of diversion from its natural channels, its control must be in the State, which, in providing for its use, shall equally guard all the various interests involved (p. 4119, id.).

Section 32, article 1. Private property shall not be taken for private use unless by consent of the owner, except for private ways of necessity, and for reservoirs, drains, flumes, or ditches on or across the lands of others for agricultural, mining, milling, domestic, or sanitary purposes, nor in any case without due compensation (p. 4119, id.).

Section 1, article 8. The water of all natural streams, springs, lakes, or other collections of still water, within the boundaries of the State, are hereby declared to be the property of the State (p. 4138, id.).

Section 3, article 8. Priority of appropriation for beneficial uses shall give the better right. No appropriation shall be denied except when such denial is demanded by the public interests (p. 4138, id.).

Section 917, Revised Statutes, 1899, and the following sections give the right to persons, associations, and corporations to appropriate water for beneficial uses by first making application to the State engineer before constructing any ditches or commencing any work for the diverting of the water.

Chapter 68, Session Laws 1909, defines water rights and its preferred uses and declares that the right to the use of water shall attach to the land.

To the contention that the State could not acquire ownership in the waters of the State by mere assertion, Chief Justice Potter, in the case of Farm Investment Co. v. Carpenter (61 Pacific, 259), said:

In this State the doctrine prevails that the right to the use of water may be acquired by priority of appropriation for beneficial purposes, in contravention to the common-law rule that every riparian owner is entitled to the continued natural flow of the water of the stream running through or adjacent to his lands. The appropriation consists in a diversion of the water by some adequate means and its application to a beneficial use. * * * (Moyer v. Preston, 6 Wyo., 308.)

At the outset, however, it is strenuously insisted that the declaration contained in the constitution, that the waters of the natural streams, etc., are the property of the State, is meaningless and of no force and effect. It is argued that the State no more than an individual can acquire property by mere assertion of ownership, and that the United States as the primary owner of the soil is also primarily possessed of title to the waters of the stream flowing across the public lands. This contention demands more than a passing notice. So far as any proprietary rights of the United States are concerned, the question would seem to be settled in favor of the effectiveness of the declaration by the act of admission which embraces the following provision, "and that the constitution which the people of Wyoming have formed for themselves, be, and the same is hereby, accepted, ratified, and confirmed." * * * The common-law doctrine of riparian rights relating to the use of water of the natural streams and other natural bodies of water not prevailing, but the opposite thereof, and one inconsistent therewith, having been affirmed and asserted by customs, laws, and decisions of courts, and the rule adopted permitting acquisition of rights by appropriation, the waters affected thereby become, perforce, publici juris. It is therefore doubtful whether an express constitutional or statutory declaration is required in the first place to render them public. * * * If any consent of the General Government was primarily requisite to the inception of the rule of prior appropriation, that consent is to be found in several enactments by Congress, beginning with the act of July 26, 1866, and including the desert-land act of March 3, 1877.

The act of July 26, 1866 (14 Stat., 253, ch. 262, sec. 9), above referred to, which is now section 2339, United States Revised Statutes, and section 2340, Revised Statutes, reads as follows:

SEC. 2339. Whenever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and the decisions of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same; and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes herein specified is acknowledged and confirmed; but whenever any person, in the construction of any ditch or canal, injures or damages the possession of any settler on the public domain, the party committing such injury or damage shall be liable to the party injured for such injury or damage.

SEC. 2340. All patents granted, or preemption or homesteads allowed, shall be subject to any vested and accrued water rights, or rights to ditches and reservoirs used in connection with such water rights, as may have been acquired under or recognized by the preceding section. (July 9, 1870, 17 Stat., 218.)

The desert-land act of March 3, 1877 (19 Stat., 377), which applies to the States of California, Oregon, Nevada, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Utah, Wyoming, Arizona, New Mexico, and the Dakotas, sanctions the prior appropriation of water and provides that:

All surplus water over and above such actual appropriation and use, together with the water of all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water supply upon the public lands and not navigable, shall remain and be held free for the appropriation and use of the public for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes, subject to existing rights.

NEVADA.

Chapter XVIII, section 1, laws 1907:

All natural water courses and natural lakes, and the waters thereof which are not held in private ownership, belong to the State and are subject to appropriation for beneficial uses.

Section 355, Compiled Laws, 1900:

All existing rights to the use of water, whether acquired by appropriation or otherwise, shall be respected and preserved and nothing in this act shall be construed as enlarging, abridging, or restricting such rights.

Section 356, Compiled Laws, 1900, provides that no right except usufructuary right can be acquired, i. e., for beneficial purpose, and there shall be no absolute property in waters of lakes or streams.

In the case of Walsh v. Wallace (26 Nev., 327), it was held that the act of 1866 did not introduce any new system or policy, but merely confirmed to the owners of water rights on public lands the same rights which they held under the local customs. Chief Justice Massey said further:

And it has been held by this court that the doctrine of riparian rights is so unsuited to the conditions existing in this State of Nevada and is so repugnant in its operation to the doctrine of appropriation that it is not a part of the law and does not prevail here.

NEBRASKA.

The common-law rules as to rights and duties of riparian owners are in force in every part of the State of Nebraska, except as altered or modified by statute. (Meng v. Coffey, 67 Nebr., 500; Crawford v. Hathaway, 67 Nebr., 325.)

Section 6821, Cobbey's Annotated Statutes, 1911:

The water of every natural stream not heretofore appropriated within the State of Nebraska is hereby declared to be the property of the public and is dedicated to the use of the people of the State, subject to appropriation, as hereinbefore provided.

Section 6844, Cobbey's Annotated Statutes, 1911:

Water for the purpose of irrigation in the State of Nebraska is hereby declared to be a natural want.

Section 6822, Cobbey's Annotated Statutes, provides that water in the streams within the State may be appropriated for beneficial uses, priority of appropriation to have the better right; also, that domestic purposes are preferred over any other purpose and agricultural purposes over manufacturing purposes.

Riparian owners on navigable rivers hold to the thread of the stream subject to the public easement of navigation. A riparian right is not an easement, but a part and parcel of the land itself; it is a property right, and as such is entitled to protection the same as private property. (Kinkhead v. Turgeon, 74 Nebr., 580; Cline v. Stock, 71 Nebr., 70.)

In the case of Crawford v. Hathaway (67 Nebr., 325) the court held that the right of a riparian proprietor as such to use water for irrigation purposes is limited to riparian lands. Even though he does not use the water on riparian lands, that does not permit him to divert the water to nonriparian lands.

COLORADO.

Section 5, article 16, constitution, 1876 (p. 507, vol. 1, Am. Ch., Con., and O. L.):

The water of every natural stream not heretofore appropriated within the State of Colorado is hereby declared to be the property of the public; and the same is dedicated to the use of the people of the State, subject to appropriation as hereafter provided.

Section 6, article 16, constitution, provides that priority of appropriation gives the better right as between those using for the same purpose, and the right to divert unappropriated streams shall never be denied. (When there is not sufficient water, domestic purposes have preference over any other purpose and agricultural over manufacturing purposes.)

Section 7, article 16, constitution, provides for the acquiring of right of way over public, private, and corporate lands for ditches, canals, and flumes for domestic purposes, irrigation, mining, manufacturing, and drainage, upon the payment of just compensation.

Section 2256 et seq. (ch. 69), Mills's Annotated Statutes, 1891, relates to the appropriation and use of water.

The common-law doctrine is also inapplicable to the State of Colorado. Said Chief Justice Hoyt, in the case of Fort Morgan Land & Canal Co. v. South Platte Ditch Co. (18 Colo., 1):

Under our constitution the water of every natural stream in this State is deemed to be the property of the public. Private ownership of water in the natural stream is not recognized. The right to divert water therefrom and apply the same to beneficial uses is, however, expressly guaranteed. By such diversion and use a priority of right to the use of the water may be acquired.

And Justice Helm, discussing the doctrine of prior appropriation in the case of Wheeler v. Irrigation Co. (10 Colo., 582), says:

Our constitution dedicates all unappropriated waters in the natural streams of the State to the use of the people, the ownership thereof being vested in the public. We shall presently see that after appropriation the title to this water, save, perhaps, as to the limited quantity that may be actually flowing in the consumer's ditch or lateral, remains in the general public, while the paramount right to its use, unless forfeited, continues in the appropriator.

See also the following cases: Strickler v. Colorado Springs (16 Colo., 67); Coffin v. Left Hand Ditch Co. (6 Colo., 446, 447); Yankee v. Nichols (1 Colo., 551).

OKLAHOMA.

Section 3915 of the Compiled Laws of 1909 declares the rivers and streams of the State to be the property of the public, and that use of the water in the streams may be acquired by appropriation.

Section 3918, Compiled Laws, provides for the procuring of right of way over private and public lands for irrigation, etc., by condemnation.

Section 3920, Statutes 1909:

The appropriation of water must be either for irrigation, mining, milling, construction of water works for cities and towns, or stock raising.

Section 23, article 2, constitution, 1907 (p. 4275, vol. 7, Am. Ch., Con., and O. L.):

No private property shall be taken or damaged for private use with or without compensation unless by the consent of the owner, except for private ways of necessity or for drains and ditches across lands of others for agricultural, mining, or sanitary purposes, in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

In regard to appropriation of waters for beneficial uses, Chief Justice Burford, in Gates v. Settlers' Milling, Canal & Reservoir Co. (91 Pac., 858), said:

It seems the settled law in States where irrigation problems have been dealt with that, in order to acquire a vested right in the use of water for such purposes from the public streams, three things must concur: There must be the construction of ditches or channels for carrying water; the water must be diverted into the artificial channels and carried through them to the place to be used; and it must actually be applied to beneficial uses, and he has the best right who is first in time.

OREGON.

The act for admission of Oregon, February 14, 1859 (11 Stat., 383), section 2, declares:

* * * And said rivers and waters, and all the navigable waters of said State, shall be common highways and forever free, as well to the inhabitants of said State as to all other citizens of the United States, without any tax, duty, impost, or toll therefor.

Section 6525, Lord's Oregon Laws, 1910:

The use of the water of the lakes and running streams of the State of Oregon for general rental, sale, or distribution for purposes of irrigation, and supplying water for household and domestic consumption, and watering live stock upon dry lands of the State, is a public use, and the right to collect rates or compensation for such use of said water is a franchise. A use shall be deemed general within the purview of this act when the water appropriated shall be supplied to all persons whose lands lie adjacent to or within reach of the line of the ditch or canal or flume in which said water is conveyed, without discrimination other than priority of contract upon payment of charges therefor, as long as there may be water to supply.

Section 6526, Lord's Oregon Laws, 1910, gives to corporations the right to appropriate and to divert water from its natural bed or channel, to condemn land for the purpose of right of ways for ditches, and to condemn the rights of riparian proprietors upon the lake or stream from which such appropriation is made.

Section 6551, Lord's Oregon Laws, 1910:

The use of the water of the lakes and running streams of the State of Oregon for the purpose of developing the mineral resources of the State, and to furnish electrical power for all purposes, is declared to be a public and beneficial use and a public necessity, and the right to divert any unappropriated waters of any such lakes or streams for such public and beneficial use is hereby granted.

Section 6575, Lord's Oregon Laws, 1910:

All water within the State from all sources of water supply belong to the State.

Sections 6594 and 6595 provide that all waters within the State may be appropriated for beneficial use, and preserves the vested rights of riparian proprietors who have made actual application of water for a beneficial use provided such use has not been abandoned for a continuous period of two years. (Enacted 1909.)

In this State it has been held that a riparian owner holds to high-water mark on navigable streams and to the middle of nonnavigable streams.

Each riparian owner is entitled to a reasonable use of the water for domestic purposes and also, in addition thereto, a reasonable use for irrigation, even though such use may diminish the flow to lower riparian owners. (Shaw v. Oswego, 10 Oreg., 371; Jones v. Conn, 39 Oreg., 30.)

In the case of Kahler v. Campbell (13 Oreg., 596) it was held that where two settlers on Government land severally divert a stream at a point above them, and subsequently one of them acquires title to the land at that point, prior appropriation and not common-law riparian rights govern.

A settler upon a nonnavigable stream may elect to rely upon his riparian rights or make an appropriation; but he can not do both. (Williams v. Altnow, 51 Oreg., 275.)

EXHIBIT B.

[Senate Document No. 57, Sixty-second Congress, first session.]

Memorandum of acts of Congress concerning power privileges at Government dams.

Names of rivers.	Grantee.	Date of act.	Provisions of act.	By whom improvement made.
Muskingum, Ohio	General authorization	Aug. 11, 1888 (25 Stat., 417)	The Secretary of War authorized and empowered to grant leases or licenses for the use of the water powers, at such rate and on such conditions and for such periods of time as may seem to him just, equitable, and expedient.	United States.
Green and Barren, Ky	do	Sept. 19, 1890 (26 Stat., 447)	The Secretary of War authorized and empowered to grant leases or licenses for the use of the water powers, at such rate and on such conditions and for such periods of time as may seem to him just, equitable, and expedient, with added condition that leases are not to extend beyond the period of 20 years.	Do.
Cumberland, Tenn., at Lock No. 1.	do	June 13, 1902 (32 Stat., 408)	The Secretary of War authorized to grant leases of licenses for the use of the water power at such rate and on such conditions and for such periods of time as may seem to him expedient. (See also act of June 28, 1902.)	Do.
Tennessee at Hales Bar	City of Chattanooga or other private corporation.	Apr. 26, 1904 (33 Stat., 309)	Grantee to purchase necessary lands and deed same to United States to construct lock and dam and give them to United States completed, free of all cost except expenses connected with preparation of plans, superintendence, cost of lock gates, etc., and to furnish United States free electric current for operating locks and for lighting. Grantee to have use of water power for 99 years.	Private.
Mississippi at Des Moines Rapids.	Keokuk & Hamilton Water Power Co.	Feb. 9, 1905 (33 Stat., 712)	Grantee to build a lock and dry dock and appurtenant works, and United States to have ownership of them. Grantee to provide suitable power plant for lighting and operating the lock, dry dock, and appurtenances, and to provide fishways.	Do.
Cumberland and tributaries	Cumberland River Improvement Co.	Mar. 3, 1905 (33 Stat., 1132)	Right to collect tolls to cease at expiration of 40 years from date of completion of Lock and Dam No. 21, Cumberland River, and United States may then assume the possession, care, operation, maintenance, and management of the lock or locks constructed by the corporation, but without in any way impairing the right or ownership of the water power and dams created by the corporation.	Do.
Coosa, Ala., at Lock No. 2	General authorization	May 9, 1906 (34 Stat., 183)	United States reserves right to control dams and pool level and to construct locks. Land for lock and approaches to be conveyed to United States free of charge, and United States to have free water power for building and operating locks. Fishways to be constructed.	Do.
White, Ark., at Lock No. 1	Batesville Power Co	June 28, 1906 (34 Stat., 536)	The Secretary of War authorized and directed to fix from time to time reasonable charges to be paid for use of power.	Do.

EXHIBIT B—Continued.

Memorandum of acts of Congress concerning power privileges at Government dams—Continued.

Names of rivers.	Grantee.	Date of act.	Provisions of act.	By whom improvement made.
Coosa, Ala., at Lock No. 12	Alabama Power Co	Mar. 4, 1907 (34 Stat., 1288)	Dam to be built so that the United States may construct a lock in connection therewith. The grantee to have the right to use Government land necessary for the construction and maintenance of the dam and appurtenant works, to convey to the United States free of cost such suitable tract or tracts as may be selected by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War for establishment of locks and approaches, and to furnish the necessary electric current to operate locks and for lighting grounds.	United States.
St. Marys, Mich	General authorization	Mar. 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 821)	Water power to be leased by the Secretary of War upon such terms and conditions as shall be best calculated, in his judgment, to insure the development thereof. A just and reasonable compensation to be paid for use.	Do.
Wabash, Ind., at Mount Carmel	do	Mar. 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 819)	Secretary of War authorized to grant leases or licenses for periods not exceeding 20 years at such rate and on such conditions as may seem to him just, equitable, and expedient.	Do.
Mississippi from St. Paul to Minneapolis.	do	June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., 659)	A reasonable compensation for leases of water power shall be secured to the United States.	Do.
Coosa, Ala., at Lock No. 4	Ragland Water Power Co	Feb. 27, 1911 (36 Stat., 939)	The dam to be property of the United States free of charge. Grantee to have water-power rights for 50 years. United States to have right to construct a lock and to have free electric current for operating and lighting. Grantee to raise height of dam at Lock No. 4 and to stop leaks. Beginning in 1925, grantee shall pay to United States $1 per 10-hour horsepower, with an increase if natural flowage is increased by storage reservoirs.	Private.
Wabash at Mount Carmel, Ill.	Mount Carmel Development Co.	(Feb. 14, 1889 (25 Stat., 670) (Feb. 12, 1901 (31 Stat., 785)	Withdrawal of water shall be under the direction and control of the Secretary of War.	United States.
Rock near Sterling	Sterling Hydraulic Co	Mar. 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1103)	Secretary of War authorized to permit erection of a power station in connection with United States dam. Grantee to waive certain claims against United States.	Do.
White, Ark., above Lock No. 3.	J. A. Omberg, jr	June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 628)	Grantee to purchase lands, construct lock and dam, and give them to the United States free of charge and furnish United States electric current to operate locks, light grounds, etc. Grantee to have use of water power for 99 years.	Private.
Black Warrior, Ala., Lock and Dam No. 17.	General authorization	Aug. 22, 1911 (p. 32, laws, 1st sess. 62d Cong.).	Secretary of War authorized to change detailed plans and specifications so as to increase height of pool level over the dam crest of Lock No. 17, and for the development of water power.	United States.

LIQUEFYING THE CONSTITUTION.

(By Bishop W. A. Candler.)

The historian Grote speaks of the fact that a nation may acquire the habit of "constitutional immorality," and notes such a habit as a mark of national decadence.

Nothing more surely indicates decay in the moral character of a nation than a disposition to break away from the restraints of its constitution. This must be apparent when we consider what is the nature and office of a constitution.

Constitutional government is not, as some vainly talk, a government by the majority; but it is a government by the majority under the restraints and limitations of the constitution. There are things which a majority can not do under constitutional government. A constitution is, therefore, the protection of the minority against the passion and oppression of the majority. Under a republican form of government, in which the people are sovereign, the constitutional restraints put over majorities are like those limitations of law put upon kings under constitutional monarchies. The humblest and obscurest citizen of Great Britain is protected against the oppression of the King by constitutional principles which no British monarch has dared to infract since Charles I lost his head for such infractions. In like manner the poorest and weakest man in the United States is defended against the oppression of the majority by constitutional principles which all the civil officers of the land, from President to constable, are sworn to support. In the absence of such restraints no man's liberty in our country would be secure. It behooves every man, therefore, to insist upon absolute respect and submission to the fundamental law of the Republic and the States.

Constitutions are the embodiment of great fixed principles of right, not subject to sudden changes, as the fickle feelings or transient interests of the majority may dictate. Statutes may vary with varying conditions, but the principles established in a constitution are not subject to such mutations. In the main, constitutional limitations are the expression of essential and eternal rules of right and wrong; they are ethical in their character. When, therefore, men or nations grow impatient of constitutional principles they show thereby a disposition toward immorality and manifest a desire to dethrone righteousness and set up their own willfulness in the place of moral law. Once they set out on such a course, neither they nor anyone else can say where they will stop; their destination becomes as uncertain as capricious desire and lawless expediency can make it. All political conduct under such conditions becomes a mere matter of power, without regard to principle. Demagogues flourish at such times, flattering the majority with high-sounding eulogies of "the people" in order to accomplish their own ambitious designs and selfish ends. All the distinctions of right and wrong become dim and wavering in the minds of the people; conscience grows feeble and virtue withers. Minorities are oppressed, and the individual becomes the sport of popular waves of superheated sentiment. Even demagogues cease to be secure, for one follows another in quick succession as the fitful purposes of a fickle populace change from one sensation to another, just as in the French Revolution men who were the idols of the people on one day were guillotined the next amid cries of popular execration.

It is to be feared that our country is in a danger of this sort. The light and sportive manner in which some among us assume to deal with our constitutional limitations is positively alarming. In a public address widely circulated some years ago Theodore Roosevelt, while President of the United States and sworn to support the Constitution, said, "We need through executive action, through legislative action, and through judicial interpretation and construction of law to increase the power of the Federal Government." Such an utterance fairly construed was nothing less than an exhortation to the officials in every branch of the Government to violate furtively the Constitution which they were sworn to observe faithfully. It was an incitement to commit a crime akin to treason. Since then he has not ceased to take appeals against the Constitution. He is fond of reenacting the Ten Commandments in season and out of season, emphasizing always, "Thou shalt not steal"; but in the words quoted he deliberately counseled that the rights of the States should be systematically stolen and given to the Federal Government. Evidently this energetic talker does not conceive that the commandment against stealing is of universal application; when it serves his ends he invokes it, and when it is in his way he sets it aside without so much as making reference to it.

Now, the worst form of secession is the nullification of the Constitution; for the Union without the Constitution is not the Federal Union, under which the Nation has prospered and grown great, but it is an organized tyranny of an unscrupulous majority trampling under foot the sacred rights of minorities. This proposal to filch the powers of the States to centralize the Federal Government is a revolutionary proposition as truly as if it were a call to arms to overthrow the Government. Orozco and Zapata, in Mexico, make a more open show of revolution, but they are not engaged in a more real or dangerous uprising against constitutional government.

If the Federal Government needs more power to fulfill its proper functions, there is a regular and legitimate way for amending the Constitution; but it does not appertain to the executive, legislative, or judicial departments, or to all of them combined, to steal slyly the reserved rights of the State or the people to confer such power on the Government at Washington.

But does the Federal Government need more power than it now has under the Constitution? Scarcely. It is said that there has been accomplished a perilous concentration of wealth in the hands of a few people in our country during the last 25 years. Suppose we should centralize the Government and that eventually concentrated wealth should get hold of the centralized Federal power. What then would become of the rights of the people? What powerful men would do then would be simply what might be desired by them while wielding this stupendous combination of financial and political power. The limit of their evil deeds would be the boundary of their eager desires. Of course they would prate about "the dear people" while destroying our political institutions and enslaving the Nation. Did any tyrant or set of tyrants ever fail to profess vehemently their devotion to popular rights and interests? The worst of the Cæsars did that.

Men wielding conceptrated wealth and centralized political power would use millions to corrupt the electorate. Such expenditures they would regard as productive investments. They would lay hands on the processes of both the production and distribution of wealth so as to win the votes of the ever numerous classes of the indolent and thriftless, and they would claim benevolence as the motive of the schemes by which they skillfully purchased the favor of the proletariat. Such cant phrases as "social justice," "a square deal for every man," "civic righteousness," and the like would become the shibboleths of the political Pharisees while they fattened by devouring the Nation and flourished by persistent pretenses of righteousness affected for the uses of the market place only. Men who lead revolutions, whether openly or furtively, always promise material good to the multitude. Socialistic schemes are the baits by which nations have always been lured to the subversion of their institutions and beguiled to their own enslavement.

Equally with proposals to violate the Constitution surreptitiously by executive, legislative, and judicial usurpation of power is the proposition to make its amendment easy. A constitution being the embodiment of fixed principles, little subject to change in any particular and in most particulars as unchangeable as eternal right, ought not to be susceptible of too easy amendment. A process of easy amendment reduces a constitution to the level of an ordinary statute. Such ought not to be the case. When a people frame a constitution it is agreed by them that there are some things so settled that they may not be readily changed, and they thus covenant, all with each and each with all, that these fixed principles shall be held inviolable. It amounts to infidelity to sacred pledges when such an instrument is set aside hastily and carelessly.

At what point is our National Constitution hindering any real or worthy progress? Why should it become the object of attack? Is socialism so desirable and settled government so evil that we should be asked to overthrow the structure of our Federal system in order to make way for the visionary schemes of passionate reformers or to gratify the aspirations of inordinate ambition? Let us be sure that when we break settled principles of government and fundamental morals we are not progressives advancing toward a blessed industrial millenium, but prodigals squandering a great inheritance, and that we will soon find ourselves in dire destitution amid a famine in a region of life far from any real good.

A conspicuous man, professing to be an authoritative exponent of a certain picturesque movement, issued from Chicago a few days ago a statement in which he said that our Government was too solid and that it was proposed to "liquefy" the Constitution. That word is exact, even though it express a shameless purpose. It is fortunate that the secret is out and that we know what is proposed. "Liquefy the Constitution!" Make that fluid and fickle which in its very nature ought to be fixed and stable! "Liquefy the Constitution" or make a flood by cutting the dikes which protect good government against perilous waves, and then let us go to sea! And that is called progress! It is revolution.

While publicists debate matters of mere policy the rest of us may sit quietly down to hear without serious alarm the discussion, but when it is openly proposed to revolutionize our system of government patriotic men who fear God and love men can not view the proposal with indifference.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] to consume some of his time.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment to this bill which I will send to the Clerk's desk to have read. I wish to state to the membership of the House that the amendment which I propose to offer is, in fact, House bill 26341, and any gentleman who is interested in it can procure a copy at the desk. This bill was prepared as an amendment, not as an original bill, to be offered to the omnibus dam bill, which was pending a few days ago. I had it printed in the form of a bill, so that the membership of the House might secure copies in the event they desired them.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] have both occupied very few minutes in the presentation of the merits of this case, but in the few minutes which they did consume I submit to the House that each gentleman gave what should be a convincing reason why this bill should not be passed.

A few days ago the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] most vigorously called upon the House to consider his bill, and alleged as an impelling reason therefor that it was in his congressional district; that all the delegation from Alabama favored it in the House; that both Senators from Alabama favored it in the Senate; that the rest of the country had no right to interfere with an enterprise that was satisfactory to their part of the country.

If that were a good reason, Mr. Speaker, if the House should adopt that as the course by which to shape its action in such matters, it means, in the last analysis, that we can never have a general law to regulate water powers in this country, for the good and sufficient reason that there is not a water power anywhere that is not in somebody's congressional district. And whatever bill any committee might report as a general proposition regulating the water powers in this country, in order to meet the objection urged by the gentleman from Alabama and the delegation from Alabama it would be compelled to state in the report accompanying the bill that the water site proposed to be regulated was not situated on the face of the earth. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Alabama a few minutes ago stated that he urged as a reason for the adoption of this bill that a water-power site has already been granted at Lock 12, unhampered by conditions, and therefore it is unfair to put restrictions on the lock to be constructed at No. 18. If that argument is sound, every other gentleman who comes to this House in the times to come will urge exactly the same reason—that you have already granted authority at Lock 12 and Lock 18 in the Coosa River, and therefore you should not put any restrictions on the dam that is to be constructed in his congressional district.

Mr. Speaker, that reason of itself is sufficient to make the House halt to-day and wait until we are fully advised in this matter under consideration and can thrash out a general policy that will be applicable to Lock No. 18 and every other lock and dam hereafter to be constructed in the United States.

The gentleman from Georgia insists that no amendment be put on this bill. Why? What reason does he assign? The reason he gives is the very strongest reason why the bill should be amended. He says that his committee now has under consideration a bill regulating all the water powers in the country, and therefore, strange to relate, this particular water site must be exempt from the provisions of the law which he proposes to apply to all other water sites that may hereafter be authorized by Congress. I submit that, for the reason assigned by the gentleman from Alabama and the reason assigned by the gentleman from Georgia, this bill should either be amended or be defeated.

Mr. Speaker, I am embarrassed by being called upon before the merits of this bill have been presented to the House. I do not know what the intention of the gentleman is, whether it is to make those opposed to it speak first and then occupy all the time in opposition; but if that be true, it is not a fair disposition of the time for and against the bill. The amendment which I offer, as I understand, has only one provision in it that is seriously opposed.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the gentleman a question about his amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Under section 3——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; I ask the gentleman to wait until I get to section 3. If I understand the particular objections to the amendment, and it has been submitted to these gentlemen, it is that the Federal Government is authorized under this amendment to collect tolls; that that is the vital objection to the amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the principal objection I have to his amendment—there may be some smaller objections—is that I deny the right of the Federal Government to tax the people of the State for the use of water running in a stream in their State. If the Government itself builds a dam, I admit the right, if it has created power by building that dam, to charge what it pleases for that; but if the Government itself does not build the dam I contend that the only power it has is to regulate the place where the dam shall be built and how it shall be built, so that it shall not interfere with navigation.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I understood that to be the gentleman's position. But not more than a year ago the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and myself and others stood upon this floor and fought and contended for the passage of the Black Warrior dam bill, in which there was a provision that the dam should be built by private enterprise and not by the Government.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I beg the gentleman's pardon right there.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes. It was to be raised to 63 feet and built in lieu of the dams above there.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the gentleman is wrong about that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I have the bill here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know, but the Government was to build the dam. I had no objection, when the Government built the dam, to their charging for the use of the power they created.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. These gentlemen were to contribute the money themselves to raise this dam to 63 feet, and there was a provision in the bill that they should pay to the Federal Government $1 per horsepower, and that rate was to be readjusted at 10-year intervals. From that bill——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman is not advised as to his facts.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. And from that bill is copied the provision in the amendment which I offer. The first provision is that before these parties may be permitted to construct the dam they must get a written permit therefor from the Secretary of War, which shall contain the stipulations contained in this amendment, which shall be specifically agreed to by the grantee and subscribed by him. The second provision is that the grantee shall pay to the United States annually not less than $1 per horsepower developed, and that thereafter that annual rate shall be readjusted at 10-year periods; provided, that if there is any disagreement the Secretary of War shall fix the charge. He is authorized to do that under the general bridge act, and the language of that act is copied here. It is provided further that the charge shall not be unreasonable or confiscatory.

There can be no difference, so far as the question of Federal power is concerned, whether the Government build the dam or permit the grantee to build it. No corporation can go into the Coosa River and build a dam without first obtaining the permission of Congress. Everybody concedes that. Then I submit that Congress has the power to give its permission on such conditions as we may deem proper. Under the general dam act as it is on the statute books to-day numerous conditions are imposed upon all persons who ask permission to build dams in navigable rivers—among others, that the grantee must maintain fishways so that fish may go up and down the river; the grantee is required to furnish electrical power to operate the locks free of cost, light the Government grounds adjacent to the dam, and so forth. This is where the dam is built wholly by the grantee.

The Government has the right to build the dam—nobody else has. The grantee thereupon asks to be subrogated to this right, and Congress agrees upon such terms and conditions as seem good for the public interests.

Section 3 of the amendment provides for the payment annually of an amount equal to $1 per horsepower developed.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Forestry Bureau has already entered into contracts with private parties for the use of water power on Government reservations where the Government is the sole owner of the lands on both sides of the river.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman will secure me the time that he is taking up now. I have only 15 minutes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will give the gentleman time. The rate per horsepower is fixed at 10 cents for the first year, and gradually increased up to the end of 10 years, and at the end of 10 years the rate is to be $1 per horsepower. Here in this amendment you are fixing to charge these people $1 per horsepower, where the Government does not own a foot of the land.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Before they have sold their power under this amendment they can be charged $1 per horsepower from the very beginning of operations.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. In my opinion the amount to be charged is immaterial. So long as the hand of the Federal Government is there it matters not to me whether the amount is 10 cents or 10 dimes. In Canada, where the Government built the canals, and permits the municipalities to take the water, they charge $2 per horsepower; but that is immaterial. The fact is, as reported by the National Waterways Commission, that hydroelectric power, developed as it is in this country, can be produced at $20 per horsepower per annum less than power can be produced by steam, and that being true, it has occurred to me that one-twentieth of that amount would be a very small charge.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will not the consumer have to pay that dollar?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. In my opinion, the consumer will not. The gentlemen who appeared in the interest of the Niagara Falls development project claimed that they could develop power there for $20 which it costs $40 to develop by steam. They were going to sell for $20 to the manufacturing establishments power that then cost them $40, and those who desired to purchase that cheaper power appeared before the committee also. I asked every one of them whether this cheaper power would be reflected in the price of their finished product, and every one very frankly confessed it would not. So that when you save to this company the dollar a horsepower or the 50 cents a horsepower, you save it to the company and not to the consumers.

Mr. AUSTIN rose.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will make his speech in his own time and not interrupt me. He can get time yielded to him.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, it is utterly impossible for me to explain this amendment in five minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I will yield the gentleman 10 minutes instead of 5.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, there are only very general observations that I can make. I had hoped before I took the floor to speak for 15 minutes that I would have heard from the argument on the other side something to which to make reply. We are now able, according to the statement of the engineers, to produce 10,000 horsepower at this plant. Who is willing to say that in the future we will not be producing 100,000 horsepower there? Mr. Leighton, of the Geological Survey, reports that there are now 200,000,000 horsepower possible in this country from water power. Multiply that by 10, as it will be multiplied in the near future, and one can see what will result.

The first man who put his wheel in a running stream developed so much power. The next step forward was an overshot wheel and it increased that, and from that it has grown to-day to the turbine, which has multiplied the number of horsepower by an hundredfold. At Niagara Falls now, as the progress of science has developed new methods, they have been able to increase from 10 horsepower per cubic foot to 20 horsepower a cubic foot, and no man is willing to say that in the near future some wizard like Edison will not appear who will make it possible to produce 100,000 horsepower at this Coosa River plant instead of 10,000; that instead of 35,000,000, as exist to-day, we will have 350,000,000 primary horsepower in this country, and then every home in the land may be lighted and heated by hydroelectric power, and every wheel that is turned will be turned by that power. When that time comes, if we proceed upon the theory suggested by the gentleman from Alabama that when all of the local representatives insist upon it, it is the business of no one else and none shall therefore speak, we will have a water-power trust in this country in comparison with which the Steel Trust which he mentioned the other day and the Standard Oil Trust will be as nothing, will seem as mere benevolent societies organized for the dissemination of Christian charity. There is no trust possible in this country that will have the power which the water-power trust will have, unless the Federal Government puts its hand upon it and regulates it; and if we are now to give it away before the committee which has it under consideration has been able to thrash out the general policy, if we are to give this away and all of the others that are now pending before this House, it will be too late to legislate, we will then have locked the stable door after the mare is gone. I hope that the House to-day will realize the importance of this matter and not be influenced by considerations such as have been suggested, that the development is favored by the local community, and that all of the people in this country dependent upon this power have no interest in it.

Only a few years ago this power could be transmitted 15 miles. It is now transmitted 200 miles and in some places 300.

Who will say that in 20 years from now it will not be conveyed 2,000 miles? Who would be willing to say that in the course of the years it will not be transmitted without wires at all, and then what will happen? Where this power can now be sold at half of the cost of developing it by steam, the developments of the future will make it possible to sell it at 10 per cent of that, and who can compete then in any manufacturing enterprise in this country with those who control all of the power? Under my amendment it is proposed that these parties who are to get this right shall not transfer it to others without the consent of the Federal Government. If gentlemen do not wish to have this transferred instantly to some water-power companies that are associated together throughout this country, the water-power trust, so called, why not agree to that amendment and make it impossible, then, to create a trust? My amendment provides that this company shall have incorporated within its charter a provision requiring it to submit to such reasonable regulations as to its charges and rates as may be fixed by the State of Alabama. The Federal Government is not attempting to come in and usurp the functions of the State. This amendment simply provides for reasonable regulation by the State of Alabama, and when the power enters into interstate commerce that the grantee shall then submit to such reasonable regulations as may be prescribed by the Federal Government.

Let me read the amendment:

(d) That the grantee shall have incorporated in its charter a provision requiring it to abide by whatever reasonable regulation of the rates and of the service may be prescribed by the State wherein the power is developed and sold, or of any delegated agency of the State, whether that agency be a State commission, municipality, or other local governing body.

Is that any usurpation of the sovereign rights of the State? The Federal Government is to attempt regulation only when the power enters into interstate commerce:

(e) That whenever the hydroelectric power produced with the surplus water at said dam enters into interstate commerce the grantee shall agree to abide by whatever reasonable regulation of its rates and of its service may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

There are other matters, but all of similar purport, in the amendment, and I challenge any gentleman here to point out specifically his objections to them.

It is no answer to say that this power will be used in the manufacture of some useful and needed article of commerce. All the water powers of the country are used for some legitimate industrial development. Coal oil is just as necessary to the farmer as fertilizer but it is not therefore to his interest that the Standard Oil Co. be permitted to run amuck in the country.

Railroads are essential to his prosperity, but he none the less wants them subjected to reasonable regulation. He is deeply interested in having the latest improved farming machinery, but he is still opposed to the unlawful methods of the Harvester Trust. We are asking only that this company, when it secures the right to build this dam and develop this power, shall submit its activities to reasonable, not unreasonable, regulation by the State of Alabama and contribute a very small, an almost infinitesimal, part of its saving in the cost of producing power to the General Treasury.

One other provision of the amendment is that the franchise or permit granted by this bill shall not be transferred to anyone else without the consent of the Federal authority.

What objection can there be to that? If this company does not intend to secure this right and then transfer it to the so-called "water-power trust," why not let it be so provided in this bill.

I put into the RECORD some weeks ago an extract from the report of the Inland Waterways Commission showing how completely the water-power sites of California had been gobbled up by a few companies. The same is true in Pennsylvania, and is measurably true in Tennessee. We are trying to prevent its recurrence in Alabama and in all the other States before all the power sites have been unconditionally given away.

On the other hand, my amendment proposes to be more liberal with this company than is provided in the general law.

The bill as it now reads subjects this company to all the provisions of the general dam act, and that provides that at the end of 50 years all the power houses, and so forth, are to become the property of the Government without compensation.

Under my amendment, at the end of 50 years the Government can not take that property except upon payment of its reasonable value, and the reason for that is plain. If this property has to be confiscated at the end of 50 years, the company has the right in the meantime to create a sinking fund out of its profits with which to meet the cost of its building, and so forth, and that means that the people to-day must pay more than the power is worth in order that those who come after us 50 years hence will get theirs for less. All of this matter has been thrashed out by the National Waterways Commission. We appointed a commission, set them to work, gave them power and money to investigate this question. We appointed eminent men, lawyers for whose opinion we have great respect, headed by the great Senator from Ohio, Senator BURTON. They have, after a most laborious investigation, after examinations made by experts throughout the country, made their report, and this amendment which I introduced follows the recommendations of that report. They have given it as their opinion, after the most elaborate investigation, that the Federal Government has the power to lay these conditions, and they have recommended that no further power sites be given away at all until Congress has had an opportunity to act upon the recommendations of that commission. I had expected to devote some time to the question of the power of the Federal Government, but I see now that it is impossible. We are not opposed to the development of water powers; we want them developed. We want railroads in this country, but we want the right to regulate them; we want the water powers of this Nation developed, but that commission reports they can not be developed; that financiers will not invest their money in their bonds until some general policy is thrashed out, until they are freed from the conflicting requirements of 48 different policies established by the 48 different States of the Union. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TALCOTT of New York). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to briefly call attention to something of the history of the navigation of this river in order that gentlemen may see the importance to navigation of the construction of this dam. The only interest I have in it, Mr. Speaker, is from that standpoint and in the large air-nitrogen factory it will promote. The dam is not to be constructed in my district, but the Coosa River, whose navigation we have been trying to secure for years, runs through a portion of my district. It is a river that forms at Rome, Ga., by the confluence of two other streams. It is navigable for 180 miles, from Rome for some 20 miles below Gadsden, where I live. Then obstructions occur for a distance of 87 miles. Just below where these obstructions end there is a confluence of this river with the Tallapoosa, forming the Alabama, and then it continues to Mobile Bay. With these obstructions removed, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this river is the longest navigable stream in the South, next to the Mississippi, that flows into deep water. From Rome, Ga., it is navigable for more than 100 miles above Rome, by the Ostanaula, one of the confluent rivers. We have, then, with these obstructions removed, 825 miles of continuous navigation, running through the richest mineral and agricultural land in any part of that entire section of country. We have been trying for years to secure the removal of these obstructions by the Government, and have at last secured the erection of four locks and dams on the upper stretch of the river. This dam will relieve the Government of the necessity of building three dams, thus relieving the Government of the expense of $1,622,000 in the construction of this dam alone, leaving the Government to construct one lock, which is to be used in connection with the dam, and throwing out two others, where the Government would necessarily construct both locks and dams and buy the land and build houses and maintain lock keepers' homes. As to Dam 18, as has been said by my colleague from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], there are English capitalists who propose to build this dam, who have constructed in Canada, on the Niagara, an immense cyanamide plant for the purpose of making nitrogen fertilizer from the air, something that has not been done up to this time at any place in the United States. It has been done in Norway and other countries of Europe. The granting of the right at Lock 12 will not give them power to run this to its full capacity. They propose to construct a plant which can manufacture 15,000 tons of nitrogen per annum. This is the highest ingredient of fertilizers and the most costly, of course.

In that way the farmers and agricultural people of our section of the country, where they use so much fertilizer, will be immensely benefited. They have already secured the right to construct Dam No. 12. They are at work upon that. The construction of Dam No. 12 opens up 20 miles of navigation of the 87 that remains to be opened. The construction of Dam 18, where this concession is sought, will open up 30 miles more. These people, without asking a cent of aid from the Federal Government, propose to construct 30 miles of navigation. According to the report of the engineers, the cost of the construction of these dams would be equivalent to $6.40 per horsepower to the Government per annum. I have it here, expressed on a rental basis, that if the Government itself should build a dam at this place—just this dam—and should furnish 10,000 continuous horsepower, the Government would have to receive $6.40 per horsepower as rental in order to earn 4 per cent on the estimated cost of the dam. The highest price that the Government has yet charged, so far as I know, is $2 per horsepower. The cost of this dam, according to the report of the Government engineers, will be about $1,600,000. The annual interest on this at 4 per cent would be $64,000. The company can generate 10,000 horsepower per year. Divide $64,000 by 10,000 and you have $6.40 per horsepower, which would be the equivalent of what the company would pay per annum.

Gentlemen who oppose this proposition, I think, are going far afield of the old doctrine of State rights when they undertake to authorize a bureaucratic Government, a central Government, to control the waterpowers that flow across a riparian owner's land. Under the Constitution all the rights the Government has, Mr. Speaker, are simply those for the purpose of navigation. Here is a proposition that will aid the Government in the navigation, opening up 30 miles in that river, and here is a doctrine that has been announced time and time again by the Supreme Court of the United States, and many cases are collated by Justice Peckham announcing this doctrine in Water Co. v. Water Board (168 U. S., 358–365):

The following proposition is stated in said opinion:

The jurisdiction of the State over this question of riparian ownership has been always, from the foundation of the Government, recognized and admitted by this court. The extent of the plaintiff's riparian right of property was therefore the subject of adjudication by the State court, and the rule has been definitely stated by that court in its judgment, which is now under review.

I hope gentlemen will read this opinion and run down the various cases cited.

In Minnesota it was held, and in the Supreme Court of the United States it was so held; in many cases in the Union the question was taken up to the Supreme Court of the United States, and when it came to that court of last resort the court has said the State courts alone had the right to control the water power of navigable streams as to riparian owners for the use thereof, except when navigation is affected.

In State v. Mill Co. (26 Minn., 229–231), it is said:

The general rule arrived at was that a riparian owner may use the waters of a navigable stream adjoining his land for any purpose for his own advantage so he does not impede navigation, and in the absence of any counterclaim by the State or the United States. He may erect dams there, and such other structures as will promote and facilitate the enjoyment of this right.

The same doctrine is clearly announced in Hall v. Hobart (186 Fed. Rep., 108). This is stated to be the rule whether the stream is entirely an intrastate or a boundary stream by the United States Supreme Court in United States v. Chandler Dunbar Co. (209 U. S., 447). (See also Grand Rapids Co. v. Butler, 159 U. S., 87.)

Alabama, Connecticut, and in fact all the other States, except perhaps Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and Maine, have, by their supreme courts, announced the same doctrine.

Senator NELSON, in Senate Report No. 585, Sixtieth Congress, first session, says:

The Federal Government under its taxing power could possibly reach to a tax on water powers, but it must be general and uniform throughout the United States. It must apply to all dams and water powers in the United States.

In the same report he says:

It has been customary in many cases to apply to Congress for a Federal license, and the granting of it, while not necessary, serves a twofold purpose: First, it authorizes the Federal Government, through the War Department, to control and direct the construction of the dam; and, second, it recognizes the fact, which might otherwise require proof, that the dam will not affect the navigability of the stream in its navigable portions. * * * But in such cases the Federal Government has nothing to sell, and therefore has no moral or legal ground to demand compensation in any form.

In support of these views he cites Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S., 46); U. S. v. Rio Grande Co. (174 U. S., 690).

Alabama has already granted the right to riparian owners of the use of navigable waters for power purposes, and has fixed the conditions and limitations on the use of the same. Then, what right or property has the Federal Government in this case to fix any condition other than such as will protect navigation?

The object of the company, as said before, is to secure power to manufacture air nitrogen for fertilizer. One horsepower will produce 1 ton of fertilizer per annum. Should the Government levy a tax of $2 per horsepower, the inevitable result would be to increase the price of the fertilizer $2 per ton, and our farmers would have it to pay. Thus, the consumer would be forced to further pay tribute to the coffers of a rich Government, to be wasted on battleships and a standing army. Gentlemen, this is unjust; it is undemocratic and unpatriotic. Would any gentleman here contend that Congress has the right to make a farm owner on the banks of the Coosa River pay for the water which his cattle and horses drink, or with which he irrigates his fields? Yet the principle is exactly the same.

In fact, my illustration is even a stronger case. In the case of the farm the water is consumed in its use. In the case of the water power the water, like that in Tennyson's "Brook," "goes on forever," is not depleted in its use, navigation is promoted, and the Government saved a vast expenditure of money.

The company owns the lands on each side of the river and simply asks to be allowed to use the water for this magnanimous purpose and at the same time vastly aid the Government and thousands of people. We have long hoped to see boats running upon the bosom of this splendid river from Rome, Ga., to Mobile; now, gentlemen, when we are about to realize these fond hopes do not blast them.

I will set out as a part of my remarks extracts from a little booklet on cyanamid, which I am sure Members will find interesting and instructive. Also, extracts from several Government publications on the same subject:

MANUFACTURE OF CYANAMID.

A mixture of lime and coke is heated in an electric furnace. At a temperature of 6,000° F. the lime and coke combine and form calcium carbide. It is a dazzling, white-hot liquid as taken from the furnaces. After cooling the carbide is crushed, packed in steel vessels, and again heated by electricity to redness. Pure nitrogen, obtained from the atmosphere by the liquid-air process, is now added and combines directly with the carbide, forming calcium cyanamid. On cooling, the mass is removed from the vessels in which it is contained, is ground, and treated by a special process to eliminate every trace of unchanged carbide. Its free lime is then converted into stable organic compounds. The final material is granulated and packed in bags.

AS A DRYER IN FERTILIZER MIXTURES.

Cyanamid has a double drying action, due, first, to its extreme dryness (0.50 per cent moisture) and, second, to its neutralizing action on the free acids of the acid phosphate.

The slow heat generated by the neutralization of the free acids in the acid phosphate drives the moisture from the wet materials to the drier ones of the mixture and gives the entire mass a uniform dryness.

Its large capacity for fixing water chemically reduces all kinds of wet goods to excellent condition.

PREVENTS LOSS OF NITRATE NITROGEN.

It is well known that when nitrate of soda is mixed with acid phosphate in ordinary complete mixtures there is a loss of from 10 per cent to 20 per cent of the nitrate nitrogen. This is due to the production of niter fumes by the active acidity of the acid phosphate.

The use of cyanamid in the mixture with nitrate of soda absolutely prevents the generation and escape of the niter fumes, simply by neutralizing the active acid properties of the acid phosphate.

PREVENTS BAG ROTTING.

Bag rotting is usually due to the liberation of hydrochloric acid gas in complete mixtures by the action of the free acids in acid phosphate on muriate of potash.

Cyanamid properly used neutralizes all active acids and thus effectively prevents the formation of destructive gases.

The prevention of bag troubles and their resultant expense to the manufacturer justifies the use of cyanamid in all complete mixtures.

LIME IN CYANAMID.

The lime in cyanamid adds a distinct agricultural value to mixed fertilizers. Every 100 pounds of cyanamid adds to the soil an amount of lime equivalent to 75 pounds of lime hydrate.

This lime sweetens the soil, loosens and warms it, and increases its bacterial activity. The maximum benefit can not be obtained from an acid fertilizer applied to an acid soil. Cyanamid makes the fertilizer neutral and corrects soil acidity.

AVAILABILITY.

Ninety-six per cent of the nitrogen in cyanamid is soluble in cold water and is therefore available. The neutral permanganate test gives an availability of from 87 per cent to 92 per cent—the sample used being too large to be entirely dissolved.

SOIL ACTION.

As fast as cyanamid dissolves in the soil solution it is converted into the organic compound, urea. This substance exists in large quantities in Peruvian guano. It is directly assimilated by plants and faster than any other known nitrogen compound. If the plant is not ready to take up all the urea formed, it reacts with the soil and is fixed therein so firmly that no amount of rain can wash out the nitrogen.

The nitrogen now being in the form of double ammonium compounds it is readily absorbed by the plant as needed.

AGRICULTURALLY.

The question of cyanamid's fitness for agricultural purposes has been thoroughly investigated by European and American agriculturists and chemists, and all results are favorable to its general use. It has passed the experimental stage and is extensively used in continental Europe, Japan, and America. It can be successfully applied to all soils in any climate and under a diversity of crops.

CYANAMID IN STORAGE.

Numerous accurate factory and laboratory tests in various sections of the United States and Europe have proven without exception that cyanamid does not lose ammonia in storage.

Occasionally the percentage of nitrogen decreases, but in every case there is a proportionate increase in the weight of stored material. The pounds of ammonia in storage always remains constant.

Increase in weight is due to cyanamid absorbing carbon dioxide and moisture from the air, but most of the moisture goes into complex nitrogen compounds.

The change in analysis of the present grade of cyanamid is so small as to be negligible.

AS AN INSECT DESTROYER.

Engineer Vincent Albanes, Palermo, says in fertilizing garden crops insects entirely abandoned field where cyanamid was used and badly damaged similar unfertilized crops in neighboring fields.

Mr. Francesco Lozzi, Vittoria, Italy, says that with cyanamid he obtained three times usual quantity of potatoes, all perfectly sound, free from insects which follow the use of stable manure.

ATMOSPHERIC NITROGEN.

ABSTRACTS AND QUOTATIONS.

[From the Reports of the Department of Commerce and Labor, Bureau of Manufactures, and from Daily Consular and Trade Reports, upon the subjects of the "Utilization of atmospheric nitrogen" and "Manufacture of air nitrate fertilizers."]

Mr. A. H. Baldwin, Chief of the Bureau of Manufactures, writes the following letter of submittal in submitting the report of Thomas H. Norton, Consul at Chemnitz, Germany, on the subject of the "Utilization of atmospheric nitrogen," as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
BUREAU OF MANUFACTURES,
Washington, April 3, 1912.

To Hon. CHARLES NAGEL,
Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith a report on the air-nitrate industry by Consul Thomas H. Norton, of Chemitz, who is on special detail for the Department of Commerce and Labor for the investigation of the chemical industries of Europe. For many years the world has been dependent on the nitrate beds of Chile for supplies of combined nitrogen, and as these beds are not inexhaustible, and as the demand for combined nitrogen by manufacturing and agricultural interests is rapidly increasing, serious efforts have been made to discover new deposits, and many prominent chemists have endeavored to perfect processes for utilizing atmospheric nitrogen. The report deals with the present supply of nitrogen, the synthetic production of ammonia, the synthesis of nitric acid, hydrocyanic acid, cyanides, nitrides, and calcium cyanamide from atmospheric nitrogen, and coal waste and peat as sources of ammonia. It should be of value, in view of the fact that the United States now spends over $32,000,000 abroad for nitrogen in its various combinations.

Respectfully, A. H. BALDWIN, Chief of Bureau.

On page 10 of the same report, as follows:

"* * * The United States is now sending abroad over $32,000,000 annually for the purchase of nitrogen in its various combinations, and over half of the sum is expended for a single item and goes to a single country—Chile. Further, nearly all of the nitrogen contained in the list of more valuable nitrogenous compounds is derived from Chile saltpeter exported to European countries, chiefly Germany.

"The fact that the United States, in common with all civilized countries, and especially with all manufacturing countries, is so dependent upon this one source, and the additional fact that the deposits of nitrate in Chile are not particularly extensive and are destined at an early date to complete exhaustion, constitute the nitrogen problem."

On page 23 of the same report, as follows:

"No attempt is made by the Chilean Government to restrict the output, although there is an export duty of $11.16 per short ton on saltpeter. From this one source 60 per cent of the Chilean revenues are now derived. During the 31 years, beginning with 1879, the industry and agriculture of the world have paid a tax of $425,000,000 to Chile."

On pages 27 and 28 of the same report, as follows:

"It is evident that the deposits of nitrate outside of Chile, barring new and not very probable discoveries, possess a purely local and transient importance. They have no bearing upon the world's problem.

"The world's demand for nitrogen is rapidly increasing. This demand can be met in four ways, as follows:

"1. By a temporarily increased supply of saltpeter from deposits, soon, however, to be exhausted.

"2. By an increased supply of ammonia as a by-product of coal and peat, dependent on a general reform in the use of these materials as fuel, and limited by the extent to which they may be used as sources of light and heat, and limited, further, in point of time, by the world's supply of fossil fuel, with a possible exhaustion within a few centuries.

"3. By the closest economy in preserving all waste forms of combined nitrogen, vegetable or animal, so that they may be utilized as plant food.

"4. By the technical transformation of atmospheric nitrogen into combined forms available for the needs of agriculture and the arts."

In a publication of the Department of Commerce and Labor, issued in 1909, on the "Manufacture of Air Nitrate Fertilizers," by Henry Bordewich, consul general at Christiania, Norway, and W. H. H. Webster, consul at Niagara Falls, Canada, on page 5, will be found the following:

"The possibility of manufacturing nitrate fertilizers from the air, on a commercial scale, has been successfully demonstrated in Norway, where plants that utilize the vast water power of that country have been erected. There has recently been completed in Canada a plant for the manufacture of such fertilizers, which will derive its power from Niagara Falls, and it is stated that other establishments will be erected in the United States at points where water power and the necessary raw materials are available. The effect of this new industry on both the domestic and the foreign trade of the United States will no doubt be far-reaching."

On page 6 of the same report, as follows:

"For the manufacture of air nitrate fertilizers on a commercial scale, cheap electrical power is essential, and for this reason water power for generating electricity is sought. Limestone and coke are used in large quantities, and supplies of these materials, if available at relatively low cost, prove important factors in reducing the cost of manufacture and in assuring the success of the industry. It is estimated that the undeveloped water power of the United States is equivalent to approximately 30,000,000 horsepower.

"With the rapid appreciation in recent years of the cost of fertilizer materials, their much more general use, and the prospect that a few decades at most will witness the exhaustion of the Chilean deposits of nitrates, it is not surprising that efforts have been made to draw upon other sources, and especially to utilize the supply of nitrogen in the air. With limestone and coke in abundance and vast water power unused, it would appear that the new processes by which the air is drawn upon for nitrogen might enable the United States to manufacture fertilizers in sufficient quantity to keep at home the $17,000,000 now going abroad annually for such goods."

On page 13 of the same report, Consul Webster writes as follows:

"Within the past year an entirely new industry has been established in Canada—one which has attracted a great deal of attention because of its direct bearing on the cost and production of foodstuffs."

On page 16 of the same report, Mr. Webster says:

"The exhaustion of soils in the United States has increased with great rapidity in recent years, and this has resulted in the establishment of great fertilizer industries, there being invested in factories for this purpose alone in the United States about $70,000,000, and yet the fertilizer industry is said to be only in its infancy. The world's chief supply of nitrogen comes from the Chilean desert, from which was exported in one recent year $75,000,000 worth of nitrate, practically 80 per cent of which was used in agriculture. During the last decade the exportation of Chilean nitrate has increased 60 per cent in quantity, 60 per cent in price, and 250 per cent in total value. The Chilean Government estimates that the nitrate fields will be exhausted in about 45 years."

From Daily Consular and Trade Reports, No. 3427, of March 12, 1909, on page 14, as follows:

"Representatives of European interests manufacturing air nitrates by hydroelectric power for fertilizers are in the United States to see what can be done in the way of securing large water powers for establishing such factories in this country. An industry of this kind is needed, as the imports of Chilean nitrate of soda now amount to $14,000,000 a year. Difficulty is being experienced, however, in securing suitable water powers at reasonable cost. Governments of other countries are said to be offering inducements for the location of the extensive nitrate mills which the company proposes to erect."

From Daily Consular and Trade Reports, No. 3689, of January 19, 1910, on page 13, as follows:

"Supplementing previous articles in Consular and Trade Reports on the manufacture of air nitrates for fertilizer in Norway, Germany, and Niagara Falls, Canada, it is learned from British consular reports that the industry is undergoing rapid expansion in the first-named country, where nearly $15,000,000 will be invested.

"Though there are vast water powers in the United States running to waste which could be utilized to produce this article, nothing has yet been done in that line, although this country is buying annually about $15,000,000 worth of Chilean nitrates."

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON].

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, of course, in the brief time allotted to me I can not say very much about this important subject.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will yield six minutes to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am obliged to my friend, but even in that time I can not hope to say very much. We all know the business conditions which confront the House at this time.

Mr. Speaker, this bill on its face shows that it is for the utilization of a natural resource. We hear a great deal in these days about the conservation of our natural resources, and here is a bill that provides for the utilization and conservation at once of a great water power down in Alabama that is now going to waste, and the bill shows that the dam by which this water power is to be utilized is to be erected at the expense of a corporation authorized by the laws of the State of Alabama to erect a dam, or incorporate it under the laws of Alabama. And the bill also shows that the right to alter, amend, or repeal it is reserved to the Federal Government. So it seems, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is in the interest of the conservation and utilization of a great natural resource, of a great water power now going to waste and benefiting nobody. There is but one legal proposition, I think, underlying the controversy, and that is the power of the Federal Government to collect tolls in a dam erected by private capital.

Mr. Speaker, the power of the Federal Government over the navigable streams is derived from the commerce clause of the Constitution and nowhere else—the power to regulate commerce between the States. For when we look to the exercise of a Federal power, the Federal Government being a government of delegated and limited powers, we must look to the organic instrument to see the power that the Federal Government seeks to invoke or apply in any given case. If there is any authority on the part of the Federal Government to collect tolls for the utilization of flowing water, which the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi proposes, it is derived—if it can be derived at all—from the power to regulate commerce between the States. No grant of such power can be found elsewhere in the Constitution.

The Federal Government has nowhere the power to set up and carry on the business of making and selling water power. Its control over a navigable stream is for the sole purpose of regulating the commerce between the States, and that means to improve that stream for the benefit of the commerce between the States and to keep that stream free of obstruction for the benefit of commerce between the States.

Now, it is said that the Federal Government can exercise the taxing power. It can not do that in this case. The taxing clause is limited by the words "taxes must be uniform throughout the United States." But the power to levy this toll can not be derived from the taxing power. If it can be derived anywhere, it must be from the power to regulate commerce; and, Mr. Speaker, I think that the power and authority of the Federal Government is limited to regulation for the specific purpose of navigation, and that all other power and all other interest or authority, both sovereign and proprietary, belongs to the State or to the individual riparian owners. I do not believe that the Federal Government has the right, where private capital is authorized to construct a dam, to require the constructors of that dam to pay a toll for the water that goes over that dam. In other words, the water does not belong to the Federal Government. To sell water power is no part or parcel of the regulation of commerce between the States. It is a business enterprise, it is a business undertaking, that the Constitution of the United States does not authorize the Federal Government to embark in. It is not connected with navigation. The sale of the water power in this case where the dam is to be constructed by private capital is something that the Federal Government is not concerned in.

It is worthy of remark that the pending bill is not a case where the Federal Government has built a dam and then permits private parties to use the water flowing from that dam. Here the Alabama corporation proposes to construct and maintain the dam at its own expense for the purpose of improving the navigability of the river and taking for itself as compensation the incidental benefit to be derived by utilizing the overflowing water.

As early as Pollard v. Hagan (3 Howard, 212) the Supreme Court held that the shores of navigable waters and the soils under them were not granted by the Constitution to the United States, but were reserved to the States, respectively. In this case the court said:

> This right of eminent domain over the shores and the soils under the navigable waters, for all municipal purposes, belongs exclusively to the States within their respective territorial jurisdictions, and they, and they only, have the constitutional power to exercise it.

Blackstone in substance states that it is an elementary proposition that nobody, whether sovereign or individual, owns the waters themselves of a running stream, and that the right, whether it be of sovereign or subject, is simply to the beneficial use of the waters as they naturally flow (2 Blackstone, 18), and this doctrine is upheld in United States v. Chandler-Dunbar Water Power Co. (209 U. S., 447).

But, Mr. Speaker, owing to the brief time which I have, I must pretermit further discussion of this question. The Supreme Court in the Pollard case recognized that the act admitting Alabama into the Union provided—

> That all navigable waters within said State shall forever remain public highways, free to the citizens of the State and of the United States without any tax, duty, impost, or toll therefor imposed by the said State—

And the court held there that the United States did not possess any more power over the navigable waters of Alabama than it possessed over the navigable waters of the original States. The title to the shore and lands under the water being in the State—> the lands are subject to such regulation and control, under the condition, however, of not interfering with regulations which may be made by Congress with regard to public navigation and commerce.

The facts of the case presented by this bill are that an Alabama corporation asks permission of Congress to build at its own expense and operate a dam across the Coosa River in Alabama—> at a place suitable to the interests of navigation * * * in accordance with the act of Congress to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters.

And the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act authorizing the construction and maintenance of a dam is expressly reserved to Congress. It is admitted that the proposed bill would help make navigable a stream which is now in fact not navigable. This Alabama corporation proposes to pay for this improvement of the navigation of this river. The Federal authorities have said that it will improve navigation and not obstruct navigation. Why not let the improvement of the navigability of the river be thus made free of expense to the Government of the United States? And why not let the people of Alabama have permission to conserve this great water power, now flowing uselessly or in wild waste to the Mexican Sea? The spirit that would deny such use of this water to the people of Alabama is even narrower than the spirit which actuated the dog in the manger, for while the dog could not eat the hay he did use it as a bed. Here this water is not used for any purpose whatever. It is not conserved, but is wasted. This Alabama corporation is no part of any trust. It proposes to take of the abundant coke and limestone in Alabama and by use of this water power to combine the residuum of such coke and limestone with nitrogen extracted from the air and thereby make a valuable element of commercial fertilizers. Any tyro knows that the three principal elements of plant food are phosphate, potash, and ammonia or nitrogen.

The most expensive of these elements is nitrogen. We get our phosphate largely from the phosphate rocks of Tennessee, South Carolina, and Florida. We get most of the potash from Germany. We use dried blood, dried fish, and barnyard manure for nitrogen. But these do not supply the agricultural demands for nitrogen. Hence we import into the United States from Chile every year about $32,000,000 worth of nitrate of soda, upon which there is paid a tax to the Chilean Government of $11.16 per ton. Upon an average our farmers have to pay about $50 per ton for this nitrate of soda. This Alabama company proposes to manufacture nitrogen and thereby keep at home a large part of this money which goes to Chile. Alabama is blessed with the coke, coal, and limestone in a stone's throw of this proposed water power, and therefore if permitted to construct this dam can manufacture the nitrogen and sell it to the farmers of Alabama and adjacent States at a much lower cost than they can buy the Chilean nitrate of soda. Why not let this benefit go to the farmers, and why not save these millions of money at home instead of sending them abroad? The farmers of the South are doing their part to lessen the high cost of living. They are engaging more and more in intensive and scientific farming, and as a part of their plan to make the soil yield more abundantly of corn, small grain, cotton, fruits, and vegetables they are compelled to use more and more commercial fertilizers. I appeal to this House to pass this beneficent act and let the farmers of Alabama and adjacent States be supplied with cheaper commercial nitrogen. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I stand for the development of the resources of this country, and I am particularly interested in the movement to develop the resources of the South—an extremely fertile country that has too long remained dormant while the other sections have been progressing along industrial lines. I would like to see every river in the South—there are many of them there—opened up, so that the fertility of the land might be utilized, the mines might be reached and operated, and the navigation developed. Alabama in particular is a State in which there are many rivers, rivers of great importance if they are properly improved and developed.

But when States come to Congress, as they now do, having stood against the development proposed in other sections, and demand the opening up without limitation of certain streams for the purposes of water power, it induces one to hesitate and to ask just whither we are drifting.

Had these seven or eight propositions come into this House during the last Congress, bills in behalf of private individuals, affecting navigation by the construction of dams for the creation of water power, there would have been such an outcry as would have reached to high Heaven. But things are different now. Our friends who are looking forward to the development of their country—and very properly so—who would have held their noses two or three years ago had any proposition of this kind been introduced in this House, have changed position.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman that no Member of this House from Alabama has ever opposed the granting of these dam rights?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am glad to hear the gentleman from Alabama say that. I know he wants to see the true and proper development of the water power of his State, and I rejoice in the fact that he is taking the progressive side of this question. But in the limited time allotted to me I want to speak of the failure of the bill now under consideration to properly conserve the resources of the country and of the particular State to which the bill applies, and to protect the interests of the consumers of that water power which it is proposed to create by this grant of the Government.

This bill is a bill which permits the Alabama Power Co., unknown and without responsibility, so far as the information of this House is concerned, to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the Coosa River, in the State of Alabama. So far, so good. Suppose we had brought in a bill of this kind two years ago; would not our friends on the other side have arisen at once and with one voice asked, Who is the Alabama Power Co.? What is there behind the Alabama Power Co.? What is its responsibility, and who will pay if the Alabama Power Co. fails to make good? This is but one of a series of bills that have been brought in suddenly——

Mr. CLAYTON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have not the time, unless I may have five minutes more.

Mr. CLAYTON. I suppose that the State authorities will take care of all those matters.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I hope that may be so.

Mr. CLAYTON. We have ample State laws and very honest officials down there who will see to it that all the restrictions that the people need are imposed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I hope that may be so, but in order to make my statement I shall have to proceed. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, through the chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], has another bill upon the calendar which provides that the same governmental privilege shall be granted to the Hydro-Electric Co. of the State of Tennessee to build four dams upon the Clinch River. I have no question with regard to the propriety of this thing if properly safeguarded, for I should like to have the water power developed on the Clinch River.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In addition to that, this omnibus bill, brought in by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, provides that Ralph Morrison shall have the right to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the Osage River in Miller County, Mo. We have a right to ask who Ralph Morrison is, and what is his responsibility, and who stands behind him, and who will make good if he fails.

Then, again, the bill provides that the Kootenai Power Construction Co. shall have the right to build a dam across the Kootenai River in the State of Montana.

Then authority is given to the Great Northern Development Co. to build a dam in the State of Iowa, and to the Clinch River Power Co. to build one in Tennessee, and to Carl J. Kiefer and Laurent Lowenberg to build two dams across Duck River in Hickman County, Tenn. May we not ask who these gentlemen are and what their responsibility is?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I regret very much that I can not.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman has asked a question, and now he denies me the opportunity to answer it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have not the time. The bill also gives M. C. McCanless, W. C. Hale, W. H. Mullins, John Loop, and E. M. Grant, of Morristown, Tenn., the right to build a dam across the Clinch River in the State of Tennessee. Who are these gentlemen?

It also gives authority to B. E. Debler to build a dam or dams across the Current River in Ripley, Carter, and Shannon Counties, Mo. What assurance have we about Mr. Debler?

I ask gentlemen upon the other side of the House if they are prepared in this way to vote away these rights to individuals and concerns when we have here no word as to their responsibility and the right is to be granted without any limitation whatever.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania asked me a question and then declined to yield to me to answer it. I ask for one minute in which to answer him.

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the gentleman one minute.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania ought to be fair. There is not a word of truth in the statement of anybody that we have granted away any privilege to anybody except to consent for a dam to be built in each case under the authority of the State in which the river is located. The only consent we have to grant is that they may build a dam under the authority and jurisdiction of the State, and each bill requires the express authority and control by the State, and if the gentleman lives in a State so unworthy of statehood that it is unable or unwilling to regulate and control property, property rights, and enterprises, and the conduct of its citizens, he ought to run away from that State if he has any self-respect. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] the other half minute.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in reply to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to the guardianship that Congress ought to exercise over the probable users of this hydroelectric power that the State of Alabama in her sovereign capacity has chartered this corporation and that it is amenable and subject to the laws of that State. The users of this hydroelectric power which is proposed to be generated will be subject to the control of the State, and the people of the State of Alabama are quite willing and able to see that their State laws shall take care of all these matters.

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE].

[Mr. CLINE addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the immediate question that is pending before the House is the passage of the bill to give to the Alabama Power Co. the right to dam the Coosa River in the State of Alabama. But the real question pending before the House is, What shall be the policy of the Government concerning the construction of dams across navigable waters?

Some years ago, while I was serving on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I found that the practice in regard to bills relating to the construction of dams was for the attorney of some company that desired the privilege to prepare a bill, in some cases one section long, occupying half a page of bill form, and in some cases 9 or 10 or 12 sections long, occupying several pages of bill forms. There was no pretense of preserving any rights of the General Government in most of these cases.

By direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, with other members of that committee, I proceeded to prepare the draft of a bill which was finally enacted, called the general dam act of June 21, 1906. One of the questions involved was whether the Government in giving its consent to the construction of a dam as an obstruction to navigation could exact any conditions for the consent. Various gentlemen at different times have insisted that all that the Government could do was to exercise its power under the commerce clause of the Constitution over the question of navigation, and to give or not to give its consent, without exacting anything in addition if the consent was given.

I call the attention of the House, however, to a portion of the general dam law carried in the original act, and again in the amended act of 1910, which seems to me rather to foreclose the question.

It is the contention of gentlemen who are opposed to the power of the Government to exact money as a condition, that the Government has no power except over the question of navigability, and has no power to require any money to be paid as one of the conditions of granting the right. This is the condition provided in the general dam act:

> And also that whenever Congress shall authorize the construction of a lock or other structures for navigation purposes in connection with such dam, the persons owning such dam shall convey to the United States, free of cost, title to such land as may be required for such constructions and approaches, and shall grant to the United States free water power or power generated from water power for building and operating such constructions.

Here is a case where the Government has done nothing itself except to grant its consent to the construction of a dam across a navigable water. It has expended no money itself, and yet it insists that the persons taking the permit to construct the dam shall expend money for the benefit of the Government, shall furnish power free for the use of the Government.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman read as if he was reading from a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. I did not catch the authority he was reading from.

Mr. MANN. I was reading from the general dam act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman will not insist that what is in the general dam act is authority on a constitutional question?

Mr. MANN. I said that no one had ever questioned this. Does the gentleman from Alabama question it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There may be some terms on which the Government can authorize or can agree on how the dam shall be built, but that is a different question from exercising the power of taxing the flow of the water in the stream.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman sidesteps the question. The gentleman is seeking to pass a bill which refers to this act, and one of the provisions of this act is that the Government does require the company to furnish free of cost certain power, and to buy land and present it to the Government. What is the difference between that and requiring them to pay money directly to the Government, so far as the constitutional question is involved?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. And it requires them to provide for fishways.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, the original dam act also contained this provision, and so does the amended act:

> Provided, That in approving the plans, specifications, and location for any dam, such conditions and stipulations may be imposed as the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War may deem necessary to protect the present and future interests of the United States, which may include the condition that the persons constructing or maintaining such dam shall construct, maintain, and operate, without expense to the United States, in connection with any dam and accessory or appurtenant works, a lock or locks, booms, sluices, or any other structure or structures which the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers or Congress at any time may deem necessary in the interests of navigation, in accordance with such plans as they may approve.

When that provision was written into the bill which became the general dam act, it was the intention of the gentleman who wrote it into the draft of the bill that it would give the Secretary of War the right to impose conditions and stipulations which might include the power to exact charges for the use of the stream, and also the power to regulate charges of the company creating the electric power. I thought it was perfectly clear when we made the plan subject to the approval of the Secretary of War and permitted the Secretary to exact conditions and stipulations, that he had the power to exact these provisions and stipulations. I endeavored to persuade President Roosevelt that that was what the act provided for, but I was unable to obtain the approval of the War Department, under the President, and did not obtain any direction from the President to the War Department to exact such stipulations. The present Secretary of War is of the opinion, as I understand, that either the provisions in the dam law do not give him the property, or that it is doubtful. If the provisions in the general law are doubtful upon the subject, I am in favor of withholding the consent of the Government to construct any dams at all until it is determined by Congress what its policy shall be, and I hope it will determine that it has the power to exact such conditions and stipulations as we may think proper, including the right to exact a charge, if necessary, and the right to regulate charges made by the company to its consumers. [Applause.] Until that is done I do not believe it is proper to take up a particular bill and pass it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman perhaps is as well prepared to judge of the prospect of the Congress agreeing upon a general policy for the construction of dams as any man in either branch of Congress. I would like to know what his judgment is as to the probability of Congress at any time within the near future getting together upon that great question, and if there is no reasonable probability whether all of the enterprises should be held up awaiting a prospect of that kind?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not exact as a condition to my voting for a bill that my own particular or peculiar views shall be adopted by Congress. What I am seeking is to have Congress wait concerning the passage of a particular bill until it has determined upon its policy, and plainly it is not now determined upon the policy, although it has passed two general dam acts.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is the only question that makes me hesitate in relation to this particular bill. If I thought that Congress would in the near future adopt a general policy, I would vote against the passage of this bill unhesitatingly, to have it come within the policy that Congress may adopt.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I was going to explain my views upon that, and I am glad the gentleman has called attention to it. It seems to me when we have on the calendar six or eight bills, all substantially the same, providing for the construction of dams in different parts of the country—I think there are a dozen dams in contemplation in bills pending before Congress—that the proper thing to do would be for Congress to wait until the next session, when the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which has reported these bills, has its day in the House, and then take up one of the bills and fully discuss it and determine what our policy shall be, and pass all the other bills upon the same basis. Whatever of general character we put in one we should put in the others, and if we pass one upon one basis we ought to pass the others upon the same basis. I can see no reason why, after two hours only of discussion this morning, with very little opportunity for amendment, we should now seek to settle the policy which will control us in the future as to all of these water-power propositions. We can easily wait now. There is no pressing necessity for the passage of this bill. I understand that gentlemen desire it. I appreciate the fact that we ought to be, as far as practicable, developing the various water powers of the country, but it is far more important to have them developed under the proper conditions and under the proper policy than it is to pass one bill now, a few months ahead of when we will settle the future policy of the country. There has been and is dissatisfaction in reference to the two dam laws that have been passed. When the first law was passed, in 1906, there was opposition expressed to its provisions, and in the last Congress, while I was the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the second law, amending the old law, was passed. I introduced a bill upon the subject, expressly reserving to the Government power to regulate charges to consumers and the power to exact charges for the use of the stream. The rest of my committee did not agree with me upon that subject. Perhaps they were right. I yielded to them, to the superior wisdom and superior numbers, and the bill was reported to the House and passed.

Personally, I never have thought that the amended bill would secure the rights of the Government and the people as well as the original bill, though it was intended to, I think, by the gentleman who perfected it and adopted it in committee and on the floor of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have not gained much definite knowledge about the real merits of this proposition. I listened to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and I understood from his statement, which I take to be true, something of the desirability of the utilization of power that would come from the building of this dam at 18; 12 already authorized. I gather from the remarks that pretty well up to a million is contributed if this bill passes, and more than that in connection with the construction of Lock 12 saved to the Government Treasury. Now, if this navigation is ever to be developed on the Coosa River, I suppose it will be developed by the authority of Federal appropriation. If it be true that of the 80 miles that is now absolutely unnavigable, 30 miles of that 80 can be developed, so far as the dams are concerned, at a saving of between one and two million dollars to the Government, I am for saving that which is in sight, especially as under the general dam act this act is subject to amendment or repeal. Mr. Speaker, I have never lost much sleep about the powers of the State and the power of the General Government to prohibit water monopolies for power. Why, I recollect when the grangers agitation came in 1873, and when Illinois and all the other States practically had granted railway franchises, 99 years some of them and hundreds of years to others, to fix the charge for freight and passengers it was alleged to be a contract, but under the police powers of the States and to regulate public utilities, under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and under the decisions of the State courts, you now can fix the charges for public utilities by the States, and as to interstate commerce by Congress, railway and water by the legislature, and there is only one limitation on the exercise of this power, and that is that the charges shall not be confiscatory. Now, as to the Coosa River, I hardly know where it is, except it is said to be in Alabama and rises in Georgia, for all time that water has been running to waste. [Applause.] God knows how much longer it will run to waste if we shut out what seems to be a reasonable proposition. You say you are going to improve the navigation. If you tell the truth this will save well up to a million dollars to the Government.

Mr. BURNETT. A million and a half.

Mr. CANNON. A million and a half, the gentleman says. Now, I am quite willing to risk Alabama preventing any monopoly [applause] on the one hand and Congress under this bill can repeal or amend this act according to the general dam act. [Applause.] I see no reason for delaying. Great heavens, we have just begun to develop. It is not improbable that men listening to me now will see the tides of the ocean harnessed for power. Oh, gentlemen, let us, if the gentleman from Alabama is correct, save this million and a half and trust to Alabama to prevent a monopoly and trusts and combinations, and the Congress of the United States to amend or repeal this act rather than wait and let this water continue to run to the ocean unvexed by the turning of wheels. I like always to be practicable; I do not believe much in posturing before the country for power in political contests; I do not think, gentlemen, that we are to fall down and disrupt the Government, if these gentlemen are correct in their statements, by enacting this law. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this bill, but I would vote for it with more enthusiasm if the general dam act contained a provision which it does not now contain and which provision, in my opinion, would so amend that act as to fully protect beyond all question the people of the localities in which these structures are to be operated. I would provide in addition to the present provision of the general dam act as follows:

Provided, That the authorization herein granted is on the express condition that any denial on the part of any person or corporation enjoying or using the same, for the generation or transmission of electric power or energy, of the authority of the State to supervise and control all such operations and to fix conditions and determine reasonable rates under which power may be generated, transmitted, or sold, or any refusal to accept or abide by any supervision, control, condition, or rate established by or under State authority, shall work a forfeiture of all claim or right to maintain or operate the dam authorized herein; and upon the determination of such denial or refusal by a court of competent jurisdiction, in a suit which may be instituted by any party in interest, the authority herein granted shall be revoked.

I expect to prepare and present an amendment to this bill along these lines.

All that is needed in addition to what we have in the general dam act to fully protect the people is to make it clear that the State has full and complete authority and control over these corporations, which are generating electricity. The Federal Government has no right under the Constitution to attempt to assert authority and control in those matters. The State authority is complete, and if we make it a condition of the authorization there can be no question but that the people of the States will protect themselves. [Applause.]

Some of the gentlemen who are advocating what they are pleased to term conservation are, in fact, simply seeking to fasten on local enterprises a system of Federal taxation. Some of those who claim to be anxious to protect the people from the alleged dangers of water-power monopolies are, in fact, simply furthering the schemes of those who would establish a centralized Federal bureaucracy which would rob the people of the States of the right to control and regulate industries within their borders.

No one will go further than I to make clear State control over water-power development and the use and sale of electric current. So far as the irrigation States are concerned, this State authority and control has been generaly clearly recognized. That is true of the State which I have the honor to represent on this floor.

If what we seek is a clear establishment and recognition of the right of the people to protect themselves from any threatened monopolies in connection with power development we shall have but little difficulty in arriving at an adjustment of our difficulties. Federal taxation of water-power development is certainly not in the interest of people who are seeking cheap power, and in the long run control of operations and of rates by a Federal bureau will not only lead to abuse and scandal but will necessarily shorten the power of the people directly affected in each case through their local courts and legislatures. As these are the provisions which the so-called conservationists are demanding, one is forced to the conclusion that this is but another effort to substitute the rule of Federal bureaus for the rule of the people.

This whole matter would be greatly simplified if all of the States would enact legislation, as the irrigation States have already done, clearly defining rights to the use of water, and would provide an administrative bureau, as we have in Wyoming, through which application to use the waters within the State for beneficial purposes might be made. Parties having acquired from the State a right to the use of water for power purposes, under a clear recognition of the right of the State to control, could very properly be granted by the Federal Government the right to erect dams under the general provisions of the dam act, coupled with the provision I have suggested as an amendment, making the authorization dependent upon full recognition of the right of the State to control in every way proper and necessary for the protection of the people. We now have such a system in Wyoming, so that if we had navigable rivers in our State the Federal Government could safely grant to those seeking to divert water for power purposes the right to erect dams, because such right could only be exercised by those who had secured the right to do so from the State and subject to its control.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, so far as the discussion of this bill has developed it does not appear there is very much criticism of the project itself, and, as a matter of fact, the project is not subject to criticism. Alabama has been knocking at the doors of this Congress for 40 years, asking you to improve the navigation of the greatest river in the State, and Congress in that time has repeatedly refused to improve it. Now, through the energy and patriotism of her own citizens she is making an attempt to have this river navigable without asking the Congress of the United States to foot the bill. It is footing the bill, however, in other States. Alabama is here to-day merely asking your permission that she may allow through her own charter, through a corporation regulated by her in the interests of her people, capital to come into the State and build dams across her own rivers in order that she may make them navigable and carry commerce to the seas. That is all there is of this project. There is no trust standing behind it. I know of my own knowledge that this proposition was offered to the General Electric Co., and they refused to take it and build the dam. I know the men who promoted this. They are citizens of Alabama and men of good character. They could not float their bonds in New York. They could not get the General Electric Co. and its associate bankers of New York to help them, and they finally went to Canada and borrowed the additional money they needed to construct this dam, provided you allowed this bill to go through.

Now what they propose to do is to spend $1,600,000 to help make this river navigable and allow the Government to use all the water it needs for navigable purposes, and then take the balance of the power created, not for the purpose of selling electricity for light or heat, but for the purpose of manufacturing cyanamid, or lime nitrogen, and fertilizer for the benefit of the farmers of Alabama and of the South. It is to create a cheaper fertilizer for the people of our State, and to make our own river navigable without costing the United States Government anything. Now, that is the proposition that is confronting you, and yet gentlemen say that there is a great trust that is confronting you; that you are giving away the resources of Alabama, a power that belongs to the people. My God, gentlemen, have not the people of Alabama a right to use their own resources when you will not do it? Have they not the right to convert this water that is running down this stream, and which has run down the stream for thousands of years, wasting it day by day, into fertilizer to improve our agricultural interests? That is what we are asking you to do. Now, as to the amendments, I do not think any man can controvert that this is an honest, clean, justifiable proposition. But they say if you grant them the right to build this dam you must do so under conditions. Now, so far as I am concerned, I assume that when the Government of the United States itself builds a dam, and by the expenditure of its own money creates a power, that that power belongs to the Government, and it can dispose of it as it sees fit. But, so far as the running water in the streams of the States are concerned, I deny the right of the United States Government to appropriate that water for any purpose except for the purpose of navigation. [Applause.] If you can demand the right to charge for the use of this water to run an electric dynamo, you can demand the right to charge for this water to run a steam engine. If you say you have the constitutional right when this water power is used to create an electric power and put a tax on it, then you have got a right to put a tax on this water when it is withdrawn from the running stream to go through an engine boiler and create electricity in that way. You have the right to put the tax on the water when it is withdrawn from the running stream to give water to your cities to drink and to wash with. If you have got a right to tax it for the one purpose, you have the right to tax it for another. And I deny your right absolutely to say to the people of my State that we can segregate this particular water in this particular stream and put a price on it.

But I do admit—if the gentlemen who are here as the guardians of the American people want to do something for them and say that the rights of the American people have been interfered with—that there is a just and a fair way for them to accomplish the result they have in view, and not to say that you have got to levy a tax upon a particular project—a project that the people can not protect themselves in. Why, do you know, my friends, that hundreds of years ago the rich Valley of the Nile belonged to the landowners; but in an evil hour they consented that certain satraps and rulers might charge them for the use of the water that was needed to irrigate their lands, and in the course of a hundred years the owner of the land became the peon of the man who held the right to tax the water?

These gentlemen here to-day are asking of this Congress that it grant to the Secretary of War the right to levy a tax on our people, a tax on the water that they use to create power, a tax on the water that they use to create industries. If you can do that, it will ultimately mean a tax on the water that they have to drink and live by. [Applause.]

Are you gentlemen prepared to say that you will give the taxing power that belongs to this Congress to the Secretary of War, to levy it on the rights and on the industries and on the very lives of your people? That is what you are asking us to do.

Now, if you want to be just, if you say that this great water power has been given to special interests, and has been appropriated by special interests, and that the people of the United States have not got their fair rights out of it, why do not you set about to accomplish the object you have in view in a constitutional way? You have the power if you want to tax this enterprise. Why do not you tax your own enterprises in your own districts? That is fair. If you want to tax the man in the future, why do not you tax the man who has got the right in the past? There is not a man on this floor who does not know that any one of these gentlemen who desire to have the Government of the United States make the people of the States pay taxes for the use of a stream has got a constitutional right to introduce a bill into this House providing for an excise tax on dams. There is not one of these gentlemen but has the right to introduce a bill to levy a tax on every steam power that an engine produces. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the celebrated carriage case, upheld many years ago the right of levying a special excise tax.

Now, I want to say to you, Why should you tax the power that is created by a so-called navigable stream and exempt from taxation the power that is created by a stream that is not navigable? Why, I say to you right now that within 50 miles of the place where this dam will be built, or within 100 miles of it at the outside, are immense water powers that will be created on nonnavigable streams that do not have to come to this Congress to ask permission to build a dam, and those you will exempt from taxation for all time.

Now, what is the difference? Why should the people who get that water power go untaxed and you insist upon putting a tax on these other people? It is unjust; it is discriminatory; it is unfair. Why should you want to tax the man who wants to build a dam to-day and leave untaxed the man who built a dam yesterday? [Applause.]

Now, you, if you are honest, if you are fair, if you say the rights of the American people have been jeopardized in the past and that a great trust has taken away from them their rights and taken the right away from the people, why do not you introduce a bill and send it to the Committee on Ways and Means providing for an excise tax on every single kilowatt of power that is created by an electrical dam? You know you can do it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will ask the gentleman to state right there if it is not the only clear and constitutional method that the Government shall impose all taxes uniformly?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Exactly. The Constitution of the United States provides that the taxation shall be uniform, and that is the only way the people can protect themselves. You think to levy a tax, if you can do it constitutionally, by this indirect method; you seek to put it on one dam at a time, one place, where only a small community is interested; and if the great Federal Government has got the power, through its Secretary of War, to levy a tax, how much injustice can you do them? You can oppress them. You can destroy them. But when you make the tax uniform, when you exercise the power of taxation on every dam in the United States, old and new, then the Representatives of the people of the United States here will all be sufficiently interested to see that abstract justice shall be done.

There is no trust concerned in this proposition. But gentlemen complain and say that there are trusts that have grabbed these sites and taken away the rights of the people. If that is so, why should they want to tax this proposition and not level their law at the face of the trust that they complain of? Here is their opportunity. There is the box through which bills are introduced in this House. It will take half an hour to write a bill providing for an excise tax on the kilowatt power and the horsepower of the dams that you say are owned by trusts. Now, if you are fair about it, if you say they have got something from the American people to which they are not entitled, and that they should bear a portion of the burdens of this Government, to be distributed in any way you want to, put your bill in the box and let every man stand on the same basis, and do not let the men who have already grabbed this power in a way which you say is unjust—I do not know whether it is or not—do not let them escape, but let every man stand on the same basis. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 12 minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I can not undertake in four minutes to discuss adequately a question of this magnitude, but I am not willing to accept the proposition just made by my distinguished friend from Alabama that the only way in equity to deal with this question is to levy an excise tax on all the water power of America. If you analyze that, it comes down to this proposition, to use an analogy, that we ought not to impose conditions upon the disposition of the public domain unless we at the same time provide for similar conditions on land the title of which belongs to the States. And yet that has not been the policy of the Government in the past and, I take it, will not be the policy of the Government in the future.

When you strip this whole question of all the fine-spun distinctions that lawyers undertake to make, you have this plain proposition, that men come to the Federal Government asking a grant. Now, it is clearly within the power and the province of the Federal Government in making that grant to put conditions upon it; and it does not answer the question to say that the way to deal with the matter is by taxing previous monopolies. The way to prevent future monopolies is by putting conditions on the grant such as will prevent the creation of a monopoly, and that is the proposition that we confront here.

I do not profess to argue the facts of this particular case, but I do submit to the House of Representatives that we can not afford to deal with this great question of water-power grants according as each particular case is presented by the advocates of such particular grant. What this House owes to itself and owes to the country is a consideration of the question in all of its aspects, and the enactment of a general law touching water-power grants.

We hear a great deal about State rights. I doubt if there has been any man in this Congress who has been more solicitous for the rights of the States than I have been, but I occasionally lose a good deal of my belief in State rights when I find they are made the refuge for individual privilege. [Applause.] I hold that when the power rests in the Federal Government to give a grant, it owes to give it upon conditions of equity to all the people of America.

It is not true that this river belongs to the State of Alabama. The river is in the State of Alabama, but it does not belong to that State. The power that can be generated there by virtue of a dam on this navigable stream does not belong to the State of Alabama. The gentleman says, What is the difference between that and water power developed on nonnavigable streams? That is very plausible, and yet the gentleman knows, and every student of American history knows, that there are many matters that fall arbitrarily within the domain of the Federal Government and others that fall arbitrarily within the domain of the State governments. And the fact remains that under the laws that we live under the navigable streams are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Government. If it were not true, do you suppose that gentlemen would be coming here and asking a grant? They come here because they must come.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This portion of the Coosa River is entirely within the State of Alabama. If a crime were committed in the middle of that river, does the gentleman contend that the Federal Government would have jurisdiction of it? It has no jurisdiction in the world.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am glad to have the gentleman ask that question, because it illustrates the arbitrary jurisdictions that exist.

Whether they ought to have existed or not they do exist, and the fact is that the control of navigation belongs to the Federal Government. The Kentucky River rises in Kentucky and flows only through Kentucky and empties at the border into the Ohio River. There are propositions for water-power sites all along the Kentucky River created by virtue of dams that have been built to help the navigability of the stream. In my judgment such power does not belong simply to the State of Kentucky, but it is not so much a question of whether it belongs to a State or to the Nation; it is a question whether you shall put conditions upon it which will guarantee the people the proper use of such water power. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois six minutes.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that I can not support this bill. It is being advocated on the floor by my colleagues on this side of the House and by my very best friends, but I have never voted for a bill of this kind in this House which did not provide for the protection of the consumers, and which does not provide for tolls to the National Government, and I can not vote for a bill which does not contain these provisions. We have never had an opportunity until now to raise that question in this House. Bills have gone through in the past without containing this provision, but none of them have ever received my vote. Only a small part of the water-power possibilities of the United States has as yet been given away in this manner. If we have made errors in the past—if we have adopted an improper policy—that is no reason why we should continue that policy into the future years. I hope some way can be found to compel these companies now operating power propositions on our rivers to regulate their prices to consumers and to pay the tolls they ought to pay to the National Government.

Mr. Speaker, I am not in accord with those of my friends in this House who insist that States can prevent water-power monopolies. It is impossible to prevent water-power monopolies. It never has been done, it can not be done in the future, and it never will be done. In the very nature of things a water-power proposition that is profitable and useful is a monopoly, a natural monopoly. It is necessary to hook together these various propositions in the same section to make of them a monopoly, in order to make them of real service, in order that certain storage pools may be full, upon which the company can draw, in order that at certain times in the afternoon what is known as the peak of the load can be carried in all factories served by the various water powers united in certain localities.

But you can not make hydroelectric propositions compete. In the very nature of things they do not compete. But you can make them regulate their charges to consumers, and you can compel them to pay tolls to the Government. The very fact that they come to the National Congress asking for permission to build the dams, the fact that they can not build them without our consent, gives us the right to impose conditions on the consent we grant to them.

This proposition has merit that other propositions pending on the calendar of this House do not possess. Many of the propositions pending that we are required to pass upon are evidently speculative in their character, because the corporations and individuals asking for the franchises can not possibly build them; they can only accomplish what they claim they want to accomplish by transferring the franchise at a profit to some other larger company. That is not true with reference to this proposition. The Alabama Light & Power Co., which will furnish this capital, so far as I know, is not connected with the six great water-power aggregations in the United States. It is not a monopoly. It has this advantage, it is not asking for this franchise for the purpose of transferring it to anybody else. It is asking for this franchise for the purpose of building this dam itself in this river, and it will build this dam. In that particular it possesses merit which many of these other bills do not possess. It will build up a great industry. There is no man denies that it will improve this important river. It is something we ought to have, but we can not stop at the beginning of this fight and give to this company something it ought not to have if we are to enter upon the policy of conservation which is being so widely discussed and so widely favored throughout the country.

The reason this company is not connected with any great water-power group in the United States is due to the fact that it is a Canadian company. The Alabama Traction, Light & Power Co. owns all the stock of the Alabama Power Co. It is a $30,000,000 proposition, capitalized and controlled by a company in the Dominion of Canada, and some of its stockholders, I understand, live in England. We are, therefore, asked here to give away this river, with its tremendous possibilities, to a group of Canadian capitalists and let them go down there and make just as much money out of this as they please and charge to the citizens of Alabama just as much as they please and pay no tolls to the National Government.

I yield to no one in my advocacy of the improvement of our rivers. They ought to be improved. The time has come to do it. Improved rivers will furnish to railroads the only competition they can ever have, but in order to do it I am not anxious to give away to groups of American capitalists the right to exploit our rivers and I am still less anxious to give away valuable franchises to a group of Canadian and English capitalists.

In the United States hydroelectric power is produced and marketed at from $19 to $28 per horsepower and in many places even higher charges than that are made In Norway and Sweden from $4 to $6 per horsepower is charged consumers. In the Dominion of Canada tolls of $2 per horsepower are exacted from companies operating power plants and the price of hydroelectric power to consumers is regulated. It is safe to say that in no other great commercial nation in the world are water-power companies granted the privileges that are granted to them here. The production of hydroelectric energy is regulated by all the most advanced nations in the world except the United States.

It costs more per horsepower to install a hydroelectric plant than it does to install a steam plant, but after that the rivers, running on forever, furnish the power that can be converted into electric energy and sold without appreciable loss two or three hundred miles away. It is safe to say that in any part of this country where there are declivities in rivers hydroelectric power can be generated and sold at $12 per horsepower and, after allowing for interest on the investment and depreciation of the plant, the owners of the stock in that enterprise can divide every year at least 10 per cent on the amount of cash invested therein.

There is no way of regulating the price to consumers of electric energy except by the State or the National Government. The States have tried it and have failed everywhere. The power ought to be reserved to the National Government to regulate prices to consumers. This can be done now better than at any other time—now when we are giving away these franchises. The National Government is called upon to maintain our rivers. No section of the country makes greater demands per capita upon the National Treasury than the Southern States, where nearly all of the power propositions for which franchises are sought at the present time are located.

We expend money from the National Treasury—millions of it every year—for the lower Mississippi River, for the harbors of the South, for the improvement of the rivers of Alabama, Tennessee, Arkansas, and these other States where these franchises are sought. Can it be argued with consistency on this floor that the National Government must continue its policy of improving the rivers which connect the interiors of great States with the sea and at the same time give up to private companies and to individuals the right to take from our navigable rivers within the States enormous profits, without contributing tolls to the National Government, to be used by the National Government in improving the very rivers upon which these plants are to be located and other waters connected therewith? The Southern States make demands upon the Treasury for millions of dollars to fight the boll weevil and other pests. The National Government even maintains throughout the South levees along the Mississippi River—something it does for no other section.

The power possibilities of our rivers, no matter where they are located, belong to the National Government. They are as much a part of our national assets as is the public domain or the coal fields of Alaska. It will be as unpopular in the years to come to monopolize them, to turn them over to private interests, without compensation to the Government, as it is now unpopular to absorb the coal lands of Alaska.

The Senate committee has submitted, for the enlightenment of the House, a report to accompany this bill—a characteristic report, a meager report, as all these reports are, whether submitted by the Committee on Commerce of the Senate or the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House. The report which accompanies this bill for the enlightenment of the House is simply this: The committee says that having considered the same, it recommends that it pass. There is absolutely nothing else in the report, which contains less than two lines of printed matter. A more voluminous report, giving the facts the House and the Senate ought to have, might have resulted in the defeat of this bill.

This bill seeks to give to the Alabama Power Co. the right to construct these dams. The Alabama Power Co. is an Alabama corporation, but its stock is owned—all of it except just enough, perhaps, to give it a status in Alabama, two or three shares—by the Alabama Traction, Light & Power Co. (Ltd.). This is a Canadian company, organized on the 5th day of January of this year under the laws of the Dominion of Canada.

The prospectus it has issued recently shows that it owns or controls the entire capital stock or bonds of the Alabama Power Co. and its subsidiaries. It controls several important power companies in Alabama. This Canadian company was formed for the purpose of supplying electric energy to all the important cities and towns in the State of Alabama and also to acquire and operate tramway systems in the State of Alabama.

The Birmingham, Montgomery & Gulf Power Co. and the Muscle Shoals Co. possess a charter granted in 1900 by the State of Alabama, unlimited in time, and not forfeitable for nonuse. This charter gives these companies the right to build plants and dams on the Tallapoosa River and its tributaries. It is given the right of eminent domain. It can acquire controlling interests in any electric railroad or electric-light company in Alabama and can exercise all the powers belonging to manufacturing companies under the Alabama law, and it is exempt from taxation for 10 years from the commencement of its works. In view of such facts as these, it is nonsense to talk about the ability of the State of Alabama to control its corporations.

At the present time the capital stock of all these companies I have mentioned is owned by this Canadian company. In other words, the power possibilities in the State of Alabama, so far as the State of Alabama has been able to control them, have been turned over absolutely to the tender mercies of an alien corporation—a $30,000,000 corporation. This corporation now controls power sites in Alabama, along the Tallapoosa, Coosa, and Tennessee Rivers, capable of developing 400,000 horsepower for 10 hours daily during the driest season ever recorded in that State.

In other words, this company, which is to be favored by this proposed legislation, already is in a position to exact tribute from consumers in the State of Alabama and adjoining States of $8,000,000 per annum, computing the electric power it can develop and sell at $20 per horsepower. This company can develop hydroelectric power there, pay $2 per horsepower to the National Government as tolls, charge consumers less than $12 per horsepower, and make more than 10 per cent on its invested capital after allowing the proper deductions for depreciation. In addition to this, it can pay interest at the legal rate on its entire investment, and the 10 per cent it could distribute will be absolute profit each year. In other words, this company, under the franchises it has already acquired, could distribute in profits 10 per cent per year after paying $2 per horsepower tolls to the National Government and after paying for depreciation of plant and interest on the investment and still charge consumers about half as much per horsepower for electric energy as they will be able to charge unless the National Government in some way can regulate their charges; and it is proposed to give them this additional asset without tolls to the Government and without reserving the right to regulate cost to consumers.

It is to be hoped that no more of these bills can become laws. The advanced position taken by the Secretary of War and by the President of the United States makes it impossible, even if this House by a slight margin should pass this bill, for its promoters to ever hope that this tremendous national asset can be delivered up to any company, least of all to a foreign corporation. An awakened public sentiment in the near future will make it impossible for the people of this country to permit further diminution of our national assets. Too many Members of this House are trying to find methods of taking money from the National Treasury; too few of them are earnestly endeavoring to provide revenues for the Government. We have passed corporation tax laws through this House and excise laws; we are trying to protect our forest reserves and our coal lands from exploitation by unscrupulous corporations and individuals, and the people of this country will demand in no uncertain tones in the near future that this House, intrusted with the protection of our national resources, shall discharge its full duty and extend to all of our resources that character of conservation which is consistent with the advanced ideas of the present century. There is no national asset so valuable and so important as the power that can be developed in our rivers and which belongs not to those who may desire to exploit it and reap tremendous profits, but to the whole people of the United States, who have the right to demand that it shall be sold at reasonable prices and that the National Treasury shall receive its share of the proceeds.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT and Mr. CLAYTON] and the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT] ask unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has one minute and a half remaining.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I could not go into a discussion of this question in a minute and a half, and I shall not attempt to do so. I take it that if this bill passes as it comes from the Senate the President will send back a veto of it, which he ought to do, and I hope that he will have the courage to veto a bill which does not conserve the rights of the people. [Applause.] The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and others—and no doubt it will be said by the one who may speak next—say that this is for the great purpose of helping out the farmers of this country with a cheaper fertilizer. I would suggest, if this be the object of securing this water-power right, that they should submit to an amendment which would provide—

> That whenever the said corporation shall cease to manufacture air nitrate fertilizer, known as calcium cyanamid, this permit or grant shall become null and void, and all right and title to said dam and property located therein belonging to said corporation shall become the property of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, if they are so willing and so anxious to have it for that particular purpose I am sure they would submit to an amendment which would provide that they must keep up their contract for which they are claiming the right to put up this water power at this particular place. This side of the House only a short time ago stood upon this floor as one man saying to the Secretary of the Interior at that time that we proposed to stand by the resources of Alaska and that no grants or rights should be given there which take away the power of the people to control. Are you upon this side to-day upon this great question going to stand here and vote for a proposition which may become just as bad as that in Alaska?

These water powers should be developed, and I hope they will, but I do not propose to be swerved from my course to do what is in my power to protect the rights of the people. This is not a local question, but one that affects the people generally. The claim is absurd that it is only a matter that concerns the district of any one particular Representative. We are not here to give away these valuable franchises for nothing and without any right to regulate the same. I hope that the Members on this side of the aisle will stand for the rights of the people on this question. We have always claimed to stand for the people and for their rights; let us not fail to do so now.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the speech of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], and he reminds me of what the old justice of the peace said about his member of the legislature. They said to him, "Bill made a good speech to-day, Uncle Johnnie," and he replied, "Yes, by gosh, old Bill can speak just as good on one side as he can on the other." [Laughter.] So the gentleman from Kentucky is always earnest and eloquent and speaks well, even on the wrong side. I regret to see him standing in the way of industrial development in the South. The southern farmer must now pay freight charges of $4 per ton for all the nitrate of soda that comes to him from Chile or Canada, and I regret to see the gentleman from Kentucky lining up with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], who feels, I fear, that he is called upon to represent every district in the United States. [Laughter.] And then there is my dear old friend BEN HUMPHREYS. [Laughter.] He comes from the home of Sargent S. Prentiss. He hails from Mississippi, but, Mr. Speaker, I am uneasy about him. The theorists and doctrinaires of new nationalism have given him a dose of something and they called it conservation, and, in his effort to conserve something, he is making the mistake of going through the door of the Federal Government when he ought to resort to the State. So the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] may be freely forgiven upon the theory that they know not what they do. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, I have not the time to yield now.

Mr. Speaker, I hold here a report from the Chief of Engineers and Mr. Taft when Secretary of War, and here are some of the things it says:

> In connection with legislation of this kind (damming a river) careful consideration should be given to the question of the limitations of the power of the Federal Government over navigable waters, regarding the proposition to empower the Secretary of War to authorize the use and development of water power at localities not improved by the United States. It should be borne in mind that natural water power—that is, power made available by the existence of natural falls and rapids in a river—is appurtenant to riparian ownership, and the right to use it is governed by State laws on the subject of private property as above set forth. The Federal Government can regulate it and control it only to such extent as may be necessary in the interest of navigation.

It agrees entirely with my contention. What does the gentleman say to that doctrine? When I speak of State rights I am not talking about the things that divided us in the sixties; I am talking about the doctrine that no section has ever denied—the doctrine that Lincoln stood for, that Jefferson Davis stood for, that Jefferson and Jackson and Grant and McKinley and Cleveland stood for. It is as old as the Constitution itself—the doctrine that the State has powers that can not be exercised by the Federal Government. [Applause.] Mr. HUMPHREYS offers an amendment that is in the very teeth of the Constitution. No court can fix rates to be charged by any concern, and yet the gentleman has said in his amendment that under certain conditions the courts shall fix the rate. His amendment is unconstitutional. I appeal to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who is the author of the general dam act, to aid us in defeating this amendment. Permits have been granted under the provisions of the general dam act, and why not allow us to dam the Coosa under the same provisions?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman desired to be notified when he had only six minutes remaining. He has six minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to remind gentlemen that the Government has built three dams on the White River, in Arkansas, and it has offered the horsepower for sale. It started out demanding $10 per horsepower. Nobody made a bid. It came down to $5, and nobody made a bid. It came down to probably $1, and the power still goes begging; nobody is purchasing that power. In the report upon this bill the Chief of Engineers says that it is very probable that the development of the Coosa for navigation will not be made without the aid of some water-power company, and yet gentlemen stand in the way of this movement of so much interest to us and of so much benefit to the river for navigation purposes. Sixty-four thousand dollars a year of interest on the money expended building this dam at 4 per cent means $6.48 per horsepower.

If you divide that $1,600,000 by 50 years, there is $32,000 a year for the use of this little strip of river now singing the song of wasted strength as it rolls its way to the sea. [Applause.] And gentlemen talk about conservation. Now, what is a conservator? One who protects from injury. Are we injuring the river? No. We are improving it for navigable purposes and at the same time utilizing the power of that river, now serving no purposes and going to waste. That is what we are doing, Mr. Speaker. Conservation and preservation. For what? For useful purposes. Are we undertaking to do that? Most assuredly we are; but some gentlemen here are planting themselves in the way of the development of this river in my district. Mr. Speaker, I recall an occasion in this House when Senator BURTON, of Ohio, a Republican, then a leading Member of this House, had a bill providing for the construction of a public building in his district. It provided that it should be built of granite, and the sandstone people wanted it built of sandstone. Mr. BURTON said, "I ought to have the right to say of what material it shall be built; it is in my district." Some of his own colleagues turned against him. I took the fight up on this side, with other gentlemen here, and I said the matter pertained to Mr. BURTON'S district and outsiders had no business running their noses into it and depriving a Representative of his rights upon this floor. [Applause.] We voted with him. We saved the day; and Democrats and Republicans stood here and saw to it that Mr. BURTON was allowed to represent his district. But we have gentlemen here who talk about a dam site, and every time they hear of a dam site or see a dam-site bill they throw a fit. [Laughter and applause.] My friend from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], and my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] all look cross-eyed every time they hear of a dam-site bill.

They remind me of the fellow who was treated for the drink habit.

Old Uncle Jerry, in telling the story, said: "Old man Jimmie Simpkins's boy tuck powerfully to licker a while back and the old man tuck the guts of three green gourds and a double handful of green tobacco stems and boiled them down to a simmering stew. He then strained the juice into a glass, give it to his boy on his empty stomach early in the morning."

"Well, what became of him?" was the inquiry. The reply was, "Oh, he is doing fairly well now. He is getting to where he can drink a little water biled on the white of an egg and eat a snowflake cracker if it is browned and powdered good, and give to him in a spoon, but when we exercise him we have to blindfold him, for the mere sight of a tobacco patch or gourd vine sets him to vomiting again. [Laughter.] And they can't tell yet whether his relishment fer licker is gone or not." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, every time these gentlemen hear of a dam site, or see a dam-site bill, they are miserable, they suffer in the flesh, and hereafter when we exercise the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] we will have to blindfold them, because the mere sight of a dam-site bill sets them to heaving and sighing and we can not tell yet whether their relishment for representing all the districts in the United States is gone or not. [Laughter and applause.]

Then, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], the self-selected Member from the Nation at large [laughter], the astute and self-constituted guardian of every district in the United States [laughter], drew his little legislative blade, and cutting the air as he came [laughter], rushed recklessly into the arena to defend his people against the calamity that would overtake them if Congress should grant a permit to dam the Coosa. [Loud applause and laughter.]

Then, Mr. Speaker, I saw the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], with an air determined and resolute, rise and lean forward, eager to hear all that was being said about building a dam across the Coosa River, down in my district. I could see his nostrils distend with indignation [laughter] and his eyes flash with the fire of serious concern [laughter] as he contemplated the outrage about to be perpetrated upon his people by the building of a dam across the Coosa River, way down in Alabama, in my district. [Laughter.] Then I could hear his big heart beating with fury as he expressed in lurid language his opposition to the construction of a dam across the Coosa River [laughter], and as he took his seat I could hear wailing and gnashing of teeth amongst his constituents in far-away Wisconsin. [Laughter and applause.] Then I seemed to hear his terror-stricken constituents say, "What will become of us and ours? Who will keep the wolf from the door—who will shelter us in time of storm if they dare to dam the Coosa River?" [Laughter and applause.] Then they lifted up their voices and shouted in unison with the gentleman from Wisconsin, "You may dam the Ohio and dam the Tombigbee, you may dam the Hudson and dam the Tennessee, and you may dam the Mississippi, but dam the Coosa—not by a dam site." [Loud laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, if the men who have grown gray in the service of their States and through their States have contributed to the strength and glory of the Republic could witness the effort of gentlemen here to encroach upon the reserved rights of the State by demanding that the Federal Congress shall prescribe rules of conduct for and demand toll from a local enterprise in a sovereign State, they would shake their hoary heads in sadness and admonish these gentlemen to venture not upon this dangerous road of new nationalism. [Applause.]

If the men in middle life who glory in the traditions of Bunker Hill and Yorktown, who still cling with love and loyalty to the principles of the Constitution, could witness the effort of zealous but misguided conservationists to deprive the State of rights and powers vouchsafed unto it by the founders of the Republic—aye, if the young men, the hope of the country, the thoughtful students of our system of State and Federal Government, could witness this effort to strip the State of its just powers and leave it a useless, meaningless thing in what is now the household of sovereign States—they would all exclaim, "This does not mean conservation, but it means damnation to the wisest and best system of State and Federal Government ever devised by the genius of man." [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, upon the exercise of the virile strength and sovereign power of the State depends the strength and well-being of the Republic. Destroy the State and you destroy the Republic, for—

> When the stem dies the leaf that grew
> From out its heart must perish too.

[Applause.]

Yes, Mr. Speaker, some of these theorists and doctrinaires of new nationalism are confounding the powers of the Federal Government with those of the State, and in their misunderstanding of what real conservation means they have allowed themselves to stand in the way of industrial development and to hinder and delay the great work of navigation. Of all the horsepower in the navigable streams of my State none has been developed; and now, Mr. Speaker, we seek to harness power going to waste at lock 18 on the Coosa River.

Mr. Speaker, the dam at Lock 18 will be built without expense to the Federal Government. It will be a distinct and tremendous aid to the Federal Government in its work to make the Coosa River navigable. It is in the interest of a legitimate and much-needed enterprise. It will be the means of establishing and operating the first plant for manufacturing atmospheric nitrogen in the United States, and will result in the furnishing to our farmers cheaper fertilizers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit to this House that instead of hampering and discouraging this project Congress ought to encourage it, and welcome the opportunity to have this dam built without expense to the Federal Government. The only question that concerns the Federal Government is the question of navigation. The regulation of the conduct of the Alabama Power Co. is a question for the State of Alabama to determine. The Federal Government should rejoice in the fact that it has been relieved of the expense and responsibility of improving the Coosa River at Lock 18, that the river has been made navigable there by the enterprise and at the expense of a local corporation. It is the purpose of the Alabama Power Co. to build and operate a nitrogen plant at Lock 18 on the Coosa River. The manufacture of nitrogen in Alabama would be a great blessing to our people, and the electricity generated at the power plant at Lock 18 will light up the homes, the villages, and the cities along the Coosa River. This electricity will not only be used for lighting purposes, but for power purposes in various ways.

As Benjamin Franklin brought lightning from the clouds and was the means of making it the obedient servant of man's will, man's inventive genius has devised ways and means of extracting nitrogen from the air. The Alabama Power Co. proposes to manufacture at Lock 18 atmospheric nitrogen. Our farmers now have to go to Chile or to Canada to buy nitrogen, and they spend millions of money in freight rates. The cotton growers of the South will hail with delight the time when their nitrogen supply will be manufactured in the cotton belt, when the output of the local plant will be the means of leaving in their pockets millions of dollars now paid out in freight charges on nitrogen coming from Canada and Chile. [Applause.]

The question is, Shall we invite capital to come and aid us, capital encouraged and controlled by State laws in the development of a local power plant, or shall we postpone this development, lose this opportunity to aid navigation and keep capital out of the State because of foolish and unauthorized Federal restriction? [Applause.]

Permit the Alabama Power Co. to build this dam across the Coosa River and establish this nitrogen plant and you have not only aided navigation and advanced the cause of industrial development in Alabama, but you have contributed to the comfort, happiness, and prosperity of our people. [Applause.]

I repeat, this bill is in the interest of industrial development in the State of Alabama. It is in the interest of navigaion, and the Alabama delegation is united in the support of this meritorious measure, and I beg you gentlemen to vote for my bill. [Loud and continued applause.]

Here is a copy of my bill:

A bill to authorize the building of a dam across the Coosa River, in Alabama, at a place suitable to the interest of navigation about 7½ miles above the city of Wetumpka.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Alabama Power Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Alabama, its successors and assigns, are authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across Coosa River, in the State of Alabama, at a place suitable to the interest of navigation about 7½ miles above the city of Wetumpka, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved June 23, 1910, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters,' approved June 21, 1906."

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my time has expired and I desire to print in this connection certain papers and documents.

(Circular No. 14.)

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, April 4, 1905.

The following report on a bill introduced and considered at the third session of the Fifty-eighth Congress is published for the information of officers of the Corps of Engineers in charge of river and harbor works, it being thought that the important legal propositions discussed and a knowledge of the department's position regarding the subject matter may be of interest and value:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
January 17, 1905.

Respectfully returned to the chairman Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives, inviting attention to the accompanying report of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, of yesterday's date, and to drafts of bills therein referred to. The report seems to me to be very comprehensive, accurate, and instructive.

WM. H. TAFT, Secretary of War.

3. In connection with legislation of this kind careful consideration should be given to the question of the limitations of the power of the Federal Government over navigable waters. By virtue of its power to regulate commerce, Congress may exercise control over the navigable waters of the United States, but only to the extent necessary to protect, preserve, and improve free navigation. The Federal Government has no possessory title to the water flowing in navigable streams, nor to the land comprising their beds and shores, and hence Congress can grant no absolute authority to anyone to use and occupy such water and land for manufacturing and industrial purposes. The establishment, regulation, and control of manufacturing and industrial enterprises, as well as other matters pertaining to the comfort, convenience, and prosperity of the people, come within the powers of the States, and the Supreme Court of the United States holds that the authority of a State over navigable waters within its borders, and the shores and beds thereof, is plenary, subject only to such action as Congress may take in the execution of its powers under the Constitution to regulate commerce among the several States.

6. Regarding the proposition to empower the Secretary of War to authorize the use and development of water power at localities not improved by the United States, it should be borne in mind that natural water power—that is, power made available by the existence of natural falls and rapids in a river—is appurtenant to riparian ownership, and the right to use it is governed by State laws on the subject of private property. As above set forth, the Federal Government can regulate and control it only to such extent as may be necessary in the interest of navigation. * * *

A. MACKENZIE,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

On pages 27 and 28 of the same report, as follows:

It is evident that the deposits of nitrate outside of Chile, barring new and not very probable discoveries, possess a purely local and transient importance. They have no bearing upon the world's problem.

The world's demand for nitrogen is rapidly increasing. This demand can be met in four ways, as follows:

First. By a temporarily increased supply of saltpeter from deposits, soon, however, to be exhausted.

Second. By an increased supply of ammonia as a by-product of coal and peat, dependent on a general reform in the use of these materials as fuel and limited by the extent to which they may be used as sources of light and heat and limited further, in point of time, by the world's supply of fossil fuel, with a possible exhaustion within a few centuries.

Third. By the closest economy in preserving all waste forms of combined nitrogen, vegetable or animal, so that they may be utilized as plant food.

Fourth. By the technical transformation of atmospheric nitrogen into combined forms available for the needs of agriculture and the arts.

Mr. Speaker, I will extend my remarks and say: The first source and supply for meeting the demand for nitrogen is controlled by the London nitrate kings, who have the most complete monopoly in the world. To vote against this bill is to vote in favor of this monopoly, whose imports of Chilean nitrate of soda into the United States annually now amount to $14,000,000 yearly, and a vote against this bill is in favor of this monopoly which, during 31 years, beginning from 1879, has placed a tax upon the industry and agriculture of the world of $425,000,000 paid to Chile, the Chilean export duty being $11.16 per short ton.

The second chief supply is that of ammonia, a by-product from the manufacture of coke, and this by-product, ammonium sulphate, is controlled by the United States Steel Corporation, which has almost a complete monopoly, receiving for this by-product over $3,500,000 annually. To vote against this bill is to vote in favor of the steel corporation's monopoly in the production of ammonium sulphate as a fertilizer, and is to vote for the interest of the United States Steel Corporation and against the interest of the farmers of this country.

The third supply, as above, comes largely from the waste products from slaughterhouses of the Beef Trust, and this is animal nitrogen, and to vote against this bill is to vote in favor of the monopoly of animal nitrogen by-products at the slaughterhouses of the Beef Trust.

The fourth way is the transformation of atmospheric nitrogen into a fertilizer, in this case calcium cyanamid, to be manufactured from the power created by the building of this dam if this bill is passed, and to vote for the bill is a vote against all of the monopolies described, and to vote for this bill will be in favor of the use of the nitrogen in the atmosphere as a fertilizer, the supply of which is inexhaustible and going to waste, as the power in the water of the Coosa River at Lock 18 is going to waste by nonuse, and to vote against this bill is to vote against the conservation of these natural resources created by God for the use of mankind and not to go to waste by nonuse.

To vote against this bill is to vote against the express wishes of the farmers of Alabama, who, through the legislature of the State, passed every necessary law to regulate power companies, and also, in order to secure the manufacture of lime nitrogen in Alabama, passed laws exempting water-power companies and calcium-cyanamid companies from taxation for a period of 10 years from the time of beginning the construction of such plants. Will Congress deny Alabama's farmers the right to have a dam built in the Coosa River under the law passed by Congress for the express purpose of allowing the building of such a dam? It is unbelievable, it is unthinkable, it is incouceivable that the House will refuse to pass the bill as it is now written.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 22, 1912.

Hon. J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HEFLIN: Referring to the questions you asked me in person regarding the Alabama Power Co., its purposes and intentions, on the Coosa River, in Alabama, I beg to say:

The Alabama Power Co. was organized under the laws of the State of Alabama by a few Alabama friends and myself as a part of our well-known efforts, covering over a period of almost a quarter of a century, for the improvement of the Coosa River. After a long and tiresome undertaking we not only succeeded in interesting some splendid capital in the development of power on the Coosa River at Lock 12, but we also succeeded in interesting the American Cyanamid Co. in locating a large plant on the Coosa River, in Alabama, for the manufacture of an air nitrate fertilizer, known as calcium cyanamid, the particulars of all of which are set out very fully in a letter by Mr. J. W. Worthington of date July 3, 1912, attached to the report of the Senate Committee on Commerce on Senate bill 7343, and to which I beg to call your especial attention.

The Alabama Power Co. owns the power development at Lock 12, on the Coosa River, Ala., and is now at work building its dam for the development of power at this place, and for which we obtained the consent of Congress several years ago. The power plant at Lock 12 will develop, when complete, 10,000 continuous 24-hour horsepower. The Alabama Power Co. made a contract with the American Cyanamid Co. for 14,000 24-hour horsepower, to be used for the manufacture of the nitrate fertilizers, therefore, the development of power at Lock 12 will be insufficient to supply the needs and demands of the cyanamid company, to say nothing of the power that may be desired for other purposes, hence it is that the Alabama Power Co. is now asking a grant for the privilege of building a dam at Lock 18 on said river. The contract made with the American Cyanamid Co. is conditioned that the Alabama Power Co. succeed in getting a grant for the building of a dam at Lock 18, as contained in Senate bill 7343; hence you can realize why we are so anxious that this bill pass at the very earliest moment possible.

In our efforts to finance the Alabama Power Co. we tried for quite awhile to raise the money with which to make the development at Lock 12 in this country, but were unable to do so. We then took the matter up with foreign capitalists, and finally succeeded in interesting English and Canadian capital in the undertaking. Before going into this undertaking, however, these people examined the laws of this country bearing on this subject, both State and United States laws, and the money was raised with the expectation of being governed by the general dam laws of the United States as they now stand; hence any amendments to the bill from the way it passed the Senate would probably be fatal, and I trust that Congress pass Senate bill 7343 just as the same is now pending.

Kindly bear in mind this is not a promoting or speculating scheme; we have the money, and are now at work at Lock 12, and if the bill passes granting the Alabama Power Co. the right to build a dam at Lock 18 work will be commenced at this development within 60 days. Work will also be commenced in due time on the Cyanamid Co.'s plant, as the money is all ready now for its construction.

I hope you will also bear in mind that by the construction of these two dams proposed by the Alabama Power Co. they will save the United States Government, in its plans for the improvement of the Coosa River for navigation, $1,622,000 at each dam, making a total saving to the Government of $3,244,000 on the two dams, which, at 4 per cent interest, would be equivalent to a royalty of $6.42 per horsepower per annum.

There are quite a number of Alabama stockholders in this undertaking, and in which they are all very much interested, and not only that, but all Alabama is very vitally interested in seeing that these developments are carried through.

As for my record for the improvement of the Coosa River for the past quarter of a century, I herewith hand you several booklets and memorials touching on this subject which I had the honor of compiling, and to which I refer you.

Hoping the bill now pending will have the favorable consideration to which it is so justly due and that it will promptly pass the House and become a law, and with kindest personal regards, I am,

Very truly, yours,

W. P. LAY.

CONSTITUENTS AND RELATIVE VALUE OF CYANAMID.

The principal facts about cyanamid can briefly be told. It is a nitrogenous fertilizer whose ammonia is derived from the atmosphere. The available ammonia content is 94.4 per cent, the highest of any form of commercial ammoniates, as is shown by Bulletin No. 56 of the United States Department of Agriculture. The ammonia content is not volatile, being a trifle slower than sulphate of ammonia. It has the special quality of aiding plants to withstand droughts, and rains do not waste it. The results of fertilizing tests made with cyanamid by 37 Government experiment stations in Europe on all kinds of crops and covering a number of years show that it has a higher fertilizing value per unit of ammonia than either saltpeter or sulphate of ammonia, the relative values being: Sulphate of ammonia, 97; Chilean saltpeter, 100; and cyanamid, 105. The free lime content of cyanamid will be entirely eliminated in the United States, in deference to the requirements of the American trade, though this is not done in Europe. Cyanamid can be stored indefinitely in bags, with no loss of ammonia; it dries wet acid phosphate; it mixes well with all kinds of fertilizing material, without heat or reversion; it is cheaply handled, and is incombustible. It has been accepted by State agricultural departments throughout the country and its use as a fertilizer approved.

WORLD'S SUPPLY OF NITROGEN.

The exhaustion of soils in the United States has increased with great rapidity in recent years, and this has resulted in the establishment of great fertilizer industries, there being invested in factories for this purpose alone in the United States about $70,000,000; and yet the fertilizer industry is said to be only in its infancy. The world's chief supply of nitrogen comes from the Chilean desert, from which was exported in one recent year $75,000,000 worth of nitrate, practically 80 per cent of which was used in agriculture. During the last decade the exportation of Chilean nitrate has increased 60 per cent in quantity, 60 per cent in price, and 250 per cent in total value. The Chilean Government estimates that the nitrate fields will be exhausted in about 45 years.

The only other material sources of nitrogen are by-products of other industries in no way connected with agriculture. In the United States these by-products come chiefly from packing houses in the form of blood and tankage, and from gas plants and coke ovens in the form of sulphate of ammonia. Fish scrap, cottonseed meal, animal skins, and even the offal from whaling ships, are used by the fertilizer manufacturers for their nitrogen content. In fact, the world is being scoured for nitrogenous substances for use as fertilizers, and the supply in available form is entirely inadequate to the demand.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, the Government, in building and improving navigable streams out of the pockets of all of the people, in order to grant the free use of them to a few of the people, while at the same time imposing a charge for power incidentally developed by private capital in building a dam, is simply straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel. [Applause.]

During the debate in this House on the Black Warrior River bill I asked gentlemen here who were in favor of this new conservation policy what would be the difference in principle, in law, or in any other respect, between charging for the use of a river improved out of the Federal Treasury and charging for the use of a power incidentally developed by the construction of a dam built across the river. Gentlemen failed to answer that question in the open House, but admitted to me privately that it was unanswerable; that there was not any difference in principle or in law or in any other respect. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Give me just one more minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] asks for one minute more.

Mr. HEFLIN. Is the gentleman opposing this measure?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. No, sir; I am going to vote for the gentleman's bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then I will extend to the gentleman two minutes. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do not know that I want two minutes. This proposition of building and improving rivers and harbors and other navigable waters out of the Federal Treasury grew out of the condition existing in this country when all the people lived near the seashore and along the banks near the mouths of these large navigable streams; it grew out of a time antedating the railroads, out of a condition that no longer exists. But the practice still exists, ostensibly for the purpose of improving the navigable waters of the United States, but in reality to furnish the gentlemen representing those districts with campaign ammunition and the means of perpetuating themselves in office, so that the river and harbor bill to-day is known the country over as the "pork-barrel" bill, and has long since attained the proportions of a national scandal. [Applause.]

You are going to impose a tax upon the water power incidentally created by a dam in a river in the State of Alabama, while at the same time you are going into the pockets of all the people of this country for more than $60,000,000 to improve the Ohio River and make the use of it a present to the fleets of the Anthracite Coal Trust. That is "conservation" in the eyes of some gentlemen; and it is a singular fact, Mr. Speaker, that many of those gentlemen who are now attempting to hold up the development of the water power of this country until they can devise a method of wringing a few millions in Federal taxes from the users of the power are strongly in favor of the pork-barrel plan of spending many millions of the people's money——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The injustice, the absurdity, the economic unsoundness of this condition have led me to give this subject some study, as the result of which I prepared and introduced the following bill:

A bill (H. R. 22142) to develop a national system and policy of waterways; to create the waterways commission; to regulate and charge for the use of the improved navigable waters of the United States; to provide a fund for the improvement of the same; to regulate and charge for the use of water powers, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of this act shall apply to any corporation or any person or persons engaged in the transportation of passengers or property by water, and using water craft propelled by other than hand power (and excepting all State or municipally owned water craft not operated for profit and all vessels belonging to the Government of the United States), which are hereby designated to be water carriers, in and upon the navigable waters of the United States, the District of Columbia, and Alaska (and excluding the Panama Canal), upon which navigable waters the United States has heretofore expended or shall hereafter expend any money or services upon improvements, and which shall include the coast lines within the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States, rivers, harbors, lakes, bays, sounds, creeks, canals, channels, and their appurtenant dams, locks, docks, wharves, transfers, and other water terminal facilities, all of which, for the purposes of this act, shall be known as waterways.

SEC. 2. That a commission is hereby created and established to be known as the waterways commission, which shall be composed of three commissioners who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The commissioners first appointed under this act shall continue in office from the time of their appointment and for the term of two, four, and six years, respectively, from the 1st day of January, 1913, the term of each to be designated by the President; but their successors shall be appointed for terms of six years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he shall succeed. Any commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. Not more than two of the commissioners shall be appointed from the same political party. No person in the employ of or holding any official relation to any water carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or any common carrier subject to the provisions of the interstate-commerce laws of the United States, or owning stock or bonds in either class of said carriers, or who is in any manner pecuniarily interested therein, shall enter upon the duties of or hold such office. Said commissioners shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. No vacancy in the commission shall impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the powers of the commission.

The salaries of said commissioners shall be $10,000 per year each, and the offices of said commission shall be in Washington, D. C. Said commissioners shall provide such quarters, properly furnished and equipped, and shall further provide such clerical and other help as the business of the commission may require. Except as otherwise provided herein, the commissioners may fix the compensation of all subordinate officers and employees.

The commission may make and enforce the necessary rules and regulations to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the waterways commission, with the assistance, when authorized by the Secretary of War, of the Office of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and the Board of Engineer Officers in said office, to cause to be made surveys of the navigable waters of the United States, which shall include all the waters and their appurtenances mentioned in section 1 of this act, and to revise the same from time to time. There may be employed only in the Office of the Chief of Engineers and placed at the disposition of said Board of Army Engineers such civil engineers as may be deemed necessary to assist in the discharge of the additional duties hereby entailed upon said office. No money or services shall be expended upon any existing or proposed waterways improvement until it shall have been examined and reported upon by said Board of Engineer Officers and until it shall be approved by the Secretary of War as feasible and practicable and not incompatible with the interests of navigation.

Such surveys shall embrace the boundaries, character, and description of each of said waterways, the improvements theretofore made by or with the aid of the Government and heretofore or now existing in, upon, or along each of said waterways, where made and for what purpose, the cost of the same as near as may be, the portion of said cost paid by the Government, the portion paid by others and by whom, the quantity and character of the annual traffic in and upon each of said waterways, including every character and description of water craft, transportation, and facilities embraced in this act in so far as they relate to the carrying of passengers or property by water, together with such other information as may be deemed necessary to enable said commission to properly classify and value said waterways and facilities from the standpoint of improvements and traffic, for the purpose of fixing and collecting just and reasonable charges for the use of said waterways.

Such surveys shall be sufficiently completed for the purposes of the next section hereof on or before January 1, 1914.

The waterways shall be divided into districts, not to exceed nine in number, reference being had to natural grouping and such other considerations as may simplify and convenience the administration of the law. Each of said districts shall be under the immediate supervision of a district surveyor, who shall be appointed by the commissioners to hold office until removed for cause, at a salary to be fixed by the commissioners not to exceed $3,500 per year; and to have his office at a capital place in the district, designated by the commissioners; and to perform such duties and have such assistance as may be ordered by the commissioners.

SEC. 4. That when such surveys shall have been sufficiently completed as aforesaid to enable the commissioners to approximate the cost and relative value to the waterways of said improvements, it shall be their duty to impose an annual charge, where advisable; otherwise some form of toll or other usage charge for the use of such waterways, which shall be equivalent in the aggregate to not less than 1 nor more than 5 per cent of the part of said cost contributed in money and services by the Government, the actual rate fixed on or between these limits to be determined as near as may be by the relation the cost of the improvement to the Government bears to the value thereby given said waterways for navigation and transportation purposes, to the end that the greater value thus given shall bear the greater burden of recompense to the Government, but said charge to be equitably nd uniformly distributed, without any discrimination whatsoever, over all classes of water carriers and traffic embraced in this act, both foreign and domestic: Provided, That the commissioners may classify waterways and water carriers and traffic in such manner as they may deem practicable for the purpose of simplifying and effectuating the operation and enforcement of this act, and may grade the charges to be attached to such classifications, and, upon due notice, to alter such classifications and rates from time to time: Provided always, That such classifications and the attaching grade of rates and changes of the same shall not be permitted to work any discrimination or preference of any character with reference to any class of waterway, water carrier, or traffic.

The commissioners shall make a thorough and exhaustive study of waterways and water craft for the purposes of this act and before putting the same into operation within the time fixed in this act, and may recommend to the Congress such additional legislation as they may deem necessary touching the improvement, regulation, and use of the waterways for the purposes of this act.

All data secured under direction and authority of law by the Engineer Corps touching water traffic, freight classification, ton-mileage statistics, terminal and transfer facilities, development and utilization of water power for industrial and commercial purposes, and other subjects connected with the improvement and use of navigable waters shall be available to the Waterways Commission for all of the purposes of this act.

SEC. 5. That to assist said commissioners to properly impose and collect the aforesaid charges it shall be the duty of the owners of all water craft embraced in this act, on or before the 1st day of January, 1913, and the 1st day of January in each year thereafter, upon forms prescribed by the Waterways Commission, to make a true and accurate return under oath or affirmation of the individual owner, copartner, or one of the principal officers of a corporation, as the case may be, to the commission, through the district surveyor of the district in or nearest to which the owner, if there be but one, or if more than one, the husband or acting and managing owner of such vessel, usually resides, setting forth:

First. In the case of registered vessels, whether registered under the laws of the United States or of any foreign Government, a duly authenticated copy of the certificate of registry.

Second. In the case of unregistered vessels, such description thereof approximating the information contained in certificates of registry as the commissioners may deem necessary to indicate the character, capacity, and business of such vessel, with a view to determining its proper class and grade of navigable water tax.

Third. Such other information, applicable to all classes of vessels, domestic or foreign, registered or unregistered, coastal or inland, and including tugs, barges, ferries, lighters, and every form of water vessel embraced in this act, which will enable the Waterways Commission to put into effect and administer the provisions of this act.

Upon the filing of said return with and its approval by the commission, a certificate of authority in due form shall be given said vessel to ply for the purposes and in the waters mentioned in said certificate for a period of one year from the date thereof upon payment of the aforesaid charge, which payment, however, may be made at the aforesaid district surveyor's office in such part or parts and at such time or times as may be fixed by the Waterways Commission.

Inspectors may be employed by the commissioners to assist in securing complete and accurate returns of all the water craft herein included, and for this purpose said inspectors shall have access to any books, records, and other information kept at any ports of entry or water-route terminals or elsewhere, either by the owners of such craft or any public authority, and used in the assessing of tonnage or other port duties, dockage, pilotage, and similar charges.

SEC. 6. That the basis of charge for carrying freight upon registered vessels and vessels practicably capable of such measurement shall be the net tonnage as ascertained by the vessel-measurement laws of the United States.

Vessels of all other descriptions shall be classified and charged upon such practicable basis as will correspond in amount as nearly as may be to the net tonnage charges; and upon this basis also annual licenses may be charged to passenger-carrying vessels plying daily between ports in domestic waters, ferries, tugs, barges, lighters, launches, and similar craft.

In the laying and collecting of charges upon vessels plying between ports of the United States, the District of Columbia, and Alaska and foreign ports, the laws and practices governing tonnage duties shall be followed as nearly as practicable, and the same may be done with reference to the coastwise, coast to coast, lake and river traffic, and other watercourses, where the regularity and volume of the traffic renders such methods practicable.

All other passenger-carrying vessels and vessels carrying both freight and passengers shall, as to such passenger traffic, pay a head tax or an annual tax upon the gross receipts of such traffic, which shall correspond to and represent as nearly as may be the comparative value of passenger to freight traffic.

Pleasure and all other craft included but not enumerated in this act and using such waters shall be licensed in such manner as the commissioners may determine, upon payment of fees to be prescribed by the commissioners, in the fixing of which fees the commissioners shall be guided as far as practicable by the rule of charging set forth in this section; that is to say, the reasonable value. It shall be the duty of the owners of all the water craft embraced in this paragraph to make and file their sworn statement at the time and place mentioned in section 5 of this act, upon forms prescribed by the Waterways Commission, containing such information as the commissioners may call for to insure the identity, description, and taxation of all such craft.

SEC. 7. That all returns or statements called for by this act shall be filed in the Waterways Commission, and in case of any return or statement made with a false or fraudulent intent, 100 per cent shall be added to such charge, and in case of a refusal or neglect to make such return or statement, or to verify the same 50 per cent shall be added to such charge: Provided, That the district surveyor may, upon good cause shown, allow such further time for making and delivering such return as may be deemed necessary, not exceeding 30 days. The amount so added to the charge shall be collected at the same time and in the same manner as the charge originally assessed, unless the refusal, neglect, or falsity is discovered after the date of payment of such charges, in which case the amount so added shall be paid by the delinquent owner or owners immediately upon notice given by the commissioners (or district surveyor).

All charges shall be made and the several owners shall be notified of the amount for which they are, respectively, liable on or before the 1st day of June of each successive year, and said assessment shall be paid before the 30th day of June.

Every officer or employee of the United States who knowingly makes or is concerned in making any false record, or who knowingly grants or is concerned in granting any false certificate or other document whatever required to be issued under the provisions of this act and contrary to the true intent and meaning of this act, or who receives any voluntary reward or gratuity for any of the services performed pursuant thereto, or who knowingly violates any other provision of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not to exceed $1,000 or be imprisoned not to exceed one year, or both, in the discretion of the court, with the costs of prosecution, and shall be rendered incapable of serving in any office of trust or profit under the United States.

Any person authorized by law to make, render, sign, or verify any return or statement who makes any false or fraudulent return or statement, with intent to defeat or evade or diminish the charge required by this act to be made, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not to exceed $1,000 or be imprisoned not to exceed one year, or both, in the discretion of the court, with the costs of prosecution.

Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the circuit and district courts of the United States for the district within which any person summoned under this act to appear, to testify, or to produce books and records, shall reside to compel such attendance, production, and testimony by appropriate process.

SEC. 8. That for the purposes of this act only jurisdiction of canals and other waterways, if any, now paying tolls or charges to the Government, and including water-power leases or licenses under existing law, and all forms of navigable-water use for which a charge is made by the Government, shall for the purposes of this act be, and the same are hereby, transferred from the Secretary of War to the Waterways Commission, and for such purposes only exclusive jurisdiction shall henceforth vest in said commission over all waterways included in section 1 of this act.

The commission is hereby authorized and directed to fix and collect just and proper charge or charges for the privilege granted to all dams authorized and constructed under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters, approved June 21, 1906,' approved June 23, 1910," whether or not such navigable stream is benefited by Government storage reservoirs, forested watersheds, or lands.

The commission is authorized and empowered to lease to the highest responsible bidder, for a period not exceeding 50 years and at an annual rental to be fixed by the commission, the right to construct, maintain, own, and operate, in connection with storage reservoirs, dams, and locks, upon any navigable stream, whether such storage reservoirs, dams, and locks are constructed or owned by the Government or others, electrical plants and other structures for the development of light, heat, and power for industrial and other purposes, including the right to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of said light, heat, and power, at rates to be fixed and regulated from time to time by the commission. The lessee shall furnish and deliver free of charge to the Government at any such electrical plant all light, heat, and power necessary for the use of the Government in connection with the occupancy of grounds and buildings situated at, and for the operation of, locks owned by the Government. The right of cancellation for forfeiture or violation by the lessee of his terms of lease shall be expressly reserved by the commission in all leases, licenses, or permits issued or renewed under this act.

SEC. 9. That there is hereby created and established in the Treasury of the United States a fund to be known as the waterways improvement fund, in which shall be deposited all moneys collected under the provisions of this act, to be used in waterways improvements, maintenance, and repairs, as the Secretary of War may direct, preference being given to the specific waterway or course from which such funds were collected; and all such moneys are hereby appropriated to the uses herein set forth: Provided, That the creation of said fund shall not be held to affect, change, or diminish the existing practice and right of Congress to authorize or make appropriations for specific improvements.

Annual reports of such receipts and expenditures shall be made to the President and the Congress.

SEC. 10. That the Waterways Commission, with the aid of the Engineer Corps of the Army, through the Chief Engineer, shall apply itself to the study and working out of a comprehensive and systematic plan of waterways improvement, development, and articulation, including all waters mentioned in section 1 of this act, whether improved or not; the questions of water transportation facilities, terminals, appliances, and equipment, both public and private; the general location and description of water terminals and the extent and method of their use by water carriers and their general efficiency, and whether open to use by all water carriers on equal terms, and such information as may be accessible as to the terms and conditions of use; whether physical connection exists between such water terminals and the railroad or railroads serving the same territory or municipality, and whether there exists between any of the water carriers operating upon waters under improvement or heretofore improved and any railroad or railroads a mutual contract for interchange of traffic by prorating as to such long-distance traffic as may be desired to be carried partly by rail and partly by water to its destination; and whether improved and adequate highways have been constructed to each water terminal; combinations, monopolies, or conditions affecting competition, facilities, traffic, rates, and service, either among water carriers or between such carriers and common carriers; the cooperation of States and cities with the General Government in waterways improvements; ways and means; and such other proper related questions as may arise; and to report their findings and recommendations to the Congress annually, and oftener if called for, to the end that the United States may establish and develop a national system and policy of waterways which shall be self-sustaining as far as practicable.

The commission is specifically directed to investigate conditions in the coastwise shipping trade, with particular reference to the alleged exclusive monopoly of water routes, terminal ports, and traffic territory enjoyed by each ship line or company now engaged in such coastwise traffic; the cause of such conditions; the effect thereof upon the coastwise trade and its transportation facilities, service, and rates, and upon rail competition; and whether and to what extent such conditions of monopoly exist upon any and all other waterways and courses of the United States, with the like information concerning the same as that herein called for touching the coastwise trade, and to report their findings and recommendations to the Congress.

The commission shall also, in the manner provided in section 3 of this act, make a comprehensive study of water powers upon navigable streams, with a view to the development and utilization of the same for industrial and commercial purposes, and report from time to time their findings and recommendations to the Congress.

SEC. 11. That the President of the United States may, in his discretion, impose upon the Waterways Commission such duties touching the administration of the commercial usages of the Panama Canal as he may deem advisable, and particularly that part of the power and authority now or hereafter conferred by the Congress upon the President concerning commercial traffic through the Panama Canal and the basis, rates, and collection of tolls, and the enforcement of rules and regulations made or authorized by the President, relating to the foregoing features of the canal administration; and it shall further be the duty of said Waterways Commission to make and continuously carry on investigations and study of the water routes and traffic, shipping, shipping laws, and practices of the world, with a view to the encouragement and promotion of the commercial use of the Panama Canal and the means whereby this end may be properly promoted.

SEC. 12. That until otherwise provided by law, jurisdiction of the navigable waters of the United States for all purposes shall remain in the Secretary of War, as prescribed by the several acts of Congress, except as in this act otherwise provided.

SEC. 13. That to defray the cost of this act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

SEC. 14. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. Speaker, I will get through in one minute more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks for one minute more.

Mr. SHERLEY. Regular order, Mr. Speaker. I am willing to have the debate run for an hour, but I am not willing to have one gentleman go ahead after the debate is closed. It is not fair.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I will ask that the amendment which I offered be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 2 and insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That the said corporation, its successors or assigns, authorized by this act to construct, maintain, and operate the dam shall not be permitted to construct, maintain, own, or operate in connection with such dam any electrical power stations or other structures for the development of hydroelectric power for industrial or other purposes unless and until such corporation has received a written permit therefor from the Secretary of War which shall contain the stipulations hereinafter prescribed and which shall be specifically agreed to and subscribed by the grantee as the condition upon which the consent of the United States is granted.

"SEC. 3. That the permit herein required shall provide:

"(a) That the grantee shall pay to the United States annually not less than $1 per horsepower developed by the water so used, the proceeds to be used for the improvement of navigation on the stream to be affected by the proposed dam or to be used for the improvement of navigation on the waters connected therewith.

"(b) That the annual charge thus fixed shall continue in force for a period of 10 years from a date to be fixed in the permit, which shall not be later than the date upon which the grantee, under the terms of the permit, is to begin the development of hydroelectric power. That every 10 years thereafter the annual rate shall be readjusted for the ensuing 10-year period, and if for any reason the Secretary of War and the grantee fail to agree upon a new rate for the ensuing 10-year perior, then and in that event the rate for such ensuing 10-year period shall be fixed by the Secretary of War and the rate so prescribed shall be the legal rate during the ensuing 10-year period: Provided, That such rate shall not be unreasonable or confiscatory: Provided further, That if the courts hold the rates fixed by the Secretary of War to be unreasonable the court so holding may fix a reasonable rate, and thereafter the rate so fixed shall be the annual rate for that 10-year period. That at the end of each 10-year period, and before the annual rate to be paid by the grantee for the ensuing 10-year period has been fixed, the Secretary of War shall ascertain how much hydroelectric power can economically be developed by the surplus waters at said dam, and the annual rate thereafter shall be based upon the amount of hydroelectric power so ascertained to be possible of economical development.

"(c) That the Secretary of War shall have free access to all books of the grantee and all other records necessary for ascertaining and calculating the amount of power developed and possible of development by the grantee with the surplus water at such dam, and the rates and prices at which such power is sold by the grantee.

"(d) That the grantee shall have incorporated in its charter a provision requiring it to abide by whatever reasonable regulation of the rates and of the service may be prescribed by the State wherein the power is developed and sold, or of any delegated agency of the State, whether that agency be a State commission, municipality, or other local governing body: Provided, That the Secretary of War may prescribe such reasonable regulations if the State or other delegated agency thereof fail for any reason so to do.

"(e) That whenever the hydroelectric power produced with the surplus water at said dam constructed by authority of this act enters into interstate commerce the grantee shall agree to abide by whatever reasonable regulation of its rates and of its service may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

"(f) That the corporation having a permit to develop hydroelectric power under the provisions of this act shall not, without having first obtained the written consent of the Secretary of War, sell or deliver any power so developed to any transmission company, or sell or deliver more than 25 per cent of the power developed to any one person, firm, or corporation.

"(g) That the grantee shall have ingress and egress over Government lands for the operation of its plants and works and the right to use Government lands at or near the said works for the erection of power houses and appurtenances in connection therewith, subject to the approval of and regulation by the Secretary of War.

"(h) That at the expiration of the term for which the permit is granted all of the buildings, plants, and other property of the grantee constructed or used in the development of hydroelectric power under the provisions of this act, and all other property and rights appurtenant thereto, shall be transferred to the United States by the grantee upon payment by the United States of the reasonable value thereof.

"(i) That the Secretary of War, whenever authorized by Congress so to do, may, at any time before the expiration of the term for which the permit shall have been issued, purchase the buildings, lines, plants, and other property of the grantee at such dam constructed or used by it in the development or transmission of hydroelectric power, upon payment to the grantee or its assigns of the reasonable going value thereof: Provided, That the value of the franchise or permit issued in pursuance of this act shall not be reckoned as an element of value in determining the reasonable value of such buildings, lines, plant, and other property.

"SEC. 4. That if the grantee under this act shall transfer by alienation, lease, or otherwise any right or privilege granted under the provisions of this act without the consent and approval of the Secretary of War the permit issued by the Secretary of War to such grantee shall thereby be rendered null and void.

"SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved, and the United States shall incur no liability for the alteration, amendment, or repeal thereof to the owner or owners or any other person interested in said dam or other structure which shall have been constructed in accordance with its provisions."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONDELL. During the debate I suggested an amendment which I had not at that time reduced to writing. Can I present the amendment now and have it considered at the proper time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks under that agreement that the gentleman could.

Mr. MONDELL. Then I present the matter now, to be considered at the proper time.

The SPEAKER. The question first is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, has the time for debate expired?

The SPEAKER. The time for debate has expired. The vote is to be taken on these amendments. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 55.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the ayes are 39, the noes are 55. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors; the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees; and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the Humphreys amendment will vote "yea," and those opposed will vote "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 89, nays 98, answered "present" 12, not voting 191, as follows:

YEAS—89.

Alexander	Gardner, Mass.	McKinney	Sterling
Allen	Gray	McLaughlin	Stone
Anthony	Greene, Mass.	Maguire, Nebr.	Sulloway
Beall, Tex.	Griest	Moon, Tenn.	Sulzer
Bowman	Hamilton, Mich.	Moore, Pa.	Sweet
Buchanan	Helgesen	Morgan	Talcott, N. Y.
Bulkley	Helm	Morrison	Taylor, Ohio
Burke, Wis.	Howland	Moss, Ind.	Thayer
Butler	Humphreys, Miss.	Murdock	Thomas
Candler	Jones	Norris	Towner
Cline	Kendall	Olmsted	Tuttle
Cooper	Kennedy	Payne	Utter
Crumpacker	Kent	Rainey	Wedemeyer
Curley	Korbly	Raker	White
Danforth	Lafean	Rees	Willis
Davis, Minn.	Lever	Sherley	Wilson, Ill.
Dixon, Ind.	Lloyd	Sisson	Wilson, Pa.
Donohoe	Lobeck	Sloan	Witherspoon
Doremus	Longworth	Small	Woods, Iowa.
Farr	McCall	Smith, J. M. C.	Young, Kans.
Foster	McCoy	Speer
Fowler	McCreary	Steenerson
Gallagher	McDermott	Stephens, Miss.

NAYS—98.

Adamson	Dwight	Henry, Tex.	Patten, N. Y.
Aiken, S. C.	Faison	Hensley	Pepper
Ashbrook	Fergusson	Holland	Post
Austin	Ferris	Houston	Ransdell, La.
Blackmon	Finley	Howell	Roddenbery
Booher	Fitzgerald	Hull	Rodenberg
Borland	Flood, Va.	Humphrey, Wash.	Rucker, Mo.
Brantley	Floyd, Ark.	Johnson, S. C.	Russell
Brown	Foss	Kinkead, N. J.	Sims
Burke, S. Dak.	French	Lafferty	Slayden
Burleson	Gill	La Follette	Smith, Saml. W.
Burnett	Gillett	Lamb	Smith, Tex.
Byrns, Tenn.	Glass	Lee, Ga.	Stedman
Cannon	Godwin, N. C.	Lee, Pa.	Stephens, Tex.
Cantrill	Gooke	Lewis	Taggart
Carlin	Goodwin, Ark.	Littlepage	Townsend
Carter	Graham	McKellar	Tribble
Claypool	Hamilton, W. Va.	McKinley	Turnbull
Clayton	Hamlin	Mann	Underhill
Crago	Hammond	Martin, Colo.	Underwood
Curry	Hardy	Miller	Watkins
Davenport	Hawley	Murray	Webb
Dent	Hay	Needham	Whitacre
Denver	Hayden	Oldfield
Doughton	Heflin	Padgett

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—12.

Browning	Garrett	Hill	Mondell
Campbell	Greene, Vt.	Linthicum	Sparkman
Difenderfer	Harrison, Miss.	McMorran	Talbott, Md.

NOT VOTING—191.

Adair	Driscoll, M. E.	Kindred	Pujo
Ainey	Dupré	Kinkaid, Nebr.	Randell, Tex.
Akin, N. Y.	Dyer	Kitchin	Rauch
Ames	Edwards	Knowland	Redfield
Anderson, Minn.	Ellerbe	Konig	Reilly
Anderson, Ohio	Esch	Konop	Reyburn
Andrus	Estopinal	Kopp	Richardson
Ansberry	Evans	Langham	Riordan
Ayres	Fairchild	Langley	Roberts, Mass.
Barchfeld	Fields	Lawrence	Roberts, Nev.
Barnhardt	Focht	Legare	Robinson
Bartholdt	Fordney	Lenroot	Rothermel
Bartlett	Fornes	Levy	Rouse
Bates	Francis	Lindbergh	Rubey
Bathrick	Fuller	Lindsay	Rucker, Colo.
Bell, Ga.	Gardner, N. J.	Littleton	Sabath
Berger	Garner	Loud	Saunders
Boehne	George	McGillicuddy	Scully
Bradley	Goldfogle	McGuire, Okla.	Sells
Broussard	Good	McHenry	Shackleford
Burgess	Gould	McKenzie	Sharp
Burke, Pa.	Green, Iowa	Macon	Sheppard
Byrnes, S. C.	Gregg, Pa.	Madden	Sherwood
Calder	Gregg, Tex.	Maher	Simmons
Callaway	Gudger	Martin, S. Dak.	Slemp
Cary	Guernsey	Matthews	Smith, Cal.
Clark, Fla.	Hamill	Mays	Smith, N. Y.
Collier	Hanna	Moon, Pa.	Stack
Connell	Hardwick	Moore, Tex.	Stanley
Conry	Harris	Morse, Wis.	Stephens, Cal.
Copley	Harrison, N. Y.	Mott	Stephens, Nebr.
Covington	Hartman	Neeley	Stevens, Minn.
Cox, Ind.	Haugen	Nelson	Switzer
Cox, Ohio	Hayes	Nye	Taylor, Ala.
Cravens	Heald	O'Shaunessy	Taylor, Colo.
Currier	Henry, Conn.	Page	Thistlewood
Dalzell	Higgins	Palmer	Tilson
Daugherty	Hinds	Parran	Vare
Davidson	Hobson	Patton, Pa.	Volstead
Davis, W. Va.	Howard	Peters	Vreeland
De Forest	Hughes, Ga.	Pickett	Warburton
Dickinson	Hughes, N. J.	Plumley	Weeks
Dickson, Miss.	Hughes, W. Va.	Porter	Wilder
Dies	Jackson	Pou	Wilson, N. Y.
Dodds	Jacoway	Powers	Wood, N. J.
Draper	James	Pray	Young, Mich.
Driscoll, D. A.	Johnson, Ky.	Prince	Young, Tex.
	Kahn	Prouty

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

For the remainder of this session:

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado with Mr. DRAPER.

Mr. RIORDAN with Mr. ANDRUS.

Mr. MCGILLICUDDY with Mr. GUERNSEY (on all questions except battleship appropriations, free tolls, and interstate shipment of intoxicating liquors).

Mr. HOBSON with Mr. FAIRCHILD.

Mr. HOWARD with Mr. DE FOREST.

Mr. FORNES with Mr. BRADLEY.

Mr. EVANS with Mr. TILSON.

Mr. BROUSSARD with Mr. YOUNG of Michigan.

Mr. BELL of Georgia with Mr. LANGHAM.

Until further notice:

Mr. WILSON of New York with Mr. WOOD of New Jersey.

Mr. STANLEY with Mr. WILDER.

Mr. ROUSE with Mr. VARE.

Mr. RAUCH with Mr. PRAY.

Mr. KONOP with Mr. PRINCE.

Mr. KONIG with Mr. REYBURN.

Mr. KITCHIN with Mr. PATTON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. KINDRED with Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. JACOWAY with Mr. KOPP.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey with Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska.

Mr. GEORGE with Mr. KAHN.

Mr. DANIEL A. DRISCOLL with Mr. HAUGEN.

Mr. CULLOP with Mr. GOOD.

Mr. COX of Indiana with Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey.

Mr. CONNELL with Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania.

Mr. AYRES with Mr. BARTHOLDT.

Mr. ADAIR with Mr. BARCHFELD.

Mr. BURGESS with Mr. WEEKS.

Mr. JAMES with Mr. SELLS.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland with Mr. PARRAN.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado with Mr. AMES.

Mr. SHERWOOD with Mr. CALDER.

Mr. SAUNDERS with Mr. PICKETT.

Mr. SHARP with Mr. MOTT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska with Mr. GREEN of Iowa.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD with Mr. DYER.

Mr. SABATH with Mr. HIGGINS.

Mr. SHEPPARD with Mr. BATES.

Mr. SCULLY with Mr. BROWNING.

Mr. SPARKMAN with Mr. DAVIDSON.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas with Mr. SMITH of California.

Mr. RUBEY with Mr. KNOWLAND.

Mr. REILLY with Mr. WARBURTON.

Mr. RICHARDSON with Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota.

Mr. PALMER with Mr. HILL (with mutual privilege of transfer).

Mr. PETERS with Mr. HAYES.

Mr. POU with Mr. PORTER.

Mr. PAGE with Mr. MONDELL.

Mr. PUJO with Mr. MCMORRAN.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY with Mr. PLUMLEY.

Mr. NEELEY with Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts.

Mr. MAHER with Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada.

Mr. MAYS with Mr. THISTLEWOOD.

Mr. LEVY with Mr. MATTHEWS.

Mr. LITTLETON with Mr. COPLEY.

Mr. LEGARE with Mr. LOUD.

Mr. HARRISON of New York with Mr. MCGUIRE of Oklahoma.

Mr. GREGG of Texas with Mr. MCKENZIE.

Mr. HARDWICK with Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia with Mr. NYE.

Mr. GARRETT with Mr. FORDNEY.

Mr. GOULD with Mr. AINEY.

Mr. GARNER with Mr. HINDS.

Mr. GUDGER with Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE with Mr. SWITZER.

Mr. FRANCIS with Mr. POWERS.

Mr. FIELD with Mr. LANGLEY.

Mr. ELLERBE with Mr. CURRIER.

Mr. EDWARDS with Mr. DALZELL.

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia with Mr. HARRIS.

Mr. DUPRÉ with Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota (on water bills and vetoes only).

Mr. DAUGHERTY with Mr. SIMMONS.

Mr. DICKINSON with Mr. HEALD.

Mr. DIES with Mr. LAWRENCE.

Mr. COVINGTON with Mr. FOCHT.

Mr. COLLIER with Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota.

Mr. CLARK of Florida with Mr. FULLER.

Mr. CALLOWAY with Mr. DODDS.

Mr. CONRY with Mr. JACKSON.

Mr. BOEHNE with Mr. CARY.

Mr. BARTLETT with Mr. VREELAND.
Mr. BARNHART with Mr. HENRY of Connecticut.
On this vote:
Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi with Mr. SLEMP.
From August 20 to August 24:
Mr. ROTHERMEL with Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL.
Until August 28:
Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina with Mr. MADDEN.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no," but I find I am paired with the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. PAGE, and I want to change my vote to "present."

The Clerk called the name of Mr. MONDELL, and he answered "Present."

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I answered "no," but I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. HARDWICK, and I wish to withdraw that and vote "present."

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CAMPBELL, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, the Doorkeeper will open the doors, and further proceedings under the call are dispensed with. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, my understanding was that amendments had to be introduced or offered during the two hours' debate, and at the expiration of the two hours we were to vote steadily on the amendments and then on the bill, without the introduction of any other amendments or further discussion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has forgotten the precise language of the agreement.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the amendment that I offered was an amendment that I referred to during the brief time that I had for the discussion. I did not have it in written form at the time, but sent it to the desk later.

The SPEAKER. The reporter's notes will show what the agreement was.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will not object, in any event.

Mr. HEFLIN. There might be some difference in the situation of the gentleman from Wyoming, because I remember that he did refer to his amendment during the debate. If the gentleman from Illinois and other Members are to offer amendments now, we might as well not have had any agreement to close the matter up.

Mr. MONDELL. I understood that amendments must be offered during the period of debate, and I referred to my amendment, but did not have an opportunity to present it in written form until later. As soon as I had it in written form I presented it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read the statement of the Speaker at the time:

The SPEAKER. Let us see if we can get this right.

There have been several propositions and suggestions one way and the other.

The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the debate on this bill shall continue for two hours, one half of the time to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois, and that during the two hours anybody can offer an amendment and have it pending, and at the end of two hours the previous question will be ordered on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

That will shut out the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. But, Mr. Speaker, I referred to my amendment during the debate.

The SPEAKER. This agreement is as plain as day, that during the two hours anybody could offer an amendment and have it pending.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, under the circumstances, having referred to the amendment during the debate, that I may be allowed to have the amendment now pending.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I am constrained to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey objects. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FOWLER. I rise to make a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FOWLER moves to recommit the bill to the committee, with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment:

On page 2, after the word "six," line 7, by adding the following: "Provided, That not less than 7 per cent of the gross income of all business operated by water power developed by such dams shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the motion to recommit was lost.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MANN. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 94, nays 87, answered "present" 16, not voting 193, as follows:

YEAS—94.

Adamson	Ferris	Howell	Raker
Aiken, S. C.	Flood, Va.	Hull	Ransdell, La.
Austin	Floyd, Ark.	Humphrey, Wash.	Roddenbery
Beall, Tex.	Gill	Johnson, S. C.	Rodenberg
Blackmon	Gillett	Jones	Rucker, Mo.
Booher	Glass	Kinkead, N. J.	Russell
Borland	Godwin, N. C.	Lafferty	Sims
Brantley	Goeke	Lamb	Slayden
Brown	Goodwin, Ark.	Lee, Ga.	Smith, Tex.
Burnett	Hamilton, Mich.	Lee, Pa.	Stanley
Byrns, Tenn.	Hamilton, W. Va.	Lewis	Stedman
Cannon	Hamlin	Linthicum	Stephens, Tex.
Cantrill	Hammond	Littlepage	Sweet
Carlin	Hardy	McKellar	Taggart
Carter	Harrison, Miss.	McKinley	Tribble
Claypool	Hawley	Martin, Colo.	Turnbull
Clayton	Hay	Miller	Tuttle
Curry	Hayden	Moon, Tenn.	Underhill
Davenport	Heflin	Murray	Underwood
Dent	Helm	Oldfield	Watkins
Denver	Henry, Tex.	Padgett	Webb
Doughton	Hensley	Patten, N. Y.	Whitacre
Faison	Holland	Pepper
Fergusson	Houston	Post

NAYS—87.

Alexander	French	McCreary	Smith, Saml. W.
Allen	Gallagher	McDermott	Speer
Anthony	Gardner, Mass.	McKinney	Steenerson
Bowman	Gardner, N. J.	McLaughlin	Stephens, Miss.
Buchanan	Gray	Maguire, Nebr.	Sterling
Bulkley	Greene, Mass.	Mann	Stone
Burke, Wis.	Greene, Vt.	Moore, Pa.	Sulloway
Butler	Griest	Morgan	Talcott, N. Y.
Candler	Helgesen	Morrison	Taylor, Ohio
Cline	Howland	Moss, Ind.	Thayer
Cooper	Humphreys, Miss.	Murdock	Thomas
Crumpacker	Kendall	Norris	Towner
Curley	Kent	Olmsted	Utter
Danforth	Korbly	Payne	Vare
Davis, Minn.	Lafean	Pray	Wedemeyer
Donohoe	La Follette	Rainey	White
Doremus	Lever	Rees	Willis
Dwight	Lloyd	Sherley	Wilson, Ill.
Farr	Lobeck	Sisson	Witherspoon
Foss	Longworth	Sloan	Woods, Iowa
Foster	McCall	Small	Young, Kans.
Fowler	McCoy	Smith, J. M. C.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—16.

Ashbrook	Campbell	Hill	Needham
Barchfeld	Dixon, Ind.	Konig	Sparkman
Browning	Fitzgerald	McMorran	Talbott, Md.
Burke, S. Dak.	Garrett	Mondell	Weeks

NOT VOTING—193.

Adair	Dalzell	Guernsey	Littleton
Ainey	Daugherty	Hamill	Loud
Akin, N. Y.	Davidson	Hanna	McGillicuddy
Ames	Davis, W. Va.	Hardwick	McGuire, Okla.
Anderson, Minn.	De Forest	Harris	McHenry
Anderson, Ohio	Dickinson	Harrison, N. Y.	McKenzie
Andrus	Dickson, Miss.	Hartman	Macon
Ansberry	Dies	Haugen	Madden
Ayres	Difenderfer	Hayes	Maher
Barnhart	Dodds	Heald	Martin, S. Dak.
Bartholdt	Draper	Henry, Conn.	Matthews
Bartlett	Driscoll, D. A.	Higgins	Mays
Bates	Driscoll, M. E.	Hinds	Moon, Pa.
Bathrick	Dupré	Hobson	Moore, Tex.
Bell, Ga.	Dyer	Howard	Morse, Wis.
Berger	Edwards	Hughes, Ga.	Mott
Boehne	Ellerbe	Hughes, N. J.	Neeley
Bradley	Esch	Hughes, W. Va.	Nelson
Broussard	Estopinal	Jackson	Nye
Burgess	Evans	Jacoway	O'Shaunessy
Burke, Pa.	Fairchild	James	Page
Burleson	Fields	Johnson, Ky.	Palmer
Byrnes, S. C.	Finley	Kahn	Parran
Calder	Focht	Kennedy	Patton, Pa.
Callaway	Fordney	Kindred	Peters
Cary	Fornes	Kinkaid, Nebr.	Pickett
Clark, Fla.	Francis	Kitchin	Plumley
Collier	Fuller	Knowland	Porter
Connell	Garner	Konop	Pou
Conry	George	Kopp	Powers
Copley	Goldfogle	Langham	Prince
Covington	Good	Langley	Prouty
Cox, Ind.	Gould	Lawrence	Pujo
Cox, Ohio	Graham	Legare	Randell, Tex.
Crago	Green, Iowa	Lenroot	Rauch
Cravens	Gregg, Pa.	Levy	Redfield
Cullop	Gregg, Tex.	Lindbergh	Reilly
Currier	Gudger	Lindsay	Reyburn

Richardson	Scully	Stephens, Cal.	Vreeland
Riordan	Sells	Stephens, Nebr.	Warburton
Roberts, Mass.	Shackleford	Stevens, Minn.	Wilder
Roberts, Nev.	Sharp	Sulzer	Wilson, N. Y.
Robinson	Sheppard	Switzer	Wilson, Pa.
Rothermel	Sherwood	Taylor, Ala.	Wood, N. J.
Rouse	Simmons	Taylor, Colo.	Young, Mich.
Rubey	Slemp	Thistlewood	Young, Tex.
Rucker, Colo.	Smith, Cal.	Tilson
Sabath	Smith, N. Y.	Townsend
Saunders	Stack	Volstead

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. DIXON of Indiana with Mr. CRAGO.

Mr. BATHRICK with Mr. NEEDHAM.

Mr. SULZER with Mr. WILDER.

Mr. BURLESON with Mr. MATTHEWS.

Mr. RAUCH with Mr. KENNEDY.

Mr. COX of Indiana with Mr. SLEMP.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in his seat listening when his name was called?

Mr. ASHBROOK. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio may be recorded for the purpose of making a quorum, may he not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has a right to count the gentleman for the purpose of a quorum. The Chair can not see any objection to his answering "present" to make a quorum.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will answer "present."

The Clerk called the name of Mr. ASHBROOK, and he answered "Present."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I desire the same privilege.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, and he answered "Present."

The names of Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. HILL, Mr. NEEDHAM, and Mr. BARCHFELD were also called, and they responded "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. HEFLIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the request for all gentlemen who spoke upon this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who spoke upon this bill may have permission to extend their remarks.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I couple with that a request that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] have leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I mean for five legislative days.

The SPEAKER. Five legislative days. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent——

Mr. MANN. No; I coupled that with the other request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman puts Mr. BOWMAN, of Pennsylvania, in with the others.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the request as stated in its last form.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects to the request.

Mr. MANN. If gentlemen are unwilling to let a gentleman make a speech concerning his own seat, there will be no further extensions by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Debate is out of order.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I submitted a request for unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Alabama extended it so as to take in everybody else, and the gentleman from Illinois objected.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BATHRICK, for one day, on account of illness.

To Mr. WILSON of New York, for the remainder of the session, on account of illness.

CONDEMNED BRASS AND BRONZE CANNON.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following House bill with Senate amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24458) authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to deliver to certain cities and towns condemned brass or bronze cannon with their carriages and outfit of cannon balls, etc.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHERLEY. How does this particular bill which the clerk has read get before the House?

The SPEAKER. Why, it was on the Speaker's table.

Mr. SHERLEY. By what right is it called from the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair laid it before the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the rule requires that it should be referred to a committee——

Mr. HAY. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am very much opposed to the passage of the bill——

The SPEAKER. If the amendments required it to go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, why then the rule the gentleman cites applies.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is appropriating property of the Government of the United States.

Mr. HAY. Well, I do not think it is. I think it is a bill simply loaning these cannon, but makes them subject to be recalled at any time if the Government or the War Department needs them.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will permit, while I am very much in favor of the passage of this bill—H. R. 24458—it is a Union Calendar bill, and I think was properly on the Union Calendar at the time, and if it was properly on the Union Calendar at the time the Senate amendments are Union Calendar amendments,

The SPEAKER. That is absolutely true, and in that case it will have to go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANN. The amendments of the Senate in this case are precisely the same, so far as that is concerned, as the original provisions of the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Why, of course that is true; but the Chair, without examining it, supposed it was on the House Calendar.

Mr. HAY. I hope the gentleman will not object.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman makes the point of order, the Chair will sustain it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill was on the Unanimous-Consent Calendar. It was stricken off. I made a protest against it at the instance of the War Department. It was then passed through by unanimous consent when I was absent from the Chamber. I feel, in view of the representations which have been made to me by the War Department of the undesirability of the passage of this bill, that I should make the point of order, which I do now make.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I want to state in reply to what the gentleman says that every bill or every request for cannon put in the House bill was approved by the War Department, and it is a very curious thing that the War Department should now give out that it is opposed to the passage of this bill, when these bills were sent to the War Department for report and they reported that there was no objection to them.

I simply want to say that in defense of the House committee and in defense of gentlemen who are affected by these bills.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. This bill only disposes of condemned cannon?

Mr. HAY. That is all.

Mr. MANN. Without any expense to the Government? What possible objection can the War Department have to it?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will tell you. Already all of the old, worthless cannon have been given away, and this relates to brass cannon that are now being used by the Ordnance Department in remanufacturing, and this bill means to give away that much valuable property of the Government.

Mr. HAY. I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] if he does not think it a very strange thing when these bills were sent to the War Department that they did not in their report to the Committee on Military Affairs urge objections which the gentleman is now urging?

Mr. SHERLEY. It may be; but I can only say that in a personal talk to some gentlemen the statement was made, and my own knowledge of ordnance stores verified it, that these cannon are valuable to the Government and that the useless cannon have long ago been disposed of.

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman think that such Revolutionary cannon as were captured at the Battle of Saratoga and sent out as relics were not valuable?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman does not think so, and when the matter was up before the gentleman plainly stated he would be glad to have such relics disposed of, but this bill, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] well knows, goes beyond the question of guns that have historical significance.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] just stated, as I understood him, that the only purpose the War Department has for this cannon is in remanufacture. The only value is in the material, which may be valuable. But does not the gentleman believe that after all it will be of greater value to the country to have these cannon located in places where they will inspire patriotism, rather than to save the small expense of the value of the material melted down?

Mr. SHERLEY. If I thought they would be so distributed as to inspire patriotism I would unquestionably answer the gentleman, yes. But I do not think his premise is borne out by the facts.

Mr. MANN. There is one in the city of Chicago that, I think, will be worth to the Government thousands of dollars' worth of patriotism eventually.

Mr. SHERLEY. There are instances in which requests should be granted, but anybody who has read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and knows the history of the bill in this House and in the other body and knows the way that they were there reaching out and grabbing for this cannon to be sent out to various and sundry places without regard to whether they had any claim or not will think the gentleman's claim of patriotism is spread pretty thin.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman must recall that no one could get these cannon without going to considerable expense. They have to be shipped a long distance, and there are heavy freight charges on them every time, and when a society or a community is willing to go to the expense of bringing the cannon there it shows that they have something in the way of patriotism or they would not do it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I recognize that the man who exercises his individual view at this time of the session is taking advantage of a time situation that he would not have earlier. I have voiced my protest. I am not going to put my judgment against the judgment of the House. If the House wants to vote away Government property under these circumstances, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his point of order. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. How does this bill get before the House at this particular time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair laid it before the House. It was on the Speaker's table. It is a House bill, with Senate amendments.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then, I beg pardon of the Chair for asking a question that has been answered before, as I am told. But I was not in the House at the time. I was called out. I think there ought to be some information about how much property of the Government is going to be given away in this manner, and therefore, Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HAY. Object to what?

The SPEAKER. It is not a question for unanimous consent.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I understood it was.

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that the bill should be referred to the committee.

Mr. HAY. It is too late. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] made a point of order and withdrew it, and the amendments have been read, and it is now too late to make a point of order on it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was in error about its being a question of unanimous consent. If the gentleman objects, his objection is valid.

Mr. HAY. But the objection has been withdrawn, Mr. Speaker. The objection could have been made when the bill was called up. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] objected, as well as made a point of order, and the objection was withdrawn, and the Senate amendments were read. Of course, the gentleman from Texas can move to disagree to the Senate amendments if he wants to.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, has the question of unanimous consent been put?

The SPEAKER. The question of unanimous consent never has been put. They had a long wrangle here about whether this bill ought to be referred to the committee, because it disposed of what purports to be some property of the United States, and that point of order was withdrawn.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is proposing to give away valuable property of the United States, and aside from the fact that that ought not to be done, it is not a square division. The donations are improperly distributed.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman insists upon it, the point will be sustained.

Mr. MANN. I do not think the gentleman is entitled to insist upon it.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that the proper time to raise a point of order is past.

Mr. HAY. I move to concur, Mr. Speaker, in the Senate amendments. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] moves to concur in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 9.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] raises the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw it, Mr. Speaker, but I give notice now that I want my colleague [Mr. BOWMAN] to have a proper chance.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws his point of order.

So the motion of Mr. HAY to concur in the Senate amendments was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to make this statement: That when the objection was made by me this morning, I was under the impression, from a reading of the RECORD of last Saturday, that a committee objection had been made, and the chairman of the committee not being present, I objected for the time being. I understand now that that was not a committee objection. Of course, I have no personal interest in the matter, and no feeling about it, one way or the other, and do not insist upon the objection, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I will say that I made the arrangement which I think brought that controversy to a close, and which gave the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY], the chairman of the Committee on Elections No. 1, the floor. It was subsequently on my suggestion that he was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. I am very confident that if the gentleman from Ohio were here, he having been called away, he would not object to the request now.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I have said that so far as I am concerned, I shall not insist on the objection.

Mr. GOEKE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GOEKE] objects.

Mr. MANN. Then I shall object to any unanimous-consent requests that are made.

Mr. BUTLER. I am going to see that there is a quorum present. I give notice to that effect right now.

Mr. MANN. There will be no more unanimous consents.

EVAN URNER RINEHART.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill S. 7267, and that it be taken up for the consideration of the House.

The SPEAKER. Let the gentleman send the bill up to the Clerk's desk and have it reported. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy be, and it is hereby, waived for one year in the case of Evan Urner Rinehart in consideration of his previous naval service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand, this is a private bill, and of course can not go on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. If one private bill is called up in this way, others ought to be. This bill has no privilege under the rules of the House. I have no personal objection to it. At some time in the session I think Members ought to have an opportunity to call up private bills by unanimous consent, but I think when one comes the others ought to come, too.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, the reason I have called up this bill is this: A bill of exactly the same character was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs and is now on the House Calendar. This is a Senate bill, and I would like to pass it instead of the House bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is this on the Speaker's table?

Mr. BROWNING. No.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then it does not come within the rule.

Mr. BROWNING. It has been referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I ask that the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not care to object to the gentleman's bill, but there are a number of other bills similar to this, and this does not come within the rule which permits the taking of a bill from the Speaker's table. I would be very glad to have an opportunity before we adjourn, if we can do so, to have some of these little private bills called up by unanimous consent; but I think if we do they ought all to have an equal opportunity.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to state this situation: Some time ago—the Chair thinks it was at the end of the Sixtieth Congress—the House established a Unanimous Consent Calendar. That was to relieve Members from the alleged necessity of going to the Speaker cap in hand, to use the phrase that was popular then, to get unanimous consent. I never had to go with cap in hand.

This Unanimous Consent Calendar was established, and Mr. Speaker CANNON declared from the Speaker's chair that it was a great relief to the Speaker. It is. I thoroughly agree with him about it.

Now, once or twice the Chair recognized a Member to call up a matter of pressing necessity, some emergency matter like the Mississippi flood resolution, and three or four or five others where the United States Government would absolutely lose money if the thing was not done at once. The Chair has no idea of going back to the old system; but one gentleman rose and notified all concerned that hereafter he would object. That is the whole statement. The Chair wants to carry out the rule in good faith and wants to treat everybody alike.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, to-morrow is Private Calendar day. Of course there may be public business that may prevent private bills being considered; but in order that every man may have the same chance for the consideration of these private bills, I will ask unanimous consent that on to-morrow, Private Calendar day, it may be in order for the Chair to recognize gentlemen to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, not to interfere with the public business.

Mr. LEVER. Reserving the right to object to that request, the Committee on Rules some weeks ago made the agricultural extension bill a continuing order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have included in my request that it is not to interfere with public business.

Mr. LEVER. My question is whether it will interfere.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; my request will except bills that have been made in order for consideration by the House and conference reports.

Mr. MANN. This is only a matter of unanimous consent.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Only a matter of unanimous consent.

Mr. SIMS. Reserving the right to object, I want to state this to the gentleman from Alabama: The Committee on War Claims has not had a day since the Democratic convention. Now, there are a few Tucker Act resolutions that have been reported since for Members who were ill at the time or away from home on account of sickness or other things just about as bad. There are only a few of them, and it will take only a few minutes to dispose of them. I ask that they be made an exception, as we are entitled to to-morrow under the rule.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Tennessee will permit me to make a statement, the resolutions to which he refers are away down on the calendar. Bills reported from other committees would take precedence, and if the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] does not go through, the gentleman's bills would not come up until about the end of the Sixty-fourth Congress, but will come up to-morrow under the request made by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. SIMS. The last day was private-claims day, and the Committee on War Claims will be entitled to it next.

Mr. MANN. Other committees also come in all the time. The War Claims Committee does not come ahead of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SIMS. It will only take a few minutes to dispose of these bills, and it may be of benefit to absent Members who are absent on account of illness.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am trying to provide a way so that all gentlemen who have private bills can really get in.

Mr. SIMS. Well, I did not want to be forgotten.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, while this is going on, I present a conference report on the Army bill for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 25531. An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] whether the amount now appropriated by this conference report for the manufacture of arms is $600,000, as originally passed by the House, or $700,000, as increased by the Senate?

Mr. HAY. It is $700,000.

Mr. GILLETT. I am very glad the larger sum was finally agreed upon.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I thing it might be interesting to some Members of the House to know the history of this appropriation, and as it is a matter I have studied every year and have been active in securing, I will give a short account of the manufacture of arms by the Government since I have been in Congress.

When I came here in 1893 Congress had been for many years making an appropriation of $400,000 per annum for the manufacture of small arms at Springfield, my home. The Congress I entered had a Democratic majority, and like this Congress was making loud professions of economy. I was appointed a member of the Military Committee, and when the question arose as to how much we should appropriate for the manufacture of small arms the Democratic subcommittee cut down the amount to $350,000. It was a time of all others when there was least excuse for such a reduction, and when, on the contrary, there was every reason for an increase, because the Krag rifle had just been adopted; the Army was waiting to be equipped with it, and so there ought to have been an unusually large appropriation to provide a decent supply of the new arm. I pressed those arguments in the committee and made a motion to increase the appropriation from $350,000 to $400,000, but the Democratic leaders were obdurate. When it came to a vote, however, two Democrats, both of them distinguished generals in the Civil War—Gen. Sickles, of New York, and Gen. Joe Wheeler, of Alabama—joined the solid Republicans and my amendment prevailed, and from that time on I never had to fight against a reduction of the appropriation, but could devote my efforts to increasing it.

The outbreak of the War with Spain proved at once that our appropriations had been inadequate, for you will remember how some of our regiments had to meet the Spanish Mausers with the old Springfield musket; and Congress became more liberal and appropriated a million dollars that year, and increased it until, in 1902, it had risen to $1,700,000 a year, and continued at that figure until last year it was reduced to a million, and this year the House cut it to $600,000, but the Senate increased it to $750,000. By these liberal appropriations about a million modern rifles have been manufactured, so that all the regular troops are supplied with them—all the militia—and the balance are stored ready to be distributed in case of war. To be exact, 410,940 Krag-Jörgensen rifles have been made up to July 1, 1912; 63,528 Krag-Jörgensen carbines; and 491,924 United States rifles, model of 1903; or a total of 966,402 of the modern rifle.

With such a large supply on hand, I admit that the necessity for continued manufacture is diminished, and it is reasonable that some reduction should be made. The present appropriation would only pay for 100 a day, and that is not a large addition to the existing supply. I do not think it is large enough, and, moreover, it should be borne in mind that it is of great importance to the Government that the body of trained and skilled mechanics which it has assembled should not be separated from the service and scattered, for, in case of emergency, it would be impossible to fill their places at once. The Springfield armorers have always felt a just pride that they were picked men, at the top in their line of work, and it is of great value to the Government to keep such a force always at command. I have always urged strenuously since I have been here that no matter what the size of the annual appropriations they should be steady—not large one year and small the next, but any increase or decrease should be gradual, so that there should be no sudden change in the size of the force. That is only fair to the men who come to the armory with the expectation of permanent employment and who ought not to be turned out suddenly at a time, perhaps, when the labor market is glutted; and it is fair to the Government itself, for only by such regular, steady, permanent employment can it build up the force of skilled and contented men which will do the best work. I think its success in late years has been remarkable, and so I deplore the recent heavy reductions in appropriations, which have diminished the force by a half and have turned away hundreds of trained experts.

Although the earnings of the men have steadily increased, yet at the same time the expense of the rifle has steadily decreased. I remember when the Krag-Jörgensen rifle was first adopted one of the foremen at the armory, an exceedingly intelligent and skillful man, told me he thought the United States was making a great mistake in selecting that weapon, for the gun was so intricate that the expense of manufacturing would be tremendous, and that it could never be made for less than from $20 to $30 per gun. Yet so great have been the inventions and economies introduced that, commencing the first year at $20, the cost has been gradually reduced so that now it only costs $14.67 per gun, not much more than the simple old Springfield musket was costing at the end of its era, and this has been in part due to the system of keeping a constant, steady force of trained expert men. Under the reductions of appropriations a large part of that force will be lost and scattered and could never be assembled again.

The rifle which is now manufactured and which our troops are now using is not only a splendid specimen of mechanical development, but it has also proved itself, in competition with the weapons of all the nations of the world, superior in its exactness and effectiveness, and its recent success at the Olympic games, in South America, England, and Canada have shown that our national rifle maintains our national reputation for mechanical inventiveness and skill and efficiency. In this the Springfield armory can take a just pride.

My 20 years' service in this House happens to be contemporaneous with the 20 years during which this rifle has been manufactured, and I have actively participated in securing the legislation and regulations and changes which have accomplished the development of the rifle and of the plant. A statement of it will show one phase of the growth of this Government as a manufacturing agency and one small phase of the constant expense of keeping prepared for a possible war.

The mere outgo of money is impressive, for during that 20 years there has been expended in Springfield in the actual making of the rifles $19,000,000. Besides that we have spent quite a large sum in improving and enlarging the plant. The armory was located more than a hundred years ago on a sightly hill in the suburbs of Springfield, but the city has grown around it so that it now occupies a most beautiful site in the very heart of the residence section of the city. The Government has insisted on retaining the ownership of most of the streets that surround it, and to keep these streets in condition there has been appropriated in the 20 years more than $25,000. During the same period there has been spent for the general repair and upkeep of the reservation $225,000.

An addition to the "water shops" was built at a cost of about $100,000, which enabled a portion of the manufacture of the rifles to be transferred and the water power to be utilized.

About $10,000 was appropriated for better fire protection; $18,000 for a dry house and a room for the convenience and comfort of the workmen. In different years appropriations amounting in all to $260,000 were made for additional machinery and fixtures and $40,000 was expended in making better railroad connections, and thus diminishing the cost of manufacture.

So in the 20 years there has been appropriated and expended on the Springfield Armory:

For manufacture of arms	$19,000,000
For improvement of buildings and grounds	780,000
For improvement to manufacturing plant	500,000
Total	20,280,000

What has been the result of this enormous expenditure? I think on the whole it is very creditable to the management of the armory. Personally I have been in favor of civilian management. At one time I was firmly convinced that the treatment of the men was not such as they were entitled to. I concluded that the education and environment of an Army officer did not tend to fit him to successfully administer a large manufacturing plant with many hundreds of skilled self-respecting mechanics, and I endeavored to bring about a return to the early practice of a civilian control, but divorced by strict civil-service rules from any civilian patronage or spoils system. I was unsuccessful, and I must in fairness admit that of late years the military management has been eminently fair and successful. It has handled with as much consideration and forbearance as possible the great reduction of force which has recently been necessary because of the large supply of rifles on hand and the program of the Democratic House to economize in our military expenditures.

The processes of manufacture have been so well conducted that the cost of the rifle has been steadily reduced from $20 to $14.67. But this has not been accomplished by any unreasonable exactions from the men employed. On the contrary, I think it can be fairly said that the condition of the employees has been steadily improved during the period by numerous small changes, all for their benefit, and in all of which I have had the pleasure of being interested and instrumental. So that I think to-day the status of an armorer is more favorable than ever before.

In 1904 the payment of wages was changed from monthly, as it had always been, to semimonthly, and in 1908 that was again changed to weekly payments. In 1908 the change was made from payment by check to payment in cash, as desired by the men.

In 1906 half holidays were established for Saturdays in July, August, and September.

In 1911 shower baths, drinking fountains, and an employees' room were established.

During 10 years, while the cost of the rifle was steadily diminishing, the average pay of the men was as constantly increasing, which is the ideal every manufacturer should seek to attain, and while the average wage in 1899 was $2.09, the average wage in 1912 was $2.98, an increase of 42 per cent.

Up to 1904 the only Government factory for small arms was at Springfield. The Spanish War impressed upon the administration the need for a larger output in emergency. To accomplish that at Springfield new buildings would be necessary. But it happened that at Rock Island, in the Mississippi River, there were fine stone buildings owned by the Government well adapted to this purpose with a large water power, and the War Department recommended that these buildings be equipped with machinery and that a portion of the future rifles be manufactured there. As representing Springfield, I much preferred that the plant there should be increased rather than that a new armory should be initiated in the West, but I soon found that the arguments of the War Department—that at Rock Island the buildings were all ready without any expense, and that it was wise to have the weapons of war manufactured at the West as well as at the East—were favorably received by Members of Congress, particularly those from the West. And it so happened that at this juncture the committees of the Senate and House which would pass upon the question were headed by Senator Allison and Mr. Hull, both from Iowa, and the city of Davenport, Iowa, would be the greatest gainer by the new armory at Rock Island, so I soon found it would be useless to oppose the measure. But Senator Allison and Mr. Hull agreed with me that there should be no reduction of our force at Springfield, but that it should continue the main source of supply, and ever since two-thirds of the product has come from Springfield and one-third from Rock Island, and, in addition to the $20,000,000 expended in Springfield, four million and a half have been expended at Rock Island for the same purpose. So that there has been expended in all for the manufacture of small arms in the past 20 years $25,000,000. I believe it has been honestly, economically, and wisely expended. It is an enormous sum. We all wish it were unnecessary. We all hope the product of it is superfluous and may never be needed. We all sympathize with Longfellow's familiar words in his poem entitled "The Arsenal at Springfield"—

> If half the power that fills the world with terror,
> If half the wealth bestowed on camps and courts
> Were given to redeem the human mind from error,
> There were no need of arsenals and forts.

But we know that human passions and interests have not yet ceased to make war possible and the preparation for it imperative, and so the manufacture of arms must continue at Springfield until that day still distant shall arrive—

> When the war drum throbs no longer and the battle flags are furled,
> In the parliament of man, the federation of the world.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution and bill of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 349. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion to be held at Ada, Okla., in September, 1912; and

H. R. 13016. An act for the relief of the West Kentucky Coal Co.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 313. An act relative to the exchange of certain properties between the insular government of Porto Rico and the War Department.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 7343. An act to authorize the building of a dam across the Coosa River, in Alabama, at a place suitable to the interest of navigation about 7½ miles above the city of Wetumpka.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 313. An act relative to the exchange of certain properties between the insular government of Porto Rico and the War Department; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS IN THE RECORD.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit some remarks on the manufacture of arms, which has been reported upon in the Army bill.

Mr. MANN. There will be no more unanimous consents unless unanimous consent is given to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Pending that request, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] may be permitted to extend remarks in the RECORD, and that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] be given the same permission.

Mr. WHITACRE. Reserving the right to object, how much time is to be given to Mr. ANSBERRY?

Mr. MANN. Indefinite.

Mr. WHITACRE. With that understanding, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. What is the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MANN. That the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] be given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD, and that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] be given the same leave.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio is not here. Does anyone know whether the gentleman from Ohio has any objection to it or not? He objected on a previous occasion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no knowledge on that subject.

Mr. SISSON. I did not intend to ask the Chair, but some member of the delegation.

Mr. WHITACRE. I know that he objected before.

Mr. SISSON. One of his colleagues states that he has objected.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SISSON. Reserving the right to object, I am unwilling to make objection for the gentleman from Ohio unless some Ohio colleague sees fit to make it. I shall not interpose an objection, but I simply wanted to know if anyone knew that Mr. ANSBERRY did object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] shall have leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD, and that the same privilege shall be extended to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY]?

Mr. WHITACRE. Provided Mr. BOWMAN will file his statement with Mr. ANSBERRY in advance, so that he may see it, I will not object.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that that would be practicable, but Mr. ANSBERRY can reply.

Mr. WHITACRE. Mr. BOWMAN had an opportunity the other day to make a reply, and refused to make it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Ohio is mistaken.

Mr. WHITACRE. I was here and heard it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania did not have an opportunity, for the time was not given him, and could not be given him under the agreement.

Mr. WHITACRE. Mr. ANSBERRY proposed to Mr. BOWMAN at the time to give him 40 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I beg the pardon of the gentleman, but Mr. ANSBERRY did not have the time to give.

The SPEAKER. Here is what happened, and there is no question about it: The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] spoke 5 minutes, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] spoke 20 minutes. That was all there was to it, except an interchange of compliments between the Members. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. GOEKE. Reserving the right to object, I want to inquire whether Mr. BOWMAN is to file his remarks within a reasonable time?

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that he will, and under the practice, even if he did not file them until after the adjournment of Congress, the gentleman from Ohio would still have an opportunity to have a RECORD printed, even if it was only to print the extension of his remarks.

Mr. GOEKE. I have no objection to that, but I think he ought to be limited to 30 or 20 days.

Mr. MANN. I will make it 10 days.

The SPEAKER. Does that apply to both Members?

Mr. MANN. No; only to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN].

The SPEAKER. The request is that within 10 days the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] shall send his remarks to the Public Printer, and then the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY], at any time he chooses, shall have the right to file a rejoinder.

Mr. CANNON. Within another 10 days?

Mr. BURLESON. No; the gentleman from Ohio is gone, and we can not reach him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois as modified? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, was my request put?

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, some time ago I made a request that I be given unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request, and in connection with the gentleman's request I ask that all gentlemen who spoke on the dam bill which was passed this afternoon be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon the Army appropriation bill; and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] couples with that the request that every gentleman who spoke on the bill called up by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] this afternoon shall have the right to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks upon the question of passport to Jewish citizens.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UTTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an article written by Gov. Pothier, of Rhode Island, on the subject of noise.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article referred to is as follows:

Noise is an expedient used to-day by men who would confuse, break down, and destroy.

Noise is an expedient of those who, from motives of personal ambition or dissatisfaction, would seek to overthrow the established institutions of our republican form of government; to change the existing order of things and to set up in its place something of their own fashioning.

We see instances of this every day. We have seen instances of it for the past 50 years.

And the reason the American people have not been overwhelmed by noise is because the American people think.

Thought is the most effectual weapon with which to combat noise.

The power of thought is given to every human being, and it is to the interest of every human being to cultivate this faculty, that he may be able to determine the true from the false—the real from the visionary.

The capacity for thinking clearly and logically is more highly developed in America than anywhere else on the face of the globe.

Under our free form of government, where men are the masters of themselves, they are encouraged by their very environment to think for themselves.

The great majority are able to do their own thinking in the face of oise and in spite of attempts to confuse them.

But there are many, very many, whose ideas become confused when the noise becomes great, and with whom the efforts of the noise makers to mislead are, at times and in some degree, successful.

It is to those people who unwittingly permit noise to overwhelm their reason that the demagogue addresses himself.

It is upon those people that he depends for support in his ontery against our system of government.

It is to them that he appeals, in phrases calculated to arouse passion and prejudice, to stimulate enthusiasm, and to incite an uprising against fancied grievances.

Our political life is full of illustrations.

Not many years ago the cry of the demagogue was—as in a measure it still is to-day—"the workingman."

It was heard everywhere.

It was the keynote of the spellbinders of all political parties. It was the clarion call used for all sorts of purposes, until the workingman began to fancy that he was the especial protégé to be looked after, and his interests made the personal concern of every candidate for office of whatever party.

Next it was "the dinner pail."

From every rostrum the magic word resounded throughout the land, and "the dinner pail" became the slogan by which the masses were to be swayed.

A little later there was another modification, and "the people" became the battle cry of the political exhorters.

It was the open sesame to prestige and power.

To-day we see the process of evolution carried one step farther, and "Progressive" has become a rallying cry.

The time has again come for the American people to think.

They must ask themselves, "What is progressiveness?"

What kind of progress does progressiveness, as it is professed by those who are shouting it most loudly, mean?

What policies of government, what economic principles, what industrial program, what character of political adjustment, will result in real progress for the American people?

The noise makers are already abroad in the land, ready with their own answers to these questions.

Some of them tell you that the policies of Government under which we have lived for three generations, with the vested rights of our citizens protected by a Constitution and the operation of that Constitution safeguarded and perpetuated by a judicial system that brooks no contempt, are the only ones under which the Republic can endure.

Others declare that the Constitution is a halter about the necks of the people by which the courts are leading them servilely hither and thither according to the dictates of a soulless plutocracy; that your only relief is a system whereby judicial decisions and the judges themselves can be recalled by the people at will, and the Constitution thus remolded in a day to suit a passing fancy.

Some will tell you that industrial prosperity in this country can be perpetuated only by the policy of protection to American industries which has prevailed for the past half century.

Others will declare that the protection policy is restricting the market in which the consumers may purchase the necessaries of life, while enabling the producers of commodities to maintain prices at a level which is enriching them and impoverishing the consumer through "the high cost of living."

Some will tell you that the most perfect political adjustment lies in our present form of representative Government; that legislation by the whole people is cumbersome and impracticable, and that the remedy for ill-advised legislation is by the ballot.

Others will declare that the people should initiate their own legislation, and that the work of their representatives should be subject to revision and to repeal by the people at will; and likewise that the veto power of the Executive should be susceptible of similar review by a popular majority.

Much noise will be made by the men who will harangue the people on both sides of these questions.

A very noisy noise will be made about the high cost of living and the causes thereof.

The high cost of living is a subject on which the great mass of consumers in this country should think and think deeply, that they may arrive at the truth and not be misled by noisy contentions.

They must think clearly, and ask themselves if there are not other causes for the prevailing prices of commodities than the fact that the production of those commodities is protected by our tariff laws.

They should examine carefully every item of expense that goes into the manufacture and handling of various articles of consumption and general use, from the time the raw material is gathered until the article is sold over the counter.

They should consider the expense of gathering the raw material, and see if it has increased within the past generation.

They should consider the item of transportation of this raw material to the factory, and see if there has been an increase in expense there.

They should, in their mind's eye, contemplate the various processes to which the raw material is subjected in producing the finished product, and ask themselves if these various processes can be performed as economically as they could a few years ago.

They should take into consideration the cost of transportation of the finished product to market; the cost of handling this product through the wholesale houses and by the retailers, and the cost of selling it over the counter, and should ask themselves if there has been any increased expense involved in these various stages of the journey.

They should ask themselves if the higher wages which are to-day paid American workmen have not increased the cost of gathering the raw material, of transporting it to the factory, or producing the finished product, of transporting the finished produce to market, of delivering it over the counter through the salesman or saleswoman into the hands of the ultimate consumer.

Then they should ask themselves if this increase in wages all along the line is not, in fact, the principal element that has entered into the increase in the price of practically every commodity to the consumer.

They should ask themselves if the average increase in wages of workingmen and working women in nearly every line of industrial activity in the country has not increased the purchasing power of those workingmen and working women to a degree equal to, if not in excess of, the increased cost of the necessaries of life which they purchase with their increased wages.

They should ask themselves honestly if they are not living better to-day than they or their fathers and mothers were living 20 or 30 years ago.

After they have settled these questions to their own satisfaction by honest thinking, they should ask themselves whether they can honestly believe that without our system of protection to American industries—that without the assurance to the American manufacurer that he will receive a price for his goods commensurate with the cost of protection—the American wage earner could possibly continue to command or expect from the manufacturer the same scale of wages that he now receives.

The noise makers tell you that this country has been deprived of her "natural industrial expansion and progress" by the system of protection.

But the United States census figures show that from 1904 to 1909 the capital invested in manufacturing increased from $12,675,000,000 to $18,428,000,000; that the value of products increased from $14,793,000,000 to $20,672,000,000; that the number of wage earners increased from 6,213,612 to 7,678,578, and that wages increased from $2,610,000,000 to $3,427,000,000.

The cotton industry, in which New England is heavily interested, increased its products $290,000,000 in the 10 years from 1899 to 1909; while the woolen industry showed an increase of $210,229,000.

Do these figures show that our country has been deprived of her "natural industrial expansion and progress," or do they demonstrate that we have enjoyed a period of remarkable development?

I do not believe that you believe that a change in our protective policy offers the solution to the high cost of living.

I believe that you realize fully that such a change could mean only one of two things—either that our machinery must stop for lack of profitable employment or our wages must be cut down to the foreign level.

There is, however, one item affecting the price of commodities to the consumer which we may well consider seriously.

The cost of transportation is a continual subject of dispute between shippers and merchants and the transportation companies.

It is so important an item that the Government maintains a department charged with the specific duty of regulating transportation rates.

As the industries of the country, and especially of New England, continue to grow and multiply, traffic will become more and more congested, and the expense incident to delayed shipments and the loss on perishable goods increase.

The only solution is increased transportation facilities by both land and water.

I believe that such an increase can not come too soon.

The railway systems that now serve New England will presently be supplemented by a great transcontinental system which has already undertaken extensive preparations for sending its branches into Boston and into Providence.

It will not be many years, at the rate our industries and our population are growing, before the additional facilities thus afforded will be found to be an actual necessity, and the wisdom which prompted their admittance to our New England ports appreciated and applauded.

With the trade centers of the great Northwest and of the ports of the South Atlantic brought into direct communication with us by this means, and with improved avenues of waterway communication between New England and the distributing points on the Atlantic coast, which are certain to follow the determined agitation in their behalf, we shall see, I believe, a decrease in transportation charges and a resultant decrease in the price of the commodities which we import from every section of the country.

A thoughtful study of the economic bearing of these questions—of their relation to the cost of living and the welfare and prosperity of our citizens—is the best antidote for noise.

Noise must not be permitted to drown thought.
While the noise makers are busy, think.
And the more noise they make the harder you must think.

A. J. POTHIER.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, and particularly that of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], for the extension of my remarks in the RECORD, in order that I may publish an open letter written by George C. Hetzel, a wool manufacturer of Chester, Pa., to the Hon. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Unanimous consent was granted to the following gentlemen to extend their remarks in the RECORD: Mr. BURLESON, Mr. HAUGEN, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BULKLEY, Mr. BUCHANAN, Mr. FAISON, Mr. LAFFERTY, Mr. FARR, and Mr. MCMORRAN.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, for the purpose of printing a short statement by the Attorney General upon the antitrust prosecutions.

Mr. JAMES. Does the gentleman say it is short?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. As it is like the prosecutions against trusts, I shall not make any objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Unanimous consent was granted to extend their remarks in the RECORD to Mr. CRUMPACKER, Mr. HILL, Mr. NEEDHAM, Mr. STEENERSON, and Mr. TOWNER.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the dam bill which was passed this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I find that there is objection to the proposition I offered a short time ago, and I shall not renew it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] to discharge the Committee on Naval Affairs from the consideration of the bill to which he referred.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, this is a private bill.

The SPEAKER. It is a private bill to extend the time in which some one may enter the public service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, does the Speaker give recognition for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to consider a private bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, under the circumstances, that the Speaker ought to decline any request of the kind. That is the rule.

PENSIONS.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference reports on the bills H. R. 24602, 24322, 24996, and 25166, granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, and I move the adoption of the conference reports on the several bills.

The Clerk read the conference reports, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1221).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24602) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

DAN. A. DRISCOLL,
IRA W. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. J. MCCUMBER,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

Amendment No. 1, the case of Frank E. Lyman (H. R. 7169): The House passed this item at $24 per month. The Senate increased the amount to $50 per month, partly on the grounds that the soldier should have been retired for disability and partly on the grounds that later evidence filed with the Senate Committee on Pensions is to the effect that soldier is almost totally helpless. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment No. 2 is simply inserting the word "dependent" to correct the record, and is in accordance with the usual custom in such cases. The House recedes.

DAN. A. DRISCOLL,
IRA W. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1222).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24322) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by the Senate amendment insert:

"The name of John H. Brown, late U. S. S. Worden, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

And the Senate agree to the same.

DAN. A. DRISCOLL,
IRA W. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. J. MCCUMBER,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

Amendment No. 1, the case of Anna J. Meilstrup (H. R. 3674): The House proposes to grant a pension of $12 per month to the dependent mother of a sailor of the United States Navy who was killed by the destruction of the battleship Maine. The evidence in the case clearly shows that at the time of sailor's death the beneficiary could not be classed as the dependent mother of the sailor, as her husband was living at that time. The husband died in 1909 and left the widow considerable property. The Senate struck the item from the bill on the grounds that the facts do not justify granting a pension to the lady as the dependent mother of the sailor, and the House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 2, the case of John H. Brown (H. R. 4583): The House proposes to grant a pension of $15 per month in this case. The Senate struck the item from the bill, and the conferees agreed that, giving the soldier the benefit of the doubt, he did incur some disability in the service, and recommended that a rate of $12 per month be allowed. The House recedes from its disagreement and agrees to the amendment with an amendment reinserting the item at $12 per month.

Amendment No. 3, the case of George C. Rimes (H. R. 11342): The House passed the item at $12 per month and the Senate struck it from the bill. It appears that the soldier is totally blind from the effect of taking poison with suicidal intent, probably due to mental derangement due to service. The Senate recedes from its amendment.

Amendments Nos. 4, 7, and 8 are the cases of William Ramsey (H. R. 12436), Wesley J. Banks (H. R. 14649), and John G. Morgan (H. R. 18814): These are cases where the House proposes to increase the pension of soldiers of the Mexican War to $30 per month. A general law has since been passed which grants all soldiers of that war that amount, and they can receive it by applying at the bureau, hence the Senate struck the items from the bill, and the House recedes from its disagreement to those amendments.

Amendments Nos. 5 and 6 are simply corrections of the record by inserting the names of the ships on which the sailors served, and do not affect the items, except to make identification more certain. The House recedes from its disagreement to those amendments.

Amendment No. 9, Charles Myer (H. R. 20999): The soldier incurred slight disability from malaria in the service. He is now blind, but the evidence is not very conclusive that blindness was due to service. The House passed the bill at $24 per month; the Senate struck the item from the bill and, in the opinion of the conferees, additional proof should be furnished; therefore it is recommended that the House recede from its disagreement to that amendment.

DAN. A. DRISCOLL,
IRA W. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1220).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24996) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2 and agree to the same.

DAN. A. DRISCOLL,
IRA W. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. J. MCCUMBER,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

Amendment No. 1, the case of Elizabeth L. Bayless (H. R. 6978): The House passed this at $12 per month and $2 additional for each of the minor children. The Senate struck it out on the grounds that the soldier's death was not due to service, he having been killed by a maniac while he was confined to his bed from a disability incurred in the service. It is of course true that his death was not directly due to service, but in view of the fact that he was suffering from a very aggravated case of consumption, which would have resulted in his death in a short time, and which prevented him from protecting himself from the maniac, the conferees took the charitable view of the case, and the Senate recedes from its disagreement striking the item from the bill.

Amendment No. 2 is merely a correction of service of the sailor by inserting the name of the ship upon which he served, and the House recedes from its disagreement to that amendment.

DAN. A. DRISCOLL,
IRA W. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1219).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25166) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

DAN. A. DRISCOLL,
IRA W. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.
P. J. MCCUMBER,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

Amendment No. 1, the case of Samantha Morrison Flint (H. R. 18135). This is a case in which the House proposes to grant a pension to the daughter of William Morrison, who, it is alleged, served in the Revolutionary War. There are no pensioners on the rolls at the present time on account of service in the Revolutionary War. It is true that in years gone by in a few cases daughters of Revolutionary War soldiers were pensioned, but the practice has always been regarded as questionable, and no bills of that character have been passed in a decade. The item was stricken from the bill by the Senate on the grounds that it is unwise to reopen that roll at this date. The House recedes from its disagreement to that amendment.

Amendments Nos. 2, 3, and 4 are simply amendments to correct the military record of Gen. Lee in accordance with the records of the War Department and have nothing whatever to do with the amount allowed, and the House recedes from its disagreement to these amendments.

DAN. A. DRISCOLL,
IRA W. WOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference reports.

The conference reports were agreed to.

PUBLICITY OF CONTRIBUTIONS MADE FOR INFLUENCING ELECTIONS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY].

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress from the further consideration of House resolution 679 and ask for its present consideration. It is a privileged resolution of inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 679.

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the House of Representatives what, if any, steps have been taken by the Department of Justice to prosecute violations of the act of June 25, 1910, providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected, as amended by the act of August 19, 1911.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is that?

The SPEAKER. It is a resolution which becomes privileged under the seven-day rule.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Speaker, my motion to discharge the committee is not intended as any discourtesy to the committee, and I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], the chairman of the committee, to make a statement.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I make the point of order that a motion to discharge a committee is not debatable. The committee has to be discharged first before there can be debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that point is well taken.

Mr. BULKLEY. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to discharge the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress from the further consideration of the resolution.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I hope that motion will be agreed to.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri for such statement as he may desire to make.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I will only consume a moment. This measure was presented to me with the request that it be considered by the committee, but I found some difficulty in getting a commitee meeting; and it was my opinion, after talking with some of the Members about it, that there was no objection to taking this course, discharging the committee and considering the resolution by unanimous consent. I hope the resolution will pass.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman whether there is any penalty for a candidate for Congress who either does not file a statement of expenses and receipts at the primary or at the election?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I think there is.

Mr. MANN. What is the penalty?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. A fine of not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment not more than one year, or both.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman sure that applies? I venture to say that not more than half the men who have been candidates for Congress at the primaries have filed both a statement before and after the primary. I am not referring now to gentlemen in the House who may be well informed upon the subject, but to gentlemen throughout the country.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, if I may answer the question, I am inclined to think the gentleman's statement is correct. I am inclined to think a good many have not, technically at least, complied with the law. I believe, however, that in most instances the failure grows out of a misapprehension——

Mr. MANN. I wondered whether there was a penalty. A very distinguished reformer was a candidate against me at the primaries, and I believe he filed a statement before the primaries stating he had expended no money; but he has filed no statement since, and I requested some time ago the Clerk to give me a list of those who had filed in certain districts in Illinois. I am satisfied that not more than half the people who were candidates complied with the law, but I did not recall whether there was a penalty against that provision of the law.

Mr. OLMSTED. If the gentleman will allow me for just a moment. The act to provide for publicity of contributions, and so forth, approved June 25, 1910, in the tenth section provides:

That every person willfully violating any of the foregoing provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Now, the act of August 11—an amendment to that act—which amends sections 5, 6, and 8——

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Inserts a new section 8.

Mr. OLMSTED. It was generally considered at that time that a penalty would attach for any violation of the act of 1910 as amended.

I notice, however, that the reading is, "violating any of the foregoing provisions of this act." Now, whether the insertion of the new section, section 8, would be subject to a penalty, would raise a question; but the intention of penalties should attend to all violations of the act.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] the other day, when we had under consideration the proposition to amend the publicity act as to where the affidavit should be sworn to, stated in his opinion that that portion of the act was merely directory. Now, suppose some gentleman in the House or some candidate for Congress has not sworn to his statement at the correct place, is he liable to this penalty? He has not complied with the act. Whether he has violated the act I do not undertake to say. Is this provision with reference to filing statements a mere suggestion to men who are candidates, or is it compulsory upon them? It seems to me that the act itself needs amending so that it may be known whether the man who runs for Congress at the primaries or at the election with no intention of complying with its provisions is subject to any penal provision.

Mr. JAMES. My statement was as to where this law required the affidavit to be made, whether in the State or by the Member here when in attendance upon his duties. My position was that the Government could not come along with a prosecution and say you made the affidavit, but you ought to have made it in the State instead of in Washington. They would say, "We have you indicted here. You took the oath in one place instead of another." I said the place where the oath was taken was directory, and I do not think any court would hear for a moment any such contention that he could not swear to the affidavit in Washington instead of where he was elected in the State, when the Federal court has jurisdiction of either place.

Mr. MANN. That may be correct, but the same direction applies to filing the statement at all. If one is directory the other is.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I do not believe the gentleman from Kentucky is correct, though it may be. I believe there is a reason for the law as it is written. That reason appears in the act itself, and I think it is obligatory upon the candidate to make the affidavit as required by that statute, unless the affidavit shall be made since the last amendment.

Mr. JAMES. In regard to filing of statement—and I know of some in Kentucky—it is not where gentlemen fail to file statements, perhaps as required by law, according to the technical construction of it, but as to whether they willfully did. That is the point.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says the question is not pertinent. It seems to me it is. Here is a resolution asking the Attorney General if he has made any prosecution against Members of Congress, although he does not say that, or anybody else, for not filing statements under the publicity act.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois I do not believe any district attorney will prosecute in any case where the candidate is a Member of Congress in attendance upon Congress and has made his affidavit here and filed it. I want to say that I did not initiate this movement, and there are reasons why I would not have initiated it. I am satisfied that a certain reformer, to quote from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], in my district has not complied with the law. He says he did, but I am sure he did not.

Mr. BUTLER. It is not the proper thing to prosecute gentlemen under this law yet. It was passed only a year ago.

Mr. MANN. They send notices and blanks to all the candidates for Congress in my district.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I quite agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER]. I believe the American people have reached that stage in our national progress when they desire and demand real, actual, practical publicity, and at the next session of Congress, with the aid of such friends as will help me in the matter, I will attempt to revise this statute so as to provide for actual, practical publicity. In other words, I believe that the law should require each candidate for Representative to file a declaration of candidacy with the Clerk of this House, and require the Clerk of the House, after the time has passed for filing publicity statements, to notify the district attorney having jurisdiction of all instances in which candidates have failed to comply with the requirements of this law. I believe, moreover, in order to give practical publicity, that the candidate or candidates for Representative in Congress ought to be required, in addition to filing a sworn statement with the Clerk of the House, to furnish within the same time duplicates of his sworn statement to the opposing candidate or candidates for such nomination, so that there will be actual and effective publicity in the community most interested, and, if a wrong has been done, if money has been improperly used, or the limit of expense exceeded, those who are opposing each other will have opportunity to discuss it before the people before the primary election or the nominating convention is held.

Mr. CANNON. What would the gentleman say, provided it is advertised in the New York American and the Chicago Tribune?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. There are some places in which New York and Chicago papers are not read.

Mr. CANNON. Or to have the people fully informed in every country newspaper?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I do not believe the gentleman understood me. My proposition is that the candidate who is required to file with or to mail to the Clerk of the House a statement under oath should be required to mail or deliver to his opponent or opponents a duplicate of that statement. Then it could be known and would be known in the community at least 10 days before the nomination if money is being improperly used or this law is being violated.

Mr. JAMES. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] has stated, this law has not been on the statute books very long. Suppose a man comes up and says:

> I did not know anything about this law, and I am perfectly willing to comply with it now and make my return under it; I have spent only forty or fifty dollars.

Mr. BUTLER. Many gentlemen find themselves in the position stated by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I will say to the gentleman that ignorance of the law, of course, excuses no one. At the same time we are too generous to demand that gentlemen who have failed to comply with the provisions of this law, because, as a matter of fact, they did not know of it, should be embarrassed by proceedings against them.

Mr. JAMES. I know a very distinguished gentleman who did not know that he ought to comply with this law, as he had not spent a dollar.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I think the most distinguished gentleman in my district, in his own estimation, was in that condition, though he did spend money. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Why not amend this resolution by asking the Attorney General what steps he has taken to prosecute people guilty of violations of the white-slave act and every other penal statute? Let us have a clean out of the whole thing.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I supposed that in the course of time the gentleman from Illinois would introduce a resolution along that line. I have given no attention to that matter.

Mr. CANNON. I suppose it will be in order to amend this resolution.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Let me say, in all frankness and candor, to the gentleman that I did not initiate this resolution, and, while I would like to see it passed for the moral effect it will have, yet I would not of my own volition have started this movement, because I know one man, at least, who might be taken to task, and I do not care to pose as an informer.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will yield to me, I will say that, so far as I am individually concerned, I have complied literally and truly with this law. I know of a gentleman—he is very much of a gentleman—who did not know about it, and he complied with the law after the primary. I doubt if he ever expended a cent.

Two other gentlemen, of whom I will not speak by name, were candidates and made a great deal of fuss. I suspect they are now genuine followers of the new party. They were candidates in my district on the Republican ticket, and on inquiry I find that they have never filed any statement whatever. But, after all is said and done, in the main I expect that this law has been quite as well observed as any other law upon the statute books, at least by Members that had knowledge of it.

I have no particular objection to the passage of this resolution, but I want to make the suggestion that, with the muckraking magazines and with the muckraking newspapers and with the hysterical condition existing with some people in the country, it is quite in good taste and in good policy to make motions of this kind and agree to them, calling the attention of the country to the matter, which is equivalent to an intimation, at least, that the average Member of Congress is under a cloud, and under suspicion, and all that kind of thing. I do not object to the law.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I want to make my statement as emphatic as I can that I heartily agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. I do not believe that Members of Congress have willfully violated the publicity law. I believe that every one of them has desired and attempted to comply with the law.

I was told down in the Clerk's office that the construction placed on the law here is that an affidavit taken and subscribed to in the District of Columbia fully complies with the law, Congress being in session. I do not believe that construction is correct, but I do believe that the membership of this House in good faith has attempted to comply with the law; and I for one would not advise or advocate any procedure that would taint the character of any Member, where it is apparent that his failure to comply with this new law—the existence of which is not generally known yet—is not due to a willful purpose to violate law.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Did the Committee on Elections consider this resolution?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I have just stated that the committee did not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I could not hear what the gentleman said.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. My attention was called to this resolution, and I was requested to convene the committee for the purpose of considering it, and I will state to the gentleman frankly the two reasons why I did not convene the committee. One reason was the absence of a considerable part of the membership of the committee. Another reason is personal to myself. I know one man who, I think, has violated the law.

If I should be directly connected with the report and passage of this resolution it would look as if I was seeking to punish somebody, and I want to say to this House that I punished the one in my mind to my entire satisfaction on the day of the Missouri primary and seek no further punishment.

Mr. OLMSTED. While we are revising and amending this law, I want to ask the gentleman this question: The act of August, 1911, does not in itself contain any penal provision, does it?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. It does not.

Mr. OLMSTED. The act of 1910, to which the act of 1911 is an amendment, says that every person willfully violating "any of the foregoing provisions of this act" shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than a year. That is section 10.

That penalty is for violating "any of the foregoing provisions of this act." That is, the act of 1910. Now, I ask the gentleman if he thinks anybody violating any of the new provisions in the act of 1911 would be subject to that penalty of fine or imprisonment under the act of 1910?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I think so; clearly.

Mr. OLMSTED. Would the "foregoing provisions" be those which were enacted a year later?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I think they become "foregoing provisions" when they are inserted by the same legislative power, in the body of the original act. I do not believe that when a State legislature or this Congress enacts a criminal statute and sees fit to amend it by making something criminal to-day which was not criminal last year, that, therefore, we have got to add a new penal section to apply to the amendment or the amendment will become a dead letter.

Mr. OLMSTED. Penal statutes are, of course, always strictly construed, and I call this to the gentleman's attention in order that he may think of it when he comes to revise the law. It may be worthy of consideration.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I will say to the gentleman that if I take another chance at it, after the experience and observation we have had in the practical workings of the law, I believe the feature under discussion can and will be made absolutely clear.

Mr. OLMSTED. I certainly doubt very much whether you could convict anybody of a violation of the act of 1911 under the act of 1910, which imposes a penalty only for the violation of the "foregoing provisions."

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I recognize the well-merited distinction of the gentleman as a lawyer, and I have great respect for his legal opinions, though I differ from him in the views he has just expressed.

Mr. BUTLER. I suggest to the gentleman who introduced this resolution [Mr. BULKLEY] not to press it for consideration now. A number of gentlemen have been candidates for Congress since this law was recently passed. The law was unknown to them. I know of at least one instance of a gentleman who was a candidate for membership of this House who did not comply with the provisions of this law because he was in ignorance of it. I should greatly deplore having this resolution put up to me for my vote. I would not want to embarrass the gentleman whom I have in mind, whose name I need not mention—a man who stands well in his community, living in obedience to all the laws of the land. I should not want to advertise him as a violator of any law. His good conduct at all times through a successful business life shows his desire to observe all laws regulating his conduct. Why not let this resolution stand for another year? Why not give the country an opportunity to become acquainted with the provisions of this law and what it requires of candidates for Congress? I can see no harm to come to the administration of justice if we allow the law to be well advertised and well understood before we move to enforce it. The passage of this resolution will only embarrass gentlemen who would violate no law, men who would not knowingly do wrong.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. In the meantime the statute of limitations will be running.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know how long the statute of limitations may run. What I have in mind is the embarrassment of these gentlemen who, in the conduct of their campaigns at the delegate elections, have failed to comply with a statute of which they were ignorant, having failed innocently to do something which the law required them to do—simply an act of omission. If, when knowledge of this publicity act is spread abroad, a resolution like this should be passed by the House there could be no criticism of it, because the law will have then been on the statute books two or three years and everybody will be expected to be well acquainted with it. These recent candidates will be advertised as men who violate the law. I would not like to have this charge put up to me. This resolution is in the line of order, and its object is to expose infractions of law. It is, of course, in the right direction, but its passage should not be insisted upon at this time for the reasons I have given. If compelled I will vote against it, because I would not like to give some men needless pain. However, it is for the gentleman who introduced it to determine. The House has the power to pass it.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would deplore as much as the gentleman from Pennsylvania the putting in jail of any candidate who has neglected to file an affidavit, being in ignorance of this law. I think, however, we can leave to the Attorney General and to the courts the consideration of such circumstances as there may be in mitigation of any violation of the law. The gentleman speaks of advertising; can he suggest any better method of advertising than this, any better means of having this law known from one end of the country to the other than the means we are proposing here to inquire of the Attorney General what he is doing about it?

Let me call the attention of the gentleman to this fact: The resolution does not ask the Attorney General to take any action; it does not urge any action upon him; it simply asks him what he is doing. If there be anything in the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] that the penal provisions of the act of June 25, 1910, do not apply to violations of the provisions of the amendment of August 19, 1911, I think it most likely that this inquiry will elicit from the Attorney General an opinion upon that point, and it would be a very valuable opinion to have in connection with the proposed amendment of the law which the gentleman from Missouri intends to make next winter.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULKLEY. Certainly.

Mr. JAMES. Is it not the duty of the United States district attorneys throughout the various districts of the United States to enforce the law, and not the duty of the Attorney General, except as to affidavits that may have been made in the city of Washington? Ought not the resolution, to get the full facts, to be directed to the Attorney General and the district attorneys? The Attorney General will have to make inquiry of the district attorneys in the various States to know whether they have instituted the prosecutions. I have no doubt that the Attorney General knows nothing at all about any prosecutions having been instituted in any of the various districts of Kentucky, where it is the duty of the district attorney to prosecute the cases, and not the duty of the Attorney General, only as it may apply to the city of Washington.

Mr. BULKLEY. I think the Attorney General is in a position to find out anything which is being done in his department. If gentlemen think it would be desirable to amend the resolution and add the district attorneys, I have no objection to doing that.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I doubt very much, Mr. Speaker, whether the Attorney General or the district attorneys themselves, or any officer of the Government, will institute any prosecution until complaint is made. He has no official notice, there is no way for the Attorney General or any district attorney to know who the candidates were.

Mr. JAMES. The point I was directing the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to was that he is making inquiry of the Attorney General as to what steps he has taken to prosecute, when it is not his duty to prosecute. It is the duty of the district attorneys of the United States to make the prosecution.

Mr. BULKLEY. The resolution asks what steps have been taken by the department. I take it that that would include the district attorneys, although I am willing to accept an amendment including the district attorneys.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULKLEY. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Has my colleague any particular case in mind that induced him to bring in this resolution?

Mr. BULKLEY. No; I understand there have been instances of failure to file expense statements, but I do not know by name anyone who has failed to file.

Mr. OLMSTED. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BULKLEY. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. How would the Attorney General know who were the candidates who ought to file affidavits?

Mr. BULKLEY. I think if he is unable to find out he would probably say that in his answer to this resolution. I consider the value of the answer to be largely in helping us to perfect this law. If there is any such loophole in the law it ought to be amended. I believe the answer to this resolution will help us to perfect it.

Mr. OLMSTED. The Attorney General does not know who the candidates were. The Clerk of the House knows what candidates have filed affidavits.

Mr. BULKLEY. It is a public record, and the Attorney General can read it as well as anybody else.

Mr. OLMSTED. But he would not come up here to read it.

Mr. BULKLEY. He could send some one.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. The record here would not throw any light on the situation. The record will contain nothing until some one files a complaint. If nobody files a complaint, there will be nothing in the record.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, the Attorney General is liable to reply that he has not made any prosecutions because no complaints have been made.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I take it that that would be his reply.

Mr. KENDALL. Then, what would be the use of this?

Mr. LONGWORTH. In other words, the record here consists merely of statements that have been filed.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I suggested that the law ought to be amended to file a declaration of candidacy with the Clerk, and then require the Clerk to advise the legal department or the particular district attorney of the United States that certain men who had declared themselves candidates had not filed under the law. In that way it would give official notice.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I take it that the Attorney General has a broader duty than merely to act on complaints that come in. I think it is his duty to find out something about where there are violations of the law, and I really believe he will make a more thorough and comprehensive answer than the gentleman suggests.

I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BULKLEY) there were—ayes 40, noes 1.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BULKLEY) there were—ayes 5, noes 53.

So the resolution was rejected.

AGRICULTURAL COMMITTEE.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a statement showing the work of the House Committee on Agriculture of the second session of the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to say that so far as I am concerned, the gentleman from Virginia may print everything that he desires to in the RECORD. My only regret is that he is not to be with us here for many years to come. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I believe that to be the regret of every man in this House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement is as follows:

WORK OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE.

(Second session Sixty-second Congress.)

As is well known to the House, the Department of Agriculture embraces many and varied subjects, the chief of which are—

The Weather Bureau, with all its varied duties relating to climatic reports, etc.

The Bureau of Animal Industry, with the meat-inspection service, southern cattle tick work, the great dairy industry, and the breeding of horses for military purposes, and numerous other matters.

The Bureau of Plant Industry, charged with multitudinous duties relating to the cultivation and breeding of cotton, tobacco, fruit, vegetables, grains, grasses, and forage, as well as drug, medicinal, poisonous, fiber, and other plants, and the congressional seed distribution.

The Forest Service, with the care and administration of the 168,000,000 acres in the 163 national forests, and the conservation of the national resources therein, such as water power, grazing lands, etc., and the fighting of forest fires.

The Bureau of Chemistry, with investigations relating to agricultural chemistry in all its varied branches, the enforcement of the food and drug act, and collaboration with all other departments of the Government desiring chemical investigations; also the enforcement of the insecticide act.

The Bureau of Soils, with investigations of varied nature as to soil types, explorations for natural fertilizers, etc.

The Bureau of Entomology, charged with investigations looking to the suppression of the great insect pests, such as the cotton-boll weevil, the gipsy and brown-tail moths, the Mediterranean fly, the alfalfa weevil, and many others equally dangerous to all the many agricultural, horticultural, and arboricultural interests and truck crops of the country.

The Bureau of Biology, which investigates the food habits of the American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry, and preserves the bison and elk and other American game animals.

The Division of Publications, the duties of which are indicated by its title.

The Bureau of Statistics, which collects domestic and foreign agricultural statistics and disseminates the same.

The Office of Experiment Stations, which directs or exercises a general supervision over the land-grant colleges and the various experiment stations; not only in the continental United States but also in the insular possessions, with the exception of the Philippines.

This office also has charge of the nutrition investigations and the investigations connected with the great irrigation and drainage projects.

The Office of Public Roads, the duties of which are to make inquiries in regard to the system of road making, investigate the best methods of road making and the best kind of material, and to furnish expert advice on road building and maintenance.

* * * * * * *

The House Committee on Agriculture, during the session now drawing to a close, has met 47 times, with flatteringly full attendance, and in addition to formulating the agricultural appropriation bill has considered and given hearings on many bills and resolutions on many and varied subjects, and has made favorable reports on the following:

H. J. Res. 117. House joint resolution amending the act of March 1, 1911, "For the acquisition of lands to conserve the navigability of navigable rivers." This is to cure a serious defect in the act referred to and to make possible the carrying out of the evident intent of Congress.

H. R. 14052. A bill authorizing certain important changes in the dates of making cotton reports through the Bureau of Statistics.

H. R. 24119. A bill known as the nursery-stock inspection bill, a most important measure for the protection of orchardists and growers of trees, vegetables, etc., one insect pest alone, viz, the San José scale, having already cost the orchardists of the United States over $50,000,000, and is adding to this cost at the rate of $5,000,000 each year.

H. R. 22871. A bill providing for the establishment of agricultural-extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of the act of July 2, 1862, and the acts supplementary thereto; to aid in carrying to the people useful and practical information on subjects relating to agriculture and home economics through field instructions, demonstrations, publications, and otherwise.

H. R. 22952. A bill providing that the United States in certain cases shall make compensation for the use of highways for carrying rural mail.

No practicable scheme of joint operations, using in part Federal and in part State money for road improvement, has yet been devised. One sole and responsible agency must do the work, and it is believed this act will accomplish the much-desired end.

H. R. 20738. A bill transferring from the jurisdiction of the Solicitor of the Treasury to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture the so-called Olmstead lands in North Carolina, thus making them available for use in the conservation of navigability of navigable rivers without cost to the Government.

H. R. 36. A bill providing for the protection of migratory and insectivorous game birds of the United States. The economic aspects of this bill are twofold. The game birds yield a considerable and an important amount of highly valued food and the insectivorous migratory birds destroy annually thousands of tons of noxious weed seeds and billions of harmful insects.

H. R. 56. An antioption bill, relating to cotton transactions. The purpose of this bill is to restrict, so far as may be, those transactions on the cotton exchanges which are recognized as dealing only with the fluctuations in the price of cotton and which do not contemplate the actual transfer of the commodity, and it does not seek to prohibit or to interefer with a single legitimate transaction in cotton.

H. R. 18323. A bill bearing exactly the same relations to transactions in grain and other farm products as House bill 56 bears to transactions in cotton, and has exactly the same objects in view.

H. R. 24029. A bill providing for emergency crops on the recently overflowed lands in the Mississippi Valley; and needs no further comment.

H. R. 24828. An amendment to the oleomargarine law so as to include adulterated butter, and was urgently recommended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Department of Agriculture.

H. J. Res. 340. House joint resolution provides a small appropriation for use until the regular appropriation provided by the agricultural act shall become available for the suppression of an insect pest known as the army worm, which had recently become acute and which was doing great damage to the young crops of cotton and corn.

H. R. 26329. Is an amendment to the meat-inspection law, and is for the sole purpose of preserving the United States market for oleomargarine and renovated butter in the West Indies and Central and South America.

In addition to the foregoing separate bills the committee has provided in the general appropriation act for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, for the following new and additional measures:

1. Extension of the rules of meat-inspection service so as to cover inspection of renovated-butter factories.
2. Experiments in breeding horses for military purposes.
3. The establishment of an experiment station in the Great Plains section to demonstrate the kind and character of trees, plants and shrubs, etc., best adapted thereto.
4. Providing prompt and easy methods of opening to settlement in the national forests all lands therein adapted to homesteading.
5. Providing for surveying and listing lands within the national forests chiefly valuable for agriculture and describing same by metes and bounds.
6. Granting an additional 10 per cent of the receipts from the national forests for construction of roads, etc., to the States from which such receipts are derived.
7. Providing for the eradication of the chestnut-bark disease.
8. Provides for the establishment and maintenance of an agricultural experiment station devoted solely to the improvement and development of that most important vegetable—the potato.

It affords me the greatest pleasure to say in conclusion that while the labors of the committee have been arduous and unremitting, and the demands upon the time of the members most exacting, the chairman has always received, and hereby gratefully acknowledges, the hearty cooperation of the entire membership. No difficulty in securing a quorum has ever been experienced and the pleasant relationship and esprit de corps have greatly facilitated the transaction of business and made smooth the duties of the chairman.

JOHN LAMB, Chairman.

PUBLIC HIGHWAY IN CADDO COUNTY, OKLA.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I call from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 16611) setting apart a certain tract of land for a public highway, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma calls up a House bill with Senate amendments thereto, and the Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 25713. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. J. Res. 349. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion, to be held at Ada, Okla., in September, 1912;

H. R. 24996. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 24002. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 25166. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 13016. An act for the relief of the West Kentucky Coal Co.; and

H. R. 24322. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 23112. An act to extend the limits of the port of entry of New Orleans, La.;

H. R. 25282. To authorize the Union Pacific Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River; and

H. R. 21094. To create a commission on industrial relations.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 22871), and pending that, I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], whether we can not agree upon some time for general debate.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, about how much time is desired by the gentleman?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I think this side could get along very well with thirty or forty minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the gentleman has already used an hour and a quarter, I suggest that this side be given two hours, and that the gentleman be given one hour, or two hours. I am perfectly willing to have that done.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that if he insists on running the general debate to the extent he apparently desires, he may jeopardize the passage of the bill at this session.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, let me make this suggestion, if I may, that there be two hours of general debate, and that then the bill be taken up under the five-minute rule, but that the whole of two hours be in the House instead of in the committee, so that as conference reports are ready we will be able to dispose of them and then proceed without any delay or point of no quorum upon the bill. I think we can get through with it in that way to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if it is to be understood that no point of no quorum will be made, that is all right.

Mr. MANN. Of course, that can not be certain, but it would save the delay of rising to consider conference reports in the House. I think we will be able to agree on the Army appropriation bill in a very few minutes. I do not think the Indian appropriation bill will take very long. I do not know how long the sundry civil appropriation bill will take.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is not here, but I would suggest it would not take a great while.

Mr. MANN. If we could do that and go ahead with conference reports without rising, I think we can run through with this very rapidly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I would like to-morrow to give an opportunity, if possible, to agree to allow some gentlemen who have private bills to ask unanimous consent for their consideration. I think it ought to be done before we adjourn.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman that ought to be done, and that probably could be done by sitting at night, or something of that kind.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If we extend the time of general debate on this bill too long, I think we will cut off all opportunity for the other proposition.

Mr. MANN. Let me make this suggestion to the gentleman from Alabama: The Lever bill is a bill carrying about $3,000,000 annually, and the Page bill in the Senate is a bill carrying in the neighborhood of $15,000,000 annually when put into operation. It is perfectly apparent that the probabilities are that when the bill passes the House and goes to the Senate that the Page bill will be substituted in the Senate for the House bill. Then the bill will go to conference, and it seems to me in the consideration of this bill the two Houses ought to be fairly well informed in advance, because we have got to meet that question next winter, and we will not have as much time then, in the short session, as now.

Mr. LEVER. What is the gentleman's suggestion about time?

Mr. MANN. My suggestion was to take the time the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] suggested, that we agree upon that time in general debate, and then take the bill up under the five-minute rule in the House without going into the Committee of the Whole at all, so we can run right along in connection instead of letting other things come in, excepting conference reports or such privileged matters.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman understands, of course, this bill has the right of way in the House, and if we have not disposed of it and conference reports come in here to-morrow with this bill, and the conference reports, and so forth, having the right of way, there will be no opportunity whatever for gentlemen who have private bills, to many of which there is no objection, to get a chance to pass their bills.

Mr. MANN. I would be perfectly willing to assist the gentleman from Alabama, as far as I am concerned, and I will be willing to stay to-morrow night to get on the Private Calendar on a unanimous-consent agreement. Without a unanimous-consent agreement there will be no opportunity to get on the Private Calendar.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree the only opportunity is by unanimous agreement, but I would like to see the opportunity given.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman from Iowa will allow general debate to run for two hours, he to control one hour and a half and we to control 30 minutes——

Mr. MANN. As far as I am concerned, whatever time agreed to is satisfactory to me. If he has general debate to-night it is all right. I think it is desirable, if possible, that instead of having to rise out of the committee to-morrow or at any other time to consider conference reports that we stay in the House and proceed right ahead with the other business.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. With the understanding between the gentleman and myself, as far as we can do so, there will be no point of no quorum on this bill. Of course, we can not speak for everybody.

Mr. MANN. As far as I am concerned, I am friendly to the bill, but I do not know what anybody might do who is opposed to the bill, but I do not think anybody will make a point of no quorum at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. CANNON. If there is nothing against the bill, then let us pass it by unanimous consent now if the gentlemen have got it as they want it.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania I am quite willing to have the previous question ordered on the bill and pass it.

Mr. JAMES. If we do that, then we can have the debate after the bill is passed.

Mr. LEVER. But of course I would not be willing to make that motion, in fairness to the other side.

Mr. HAUGEN. I wish to say, in reply to the gentleman from South Carolina, that I know of no disposition on the part of anybody to delay proceedings on the passage of this bill, but a number of gentlemen have expressed a desire to speak on this bill, and it occurs to me, in justice to these gentlemen, they should be given at least a reasonable time, and it seems to me that two hours on this side and one hour more on the other side is a reasonable request; but if we could get along with less I would be perfectly willing to yield the time that we might take a vote earlier. It is now 4 o'clock, or a little after, and we can well afford to sit here three or four hours and pass this bill.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman is willing to vote on the bill to-night if we give him time?

Mr. HAUGEN. Any time after we have given the gentlemen opportunity to speak on the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I hope and believe that this bill will pass. We commenced this morning pretty early. It is very hot weather, and I hope, as there is no great question about the passage of it, that you will not go beyond ordering the previous question by unanimous consent, especially if the yeas and nays are to be called. Frankly, I want to get out and get a little fresh air. I do not want to vote on a yea-and-nay vote to-night.

Mr. MANN. I want to make a suggestion, if I may, that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill run two hours and a half, two hours on this side and a half hour on the other side.

Mr. LEVER. That will be plenty of time. I think you could get through with one hour and a half on your side.

Mr. MANN. And that the bill be then considered for amendment in the House, and after the final disposition of this bill it shall be in order for the Speaker to recognize requests for unanimous consent for bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CANNON. To-morrow?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. After this bill has been finished?

Mr. MANN. After the conclusion of this bill.

The SPEAKER. Have the gentlemen come to any agreement?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The proposition is this: I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House and that general debate shall be limited to two hours and a half, two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] and half an hour by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], at the end of which time the general debate shall be closed. The bill shall then be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule, and after the disposition of this bill, in the balance of the time that is not taken up with conference reports or great public business, the Speaker shall be authorized to recognize gentlemen who ask unanimous consent for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar to-morrow.

Mr. CANNON. Not to the exclusion of a question of consideration.

Mr. ADAMSON. Just to-morrow, and not Saturday?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that the bill shall be considered in the House. There shall be two hours and a half of general debate, two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] and 30 minutes by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER]. At the end of that time that the bill shall be considered under the five-minute rule in the House as in the Committee of the Whole—for how long?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Until the bill is completed.

The SPEAKER. Until the bill is completed; at which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the Speaker to put that question first, and then I will make the other request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. I should like to suggest to the gentleman that the previous question be considered as ordered after the debate is closed. In other words, no vote on it to-night or any other business to-night.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois it may be possible that the Army bill may get back in here this afternoon, and I would not like to foreclose the question of its passage.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; do not raise that question.

The SPEAKER. It is the understanding, is it, that this bill is not to interfere——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will put the request again, Mr. Speaker. My request is that this bill shall be considered for two hours and a half in the House for general debate, two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] and half an hour by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER]; that at the end of that time the general debate shall close and the bill shall be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule; that when this bill is disposed of it shall be in order any time to-morrow for the Speaker to recognize gentlemen to ask unanimous consent for consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CANNON. I do not want to object, but if I should leave and others should leave I do not want this bill to be considered under the five-minute rule. I am content with the bill as it stands, with the committee amendments, but with a handful of people considering it under the five-minute rule the Lord knows what improvident things might go on it. Therefore I hope the gentleman will modify his request so that after the two hours and a half, which will bring us to 7 o'clock, that then the consideration shall go over until to-morrow at 11 o'clock under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. That is, under the five-minute rule to-morrow?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That is under the five-minute rule to-morrow?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That will be done anyhow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman, outside of the agreement, that after two hours and a half of debate upon this bill to-night the bill will go over under the five-minute rule. I do not want to interfere with conference reports if they should come in.

Mr. MANN. There is no prospect of disposing of this bill under the five-minute rule to-night.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, if I can get a chance I would like to ask some one a question about it. Is the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] opposed to this bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. I am not.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman is favorable to the bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. I am.

Mr. GARRETT. It seems that this time is all to be disposed of by gentlemen who are in favor of the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, no.

Mr. GARRETT. There are some gentlemen on this side of the House who doubt the wisdom of the passage of the bill, "one of whom I am which" [laughter], and there are other gentlemen who are inclined to be directly opposed to the bill. I do not mean to say that I am opposed to it, but there are some gentlemen who are positively opposed to the bill, and I think they ought to have some time.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that only one gentleman opposed to the bill has requested any time, and I have promised to yield to him.

Mr. HAUGEN. And I propose to yield time to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT. I know of a gentleman who is opposed to the bill and who will have something to say on it.

Mr. HAUGEN. When I say I am for the bill I mean that I am for it generally, but I would like to see it amended in some particulars.

Mr. MANN. I think there will be a fair division of the time.

The SPEAKER. The suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is that the bill be debated for 2 hours and 30 minutes—2 hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] and 30 minutes by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER]—and then that the bill shall go over until to-morrow, to be considered under the five-minute rule. Is that all of the request?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And after the bill is disposed of it shall be in order for the Speaker to recognize to-morrow gentlemen who ask unanimous consent for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, provided it does not interfere with the public business.

The SPEAKER. And after this bill is disposed of to-morrow the Chair is authorized to recognize gentlemen who have bills on the Private Calendar, but not to interfere with the public business, such as the consideration of conference reports.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is, for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Yes; for unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] in charge of the bill if he will accept an amendment which would prevent the bill from interfering with the present activities of the farmers' cooperative demonstration work which is now being conducted by the Government?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that I would have to see that amendment and give it some consideration before making any promise as to that proposition.

Mr. BLACKMON. Before I can consent that this order should go through, I must be assured that some provision will be incorporated in the bill to protect the present methods that we have now, which seem to be doing a great deal of good. Otherwise I shall have to object.

Mr. MANN. Let me suggest to the gentleman that, after all, his objection will not help it any. We will go into Committee of the Whole on this bill now.

Mr. BLACKMON. I think not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will not be any better off. It will only interfere with the procedure in the closing days of the session, when every gentleman must make concessions to the convenience of the House.

Mr. BLACKMON. I appreciate the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois that in the closing days of the session it is not a good idea to interfere with the public business, and I have entertained that view all along and have interfered with it very little.

Mr. MANN. I would not quarrel with the gentleman about interfering. The same thing will be accomplished, only at less convenience to the Members.

Mr. BLACKMON. I would like to have opportunity here to make a fight for certain corrections and modifications of this bill without which I believe it will be dangerous to pass it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will have an opportunity to make a fight under the five-minute rule. The rights of the gentleman are fully protected under the suggestion of his colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will there be an opportunity to call up bills, under suspension, before the end of this session?

Mr. MANN. There will not be.

The SPEAKER. That stands this way: The first and third Mondays in the month are suspension days, after we get through with the Unanimous Consent Calendar. It so happens that in the last three months we never have gotten through with the Unanimous Consent Calendar. There never was but one of those Mondays when anybody asked to call up a bill under suspension of the rules.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is in order to move to suspend the rules during the last six days of the session.

The SPEAKER. But there are no "last six days" unless the two Houses fix the last six days.

Mr. MANN. And they will not stay here to accommodate anybody after they fix the last six days. After they know when they can go, they will go.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think we should have an opportunity to call up bills under suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. But you can not call them up under suspension of the rules unless you suspend the rule itself, because the rule fixes the first and third Mondays. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama touching this bill?

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, I have not entirely made up my mind to oppose this bill if it can be properly amended so as to protect this work, and therefore I shall not make any objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, may we have a still further understanding, if possible? If the Army conference report is agreed to in the Senate—which I suppose is not very likely now; there was some talk of taking it up this afternoon—is the gentleman willing to say that at the end of the general debate on the Lever bill, if not sooner, the House will adjourn, and that nothing else will be taken up except the Army conference report, if that comes in?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I will make a motion to adjourn when the general debate on this bill is finished this evening, provided these conference reports do not come in in the meantime.

Mr. MANN. And that nothing else will be taken up except conference reports.

Mr. SHERLEY. The sundry civil conference report may be in a position to be taken up.

Mr. MANN. I said nothing else except conference reports.

Mr. CANNON. The conference report on the sundry civil bill was submitted for printing to-day. It would have to go over until to-morrow under the rule.

Mr. SHERLEY. It might come up by unanimous consent.

Mr. CANNON. We had better have a gentleman's agreement.

Mr. MANN. It would expedite things if the Army conference report should come over and be agreed to. I do not think it will come over.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think it will come over, and we will adjourn at 7 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. Nothing else except conference reports and the general debate on this bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that there will be nothing else taken up except the general debate on this bill, and the consideration of the conference report if it should come over.

The SPEAKER. On the Army bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Any conference report.

The SPEAKER. It is understood, then, that there will be nothing else done to-night except these two hours and a half of general debate, and the consideration of conference reports if any come in. Is there objection to that agreement?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman from Iowa occupy some of his time. I used an hour and fifteen minutes the other day.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, among all the important questions which have a direct relation to the advancement of the welfare of human kind, none is of greater importance than that of the conservation of the natural resources, and particularly the conservation of the capacity of the soil to produce food. The essence of the Malthusian law of population is that the tendency of population to increase in numbers is greater than the increase of the capacity of the soil to produce food; that population, under normal conditions, will increase in a geometrical ratio, while the food products of the earth can increase in an arithmetical ratio at the most. The author of that great law predicted that the time would come, in the then comparatively near future, when the population of the earth would be so dense that there would be a struggle between individuals for means of subsistence, and that the strongest and the best adapted to that condition of industrial life would survive. While Malthus's prophecy respecting the multiplication of the inhabitants of the earth has not been verified in the full, yet the high cost of living, which is felt in all the civilized countries of the world, suggests the thought that the world may be feeling the influence of the Malthusian law at this time. The large increase in the price of the necessaries and comforts of life in the last 25 years is a world-wide phenomenon. It is influenced comparatively little by tariffs or industrial trusts and combinations. The cost of living has increased relatively as much in free-trade England during those years as it has in protected America, France, or Germany. The price of food products is influenced chiefly by two factors:

First. The large increase in the world's stock of gold that has occurred during the last 25 years. I believe in the quantitative theory of money, applied, of course, only to standard money, money that is universally recognized as a measure of value. The quantitative theory of money can not relate to silver nor to paper currency, because they do not have any share in the measurement of values.

Second. The most common, and, perhaps, the most potent factor in the high cost of food is the obvious fact that consumption is outrunning production. Beef animals are selling in the markets of the country to-day at $10.50 per hundred pounds on the foot, in gold. This is the highest price for which beef animals have ever sold in this country. The chief reason for this exceptionally high price is that there is a scarcity of beef animals in the country. This same reason holds true, in a greater or lesser degree, respecting all other lines of food.

The situation, as a whole, impresses upon the Government the imperative necessity of encouraging in every legitimate way the increase of food production. Great work has already been accomplished by the Department of Agriculture in collecting and disseminating knowledge respecting soil adaptation and scientific methods of culture, harvesting, and marketing the products of the farm. When I first became a Member of this body the annual appropriations for the maintenance of the Department of Agriculture were about $3,000,000 a year, and now they amount to nearly $15,000,000 a year. There has been an increase of substantially 500 per cent in appropriations for agricultural experiments, research, and dissemination of information in the last 15 years, and in my judgment no money paid out of the common Treasury has yielded to the people of the country as a whole larger or more beneficent returns than that which has been expended in improving methods of farming and marketing.

The preservation of the fertility of the soil is of vital importance. In some sections of the country methods of culture are such that the virgin fertility of the soil is early exhausted, and the capacity of the soil in a rapidly growing population is gradually depreciating. This ought not to be. There seems to be a scarcity of some lines of food in this country to supply a population of only ninety millions. If all the arable lands were under cultivation and our methods were thoroughly scientific, the country could produce food enough to comfortably support a population of at least a billion people.

There is no greater duty resting upon the Government than to use its agencies in collecting and disseminating information that will prompt the cultivators of the soil to employ better and more scientific methods of culture. The cost of food products may be reduced to the mutual benefit of the farmer and the consumer. Improved methods will enable the farmer to raise more at a smaller cost than he is now raising. His products may be sold at a lower price than he receives for them now, and yet his profit may be substantially increased.

I am heartily in favor of the present bill because it will be an important aid to the facilities for promoting a more scientific method of land culture. The agricultural colleges throughout the country are great agencies in carrying on this important work. There are more college graduates on the farm to-day than there ever were before in the history of the Government. Great progress has been made along scientific lines in many sections of the country, and a spirit of scientific enterprise, investigation, and vocational pride has been instilled into the minds of the tillers of the soil. The Purdue University, located in the district which I have the honor to represent, is the State agricultural and technological college. That institution has made its beneficent influence felt in all parts of the State of Indiana and in adjoining States. It has done a marvelous work toward improving the methods of farming within the range of its influence.

The authority given by the pending bill will gradually increase and expand the capacity of that and similar institutions to carry on this great work. This bill ought to be passed by a unanimous vote of the House. It should become a law before this session of Congress closes.

I will print with my remarks a letter from Dr. W. E. Stone, the president of Purdue University, giving the measure his unqualified indorsement.

PURDUE UNIVERSITY,
PRESIDENT'S OFFICE,
February 19, 1912.

Hon. EDGAR D. CRUMPACKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I desire to call your attention to a bill designated as H. R. 18160, introduced by Mr. LEVER, now before Congress, and under consideration by the Committee on Agriculture, the purpose of which is to establish departments of agricultural extension in connection with the agricultural colleges in the various States.

The bill is an expression of a very widespread interest throughout the whole country in improved agriculture by applying to its practices the results of scientific study, by better business and social conditions in rural communities, by increasing production and developing resources.

The very great interest in this movement has given rise to a variety of proposals for legislation for its encouragement. Many of these propositions are radical and impracticable. The bill to which I refer is strictly in line with the most improved efforts now being made in this work by the various agricultural colleges and experiment stations in all parts of the country.

You doubtless know a great deal about the agricultural extension work in our own State, which is responsible for the farmers' institutes, district short courses, demonstration trains, field experiments and demonstrations, and a great variety of agencies of this sort now successfully operating to help farmers and for which present resources are quite inadequate.

This bill has the indorsement and preference above other measures of the Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations as expressed at their November meeting. It is approved by the authorities of Purdue University. It is constructive legislation, proposing to apply a small appropriation to the improvement of a fundamental industry. I believe few other measures before Congress would touch more intimately the life of our people and produce quicker and more positive results than this if it were enacted.

I trust that you will give the measure careful consideration, that you will inquire into the attitude of your constituents concerning its value, and that you will see your way not only to approve the measure but to do something to secure its consideration and passage. If I can give you any information or assist you in any way in this connection, I shall be glad to do so.

Very truly, yours,
W. E. STONE.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Speaker, I presume there has not been any bill before this Congress that has excited the interest among the agricultural States of this Union and the agricultural people that this bill has. I am satisfied that I have received more requests, not only from my own district and State but from other States for the passage of this bill than all other bills put together, with the exception of, perhaps, the parcel-post and the Canadian reciprocity bill. I sincerely hope that all the Members of the House will study this bill and give it their support. I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAKER). The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment, to be read at the Clerk's desk and have it pending, to be voted on at the proper time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment to be considered as pending, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by adding after the word "established," line 8, page 2, the following: "The normal schools and colleges that have received State appropriations to promote the diffusion of information in agricultural and home economics."

[Mr. RUSSELL addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill. I think each Member of the House will give me credit for usually knowing my own attitude upon a proposition when I arise and endeavor to speak to it, but I confess that upon this bill I am somewhat at sea. In the first place there is a principle involved in this bill which viewed as a governmental proposition is of rather doubtful propriety to my mind. This bill provides that an appropriation shall be made out of the Federal Treasury to be allotted among the several States, each State to get its allotment—which is to be distributed or administered through the agricultural colleges—of course, provided that the State itself sees fit to make a similar appropriation. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have a very great doubt whether it is a sound governmental principle to make an appropriation out of the Federal Treasury conditioned upon another sovereign power making a similar appropriation. That is a somewhat academic discussion, and academic questions are not very popular now.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will permit, I was just about to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee the problem about which the gentleman is doubtful was settled at the Baltimore convention in the platform of the Democratic Party in these words:

We recognize the value of vocational education and urge Federal appropriations for such training and extension teaching in agriculture—in cooperation with the several States.

Listen—

Mr. GARRETT. Now, let me say this to the gentleman with respect to that proposition: That is really the practice now and my construction of that plank of the national platform has been that it is an indorsement of what is now being done. The practice now of the Department of Agriculture is to cooperate with the county, taking the county as a unit, where money is raised by private subscription, for instance, and not by compelling taxation through the sovereign power of the State as a condition precedent. The gentleman's bill makes no provision for that. I construe that plank of the platform to be an indorsement of the practice that is already in operation by the department, and I do not construe it to be an indorsement of a governmental principle of making an appropriation by one sovereignty conditioned upon another sovereignty making a similar appropriation.

Mr. BORLAND. I was going to ask the gentleman whether it is not true now that the Federal Government makes an appropriation for soil surveys conditioned upon an appropriation by the State?

Mr. GARRETT. No, sir; it does not.

Mr. BORLAND. And the joint appropriation is used in particular States.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not understand that that is made by law. I understand that to be the practice of the department. I do not understand that to be written into the law of Congress. I may be in error, of course.

Mr. BORLAND. I will not dispute the gentleman about the law of Congress, but the State statutes of Missouri appropriated $10,000 upon the condition that the Government appropriate a like amount and a like amount was appropriated or apportioned by the Government from some proper fund and the joint appropriation was used for soil surveys in Missouri.

Mr. GARRETT. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. BORLAND. The principle involved was done by the Missouri statute.

Mr. GARRETT. If it was a mistake to make that sort of a law, then, of course, it was a mistake on the part of Missouri and not of the Federal Congress.

Mr. BORLAND. We do not think so.

Mr. LEVER. I would like on that point to read what the bill itself says.

Mr. MONDELL rose.

Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman from Wyoming will excuse me a moment I will yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. LEVER. The bill specifically provides that an appropriation to meet the Federal appropriation may be made by the State, the agricultural college, the county, or any local authority, and we put that into this bill to meet the very objection which the gentleman has raised, and I will read the language:

To be paid in any year to any State under this act shall be a sum not exceeding the amount appropriated for that year by the legislature of such State, or provided by State, county, college, or local authority for the maintenance of said agricultural extension department.

Mr. GARRETT. Maybe that improves the bill. I do not get the connection of the sentences clearly.

Mr. LEVER. So I consider that meets the gentleman's objection.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman and myself discussed the particular point of what should be the unit, and that language was not in the bill at the time.

Mr. LEVER. It was put in the bill on the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. GARRETT. I am very glad it is in the bill, because I think it is very important it should go in there if the bill is to pass; still it is maintaining a principle of making an appropriation conditioned on receipts through some other source. Now, as I say, this is somewhat academic, but after all is it not a governmentally sound proposition that if any work ought to be done by the Federal Government, then the Federal Government ought to make the appropriations to do the work without condition? Now I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has clearly given this matter considerable attention and study, and I am frank to confess that I have not. But I would like to have the gentleman's opinion as to what control, if any, the Federal authorities would have of the appropriations proposed in the bill, inasmuch as they are to be turned over to the agricultural colleges to be expended in connection, so far as the additional sums are concerned, with like appropriations made by the States.

Mr. GARRETT. Now, I will say to the gentleman that I have given some attention to the bill, but I would much prefer that that question be answered by some one who is a member of the committee who has given greater attention to it than I have. I am not a member of the committee. As I read and construe the bill it would have practically no control.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will yield for that purpose——

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman states that his view is that the Federal Government would have practically no control?

Mr. GARRETT I think so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. Can the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] give me a little more time?

Mr. HAUGEN. How much time does the gentleman want? I have not very much, but I shall be glad to accommodate the gentleman so far as I can.

Mr. GARRETT. There is another phase of the question I would like to touch upon before I sit down, and five minutes will be sufficient for me.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT. I will yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] a minute of that time.

Mr. LEVER. It is in the language of the Adams Act. Mr. Galloway, in writing to me, says:

DEAR MR. LEVER: Referring to our conversation over the telephone regarding the authority of the Secretary, as set forth in the Hatch Act and in the Adams Act, I beg to say that in the original Hatch Act the Commissioner, now Secretary, of Agriculture, had no authority whatever in the matter of controlling the operations or funds appropriated under the Hatch Act. Secretary Morton, recognizing the weakness of the act, had section 3, which you read to me over the telephone, incorporated. This merely gives the Secretary authority to, so far as practicable, secure uniformity of methods and results of the work of said stations and to furnish, so far as practicable, forms for the tabulation of results of investigations or experiments, to indicate from time to time such lines of inquiry as to him shall seem most important, etc. There is nothing in the act anywhere that gives the Secretary authority to administer the act as an act.

The Adams Act, on the other hand, gives the Secretary express authority to administer the entire act, as you will find at the end of section 4, reading as follows:

"If the next Congress shall not direct such sum to be paid it shall be covered into the Treasury, and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby charged with the proper administration of this law."

That is, the Secretary of Agriculture, as you will see, is charged with the entire administration of the law, and as a result of this I am informed by the Office of Experiment Stations that it is practicable for them to much more rigidly control the work inaugurated than is the case under the Hatch Act.

I think your bill carries this clause in it, and, if so, it is my opinion—and Dr. True concurs with me in this—that nothing further is needed to give the Secretary sufficient authority to keep definite control of all operations under your bill.

Very sincerely,

B. T. GALLOWAY,
Chief of Bureau.

And the language of this bill is the language of the Adams Act. So the Federal Government has all the control which, in my judgment, it should have.

Mr. GARRETT. Oh! The Federal Government determines whether the State has made the appropriation, but after the money has left the Treasury of the United States there is no control by that Federal Government over the expenditure and no control over the men who go forth to do the demonstration work. That is true?

Mr. LEVER. To that extent it is true.

Mr. GARRETT. There is one other thing I want to say, if the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] will pardon me for not yielding further. In my judgment, the farmers' cooperative demonstration work initiated by Dr. Knapp is the greatest single work of the United States Department of Agriculture. In those communities in which it has been put into operation it has been worth untold millions of dollars to the agricultural interests. Now, if I understand correctly—and I ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] if I am not correct in this statement—it is the purpose of this bill to destroy that work as it exists now and to transfer it to the agricultural colleges of the States?

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will permit, it is not the purpose of this bill to destroy the farmers' cooperative demonstration work. I think the ultimate result will be in the course of 10 or 12 or 15 years that this work will be transferred to the colleges, and I think and I trust will be much better done by the colleges than it can possibly be done from a central bureau in Washington.

Mr. GARRETT. Now, let me ask the gentleman another question. There is now, of course, a certain appropriation made from the Federal Treasury for this cooperative demonstration work?

Mr. LEVER. About $600,000 a year.

Mr. GARRETT. That fund is added to a fund that is obtained from the General Educational Board?

Mr. LEVER. From John D. Rockefeller.

Mr. GARRETT. Well, whatever its source may be. It is a good thing for which Mr. Rockefeller's money is being spent, if that is correct. Does the gentleman think that the Committee on Agriculture of the House in the future, if this bill shall pass, will, as a committee, report in favor of appropriating, at least, an amount equal to the amount which has heretofore been appropriated for this cooperative demonstration work, without reference to this bill?

Mr. LEVER. As a matter of fact, I will say to the gentleman that the Committee on Agriculture this year increased the appropriation for the farm demonstration work to be done in other sections of the country than the South $50,000. That amount was increased $50,000 on the floor of the House, and that amount was increased $150,000 by the Senate, and the House conferees agreed to it.

My thought is that unless we can make this work an impersonal work, in which Members of Congress can have no interest, we shall in the course of 10 years be so overwhelmingly swamped by applications from our own people for more money that a man will be absolutely under the dominance of the agents in the districts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] give me three minutes more? I do not want to impose upon the gentleman from Iowa at all.

Mr. HAUGEN. I would be very glad to give the time the gentleman asks, but the time is all apportioned. I can give the gentleman two minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. GARRETT. I want to ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] this question in regard to the bill: Does not the gentleman think this legislation is likely to result in there being a political machine built up in the several States composed of the demonstrators?

Mr. LEVER. No; I think not. We can judge of the future only by the past. We made the first appropriations for the agricultural colleges 50 years ago. We also make the appropriations for these experimental stations out of the Federal Treasury. We have a continuing appropriation for the agricultural experiment stations with the result that neither the experiment stations nor the colleges have any interest in a Member of Congress whatever, because it makes no difference whatever to them whether the gentleman from Tennessee, for instance, is in Congress or some other gentleman is representing his district here, because they known that, whoever represents the district, these permanent appropriations are coming anyhow. I believe that this proposition in the end is going either to save the demonstration work or else build up the biggest political machine here in Washington that has ever been put on foot in this country.

Mr. GARRETT. Suppose some State is willing to make appropriations and some county in that State is unwilling. Where will the man go from in that case?

Mr. LEVER. He would go from the agricultural college. The college would control the administration of it.

Mr. GARRETT. The county would have no college. Then he would go from the State college?

Mr. LEVER. If it is a local matter, the local college would administer it.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in conclusion that I should certainly regret, not only for the academic reasons stated but also for the practical reasons that I have stated, to vote for this bill if I thought it would destroy the cooperative work that is now in progress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been discussed in detail, and I will not take up the time of the House in discussing the bill section by section, and will simply say that it has for its object to establish agricultural-extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States, to aid in diffusing among the people of the United States useful and practical information on subjects relating to agriculture and home economics, and to encourage the application of the same, and appropriating, to begin with, $10,000 annually for and to be paid each State, which shall by action of its legislature assent to the provisions of this act, to which public lands have been donated, for colleges for the benefit of the agricultural and mechanic arts, under the so-called Morrill Act and acts supplementary thereto; that the additional sum of $300,000 shall be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and an additional increase of the amount of such appropriation thereafter for nine years; that the annual sum to be paid thereafter to the States shall be $3,000,000, and that the additional sum to be allotted annually to each State in the proportion which the rural population bears to the total rural population of all the States on the condition that the State receiving the benefit under this act shall appropriate an equal amount to that paid by the Federal Government. Thus, I have briefly stated the object of the bill. I might add that Congress has, as set out in this report, at various times passed laws making liberal appropriations for State colleges and experiment stations. I read from page 2 of the report:

As a result of this encouragement and Federal recognition, every State has a well-equipped agricultural and mechanical college, training its young men to solve agricultural and industrial problems.

It was soon discovered that their peculiar difficulty lay in a lack of sufficient, definite, and exact scientific information. Realization of this insufficiency became so manifest and so insistent that the Hatch Act, establishing agricultural experiment stations, "to promote scientific investigation and experiment, respecting the principles and applications of agricultural science," was enacted 25 years after the land-grant colleges were authorized. Under this act agricultural experiment stations, devoting their energies to gathering scientific truths and exploding harmful fallacies touching agriculture, have been established in each of the States.

Subsequent legislation has been confined to the enlargement of the funds for the furtherance of the fundamental ideas involved in the original Morrill and Hatch Acts, such as the Adams and Nelson Act, since the enactment of which the Federal Government has expended $67,000,000 upon these institutions, as follows:

Statement showing the amount of money that has been expended by the Federal Government for State experiment stations and agricultural colleges.

STATE EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

Total amount expended under the Hatch Act from 1888 to June 30, 1911	$16,807,338.94
Total amount allotted under the Hatch Act during the the fiscal year 1912, up to and including the fiscal year 1912 up to and including the quarter ending Mar. 30, 1912	540,000.00
Total under Hatch Act	17,347,338.94
Total amount expended under the Adams Act from 1906 to June 30, 1911	2,828,665.21
Total amount allotted under the Adams Act during the fiscal year 1912, up to and including the quarter ending Mar. 30, 1912	540,000.00
Total under Adams Act	3,368,665.21
Total for State experiment stations under both acts	20,716,004.15

STATE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

Total amount paid from 1890 to 1912, inclusive, under the acts of Aug. 30, 1890, and Mar. 4, 1907	$28,802,000.00
Proceeds from sale of land	13,348,041.00
Value of unsold land (estimated)	5,042,388.00
Total for agricultural colleges under both acts, etc	47,192,429.00

RECAPITULATION.

Total for State experiment stations	20,716,004.15
Total for agricultural colleges	47,192,429.00
Grand total	67,908,433.15

The total annual appropriations made for the Department of Agriculture, including permanent annual appropriations, now exceed $22,000,000. Much of that amount goes for education, besides nearly 500,000 teachers are employed and are paid about $220,000,000 annually in salaries. The total expense for public schools aggregates more than $371,000,000 annually. These are, indeed, large sums, and may suggest Congress going slow in increasing appropriations for education. But we are a rich and great Nation; this Government pays annually a greater sum for war, Navy, and pensions, and it seems to me if a nation can in time of profound peace pay about $400,000,000 annually on account of war it can afford to pay an equal amount for education. While there should be no extravagance in appropriations for education or anything else, we should meet every proper and legitimate demand. We all take a just and pardonable pride in our Nation's growth and greatness, in the fact that we are living in this age of marvelous expansion, and are moving forward with a mighty speed; that the wheels of industry are moving; the fact that we rank among the most practical, prosperous, and intelligent people on earth; that progress, prosperity, and happiness are in evidence everywhere. We feel it our duty, no matter what our political affiliation, creed, occupation, or prejudices may be, to strive to benefit this country, to relieve the distressed, to protect the weak, to uplift humanity, to promote and to perpetuate true greatness, to give honest and thoughtful consideration in securing full benefit for our natural resources, for the development of mechanical appliances and the skill and genius of American labor; to see to it that nobody is imposed upon; that everybody is given adequate protection against any invasion on the part of unscrupulous and dishonest interests, in order that we may have the fullest development of every worthy and deserving enterprise. If so, how are we to proceed? The general contention is that we must have a general education. Knowledge is power; it always was power and always will be power. The importance of a general education in a republic that must be sustained by the virtue and intelligence of her people can not be too highly appreciated. Knowledge is the greatest security of freedom, and all we have and enjoy of human liberty was acquired by the people. They fought the battle of our Revolution; they declared our independence; they made our Constitution and have sustained it in peace and in war.

These people, this Republic demands, and, I am proud to say, it receives liberal provision for a general education. But while generous provisions are made for education yet the question remains, Can it be improved upon? I believe it can. We are educating too many men now for "white-shirt man's job." As everybody knows, the major portion of money now expended for education is to prepare men and women for the professions; only eight out of every hundred of our people belong to the professions, and the balance—92—to the industrial, agricultural, commercial, and idle classes. I believe we should give more consideration to and spend more money for the Government to fit a man to work effectually with his hands and to dignify labor; that seems to me as laudable a purpose as to fit one for a professional career. I believe that part of the public money appropriated for education should be used for the purpose of giving a practical training in developing skill and efficiency in the different trades and occupations; and if I had my way about it I would amend this bill so as to make it apply to secondary schools, high schools, State colleges of agriculture, and mechanic arts. [Applause.] In my opinion the people in agricultural, industrial, and commercial pursuits are as much entitled to consideration at our hands as the professions. Why not extend the advantages of education and training to them for their life work as well as for the professions, so that they may enter into their particular callings well trained and equipped? I believe that young men should not only be given an education but should also be taught to work. They should know that there is pleasure, satisfaction, honor, and dignity in toil, be it by hand or head, be it providing for the bodily want of the individual, be it carrying the hod, molding or laying the brick, extracting the gold, silver, or other ore from the bowels of the earth, preaching a sermon from a pulpit, or digging a ditch, erecting a cottage or mansion, or promoting any worthy enterprise; they should know that all reputable labor is honorable and dignified. Of course all employment which requires manual labor is more independent and conducive to good health; but there should be no line drawn as between occupations, for all honest work is dignified and honorable.

Every article used represents more or less labor. It is toil that has made our great and glorious country what it is; it has cleared the forest and transformed the prairies and wilderness into a bed of roses, and these productive fields producing bread, the staff of life, feeding millions and millions of families. It is toil that has made our farms and has built our towns and cities, our factories and mills, our schools and temples of religion, and anyone who has contributed his share of this great work may well feel proud of his part in developing this great and glorious country. [Applause.] It must be clear to everybody that the people in industrial and agricultural pursuits should be given the kind of education that will enable them to earn a living and equip them for better service, as well as those of the professions. The other day my attention was called to a sign over a door which read: "Shoeing done by horseshoers." This sign appealed to me; it suggested the value of skill and knowledge in every calling of life—that skill and knowledge in shoeing horses are as important as is the knowledge of law, rules, and practices of the courts to the lawyer in trying a lawsuit. If true as to the horseshoer, is it not true as to everybody, no matter what his occupation may be? If so, we must have practical and scientific education and training to fit our men and women for their particular life work. It has been pointed out that our farms yield less per acre than those in European countries, and that it is due to lack of knowledge of agriculture. No one will deny but that it is very necessary for the farmer to have knowledge of the plant he plants and the soil which he tills, that he may know how to bring about such conditions of the soil that it will make it more fertile and productive. If such knowledge is of value to the farmer, it is of value in other lines of work; if it increases the yield of grains and fruits, as is claimed it has done in other countries, why not provide for it in our own country? All our interests are in common; we go up and down together. All wealth comes from the soil. With prosperity on the farm we have prosperity in the cities; with close times on the farm we have closed banks, stores, factories, and mills in the cities. Why not provide for education in home economics, not only in cooking but in every science conducive to making better homes and home life?

If it is necessary for the farmer to study the life and conditions of plants and soil, to know under what conditions the highest and best results may be obtained, is it not of even more importance to the mothers and housewives to know what food to give the child and members of the family; to know that certain kinds of food build up the tissues of the body and that certain other foods supply heat for the body, others energy and strength; that she may know what proportions should be fed in producing the right physical condition; that certain foods are conducive to health and longevity and that others are destructive? A knowledge of these things is of vital importance to the health, happiness, and prosperity of all of us. It seems to me that the teaching of domestic science and the practical application in the homes are of much greater importance than the teaching of many of the other sciences. Our schools should be provided with teachers equipped to teach practical vocational education. We should stimulate love for the practical things of manual labor. [Applause.] Deplorable yet true, in some sections of the country young men and women believe it below their social standing to do manual labor, to do housework; hence they are left home with nothing to do. It is not like in the old pioneer days, when every young man and woman was taught not only how to work, but made to work; they were taught to work on the farm, in the store, and in the home, and were proud of their skill and ability. Now it is quite different. Many feel above work and inclined to shun it. Without work they become restless, and many drift into mischief and some sink into melancholy. We are confronted with the deplorable fact that 1 out of every 10 of American marriages end in the divorce courts. Many contend that this condition is largely due to idleness or the absence of some definite, useful, and honorable occupation, caused by the lack of desire on the part of many young men and women for really healthful and productive employment, not being trained in a right use of their abilities.

An idle brain is the devil's workshop; a lazy man the devil's bolster.

Work is what God intended us to do. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground." "If any one will not work, neither let him eat." Let every man and woman go to work and do not wait. Let no young man or woman delay; "procrastination is a thief of time"; let him work and forget his trials, troubles, and tribulations of life. Nature, the soul, mind, and the body never stand still; they either go up or down. The mind, the soul, and body are naturally active; it is with the human as it is with the plant and tree—it either goes up or down; if you suffer the mind or body to be unoccupied, temptation and evil thoughts will overtake you; toil terminates in enjoyment. If one is not engaged in some honorable business, he sinks into melancholy or drifts into mischief; but work keeps one out of mischief. One reaps what he sows. No one has the right to expect a good fortune unless he goes to work and earns and deserves it; every man and woman is the architect of his or her respective fortune; the life of constant and useful employment is the only safe and happy one; and the proud possessor of a robust health and a will to work his way honestly and courageously through the world is the proud possessor of God's greatest gift and blessing to mankind. If so, we may well ask, What is the best capital a young man can start out with? The answer is, generally, a good education, good morals and sound judgment, foresight, good common sense, energy, a robust health, a will to work his way honestly and bravely, a character of the highest type and founded upon integrity. If a young man's ambition is to be a truly great man, he must have something to do; toil is the price of success. If a young man's ambition or desire is to have a good business, a big farm, a sweet, charming, and beautiful wife, a comfortable, congenial, happy home, and all that this world affords, what is there to hinder him from having it in this land of plenty, under this grand and glorious Government, with its splendid, magnificent institutions which Washington and his noble band of patriots so wisely provided for? Industry with proper economy will bring it; live within your income, pay your debts; an obligation once made, great or small, to friend or foe, must be redeemed unconditionally.

First, let a young man be sure that his trade, profession, or calling in life is to his liking and that it is an honorable and a good one; then stick to it, think for it, plan for it, work for it, live for it, and be true as steel to it; harden his hands, sweat his brow, tax his brain, throw his mind, might, life, strength into his actions for it and success will crown his efforts. Work is not a curse; it is a blessing that an all-wise Providence has provided for man's development. Without toil, care, sorrow, worry, poverty, reverses, and adversaries there would be fewer great characters.

If you will study the life and character of our great and successful men, the so-called shining lights, the men of wealth and worth, eminence, intelligence, prominence, power, and influence, you will find that a large majority of them began early in life in some useful employment, and many of them poor orphan boys—poor, without means, compelled to work for subsistence, work their way through schools, shouldering heavy burdens, assuming responsibilities and contending with sharp and keen competition and opposition, thus developing their power in the field of employment, gradually going onward and upward.

A good education, careful training, and a gentle breeding, good society and good morals, a good environment, a healthful atmosphere, good and timely advice and instruction by kind, good, and generous parents are essential; they are grand instrumentalities in molding characters; but the real and most important means in man making is constant and useful employment. The secret of making a good, useful, and happy man out of a young man is to put him to work and keep him at it. It hardens his hands and muscles, strengthens his body, and sharpens his mind and wits, arouses ambition and promotes patriotism and longevity, and, in my opinion, the man or woman who is above work or despises the laborer shows a lack in judgment, common sense, and appreciation of a business or ordinance of God. Yes; there is dignity in work. All reputable work is honorable and dignified; it is good for the body and the soul; it is conducive to good health.

Do not understand me to contend that if you pursue your duties with industry, fidelity, with rectitude to purposes dominated with lofty ideals, with a firm determination to do justice and right, with sincerity and honesty, shunning deceit and cunning practice, that you will be immune from attack by the muckraker, the demagogue, the slanderer, the blackmailer, the egotistical and jealous man, or the yellow journal. No; far from that; to the contrary, it is the active men and women who do things that are attacked; as long as we have the muckrakers and blackmailers, unprincipled and dishonest men, and yellow journals, you will be in danger of being pursued and persecuted. The indolent man, the lazy man, or one who never accomplishes anything is never attacked, as there is nothing to attack; but never mind; pay no attention to that; pursue your duty with integrity, fidelity, and industry—plug away.

Longfellow says:

Do the duty that lies nearest to you and have no thought of fame.

Crockett says:

Be sure you are right. Then go ahead.

Do it with an iron will and a velvet smile and your efforts in public and private life will be crowned with success. That eloquent Roman said:

I hold that no man deserves to be crowned with success who is a failure.

He who lives to eat, drink, and accumulate money is a failure. The world is none the better for him being in it. He never wiped a tear from a sad face; he never builded a fire on a frozen hearth. I repeat with emphasis that he is a failure; he worships no god but gold.

Errors, like straws, upon the surface flow;
He who would search for pearls must dive below.

But I want to get back to the subject of the bill. It is the farmer, the workingman, and their wives who are going to make this country prosperous. The time is coming when men and women who are physically and mentally able to work and do not work will be looked down upon; therefore we should at once begin to teach our boys and girls to work and to honor the man and woman who works, to educate them and fit them for agricultural, industrial, and commercial pursuits, as well as for the profession. That is what this bill in part proposes to do. We have accumulated the facts and have bottled up in the Department of Agriculture millions of dollars' worth of valuable knowledge. Our scientists over there, generally conceded to be the greatest in the world, are full of it. They have been endeavoring to disseminate knowledge on agricultural and home economics through the mails by publishing and sending out bulletins, and much has been accomplished, but, as a general thing, the people do not apply things simply by reading or hearing about them. Now, let us send practical men with expert knowledge in the field and demonstrate what can be done when labor is practically, scientifically, and intelligently applied, as has been done in the cotton-boll weevil districts, in the acre-corn contest, carried on all over this country. With the permission of the House, I will print in the RECORD a statement of the late Dr. S. A. Knapp, special agent in charge of the work in the South.

Of the visit of the corn club boys in Washington he says:

The visit to Washington this week of the prize-winning boys from 11 Southern States is the crowning event of the year's work of 46,225 boys. These boys are members of the corn clubs under the farmers' cooperative demonstration work of the United States Department of Agriculture.

About a year ago all of the members of the corn clubs agreed to work 1 acre of corn in accordance with the instructions of the department. Merchants, bankers, and other public-spirited citizens offered more than $40,000 worth of prizes, consisting of cash, farm implements, trips, ponies, pigs, bicycles, watches, and many other things calculated to gladden the adolescent heart. Government agents, public-school officers, and teachers cooperated in the organization and instruction of clubs in nearly 600 counties. The names and addresses of the members of the clubs were filed with the United States Department of Agriculture. Circulars of instruction, prepared by Dr. S. A. Knapp, in charge of the demonstration work, were mailed to all of the boys at various times during the year. When the boys studied seed selection the whole county got interested. When they took up the preparation of the soil there was a general movement for better preparation. The prize winners, now in Washington, plowed their acres from 8 to 16 inches deep and thoroughly pulverized their seed beds. When the subject of fertilization came up the general knowledge about nitrogen, potash, and phosphorus was increased, leaves and wood mold were sought to increase humus, and stable and poultry houses were cleaned out for the benefit of the prize acre. Shallow and frequent cultivation was kept up during the spring and summer, because the boys had learned that the roots of the corn must not be broken, and that the corn must have a good dust mulch in order to conserve moisture.

According to the regulations making awards of prizes, the following points were considered: Yield, cost per bushel, best 10 ears, and written history of crop. Not all of the boys who won prizes made the largest yields in their States. The economical side must be considered. The farming must be profitable. A record must be kept and a good exhibit made at the county corn show or fair.

A year ago Secretary Wilson gave diplomas of merit to four boys who came to Washington. At that time there were 12,000 members of the clubs. This year business organizations and individual citizens gave prize trips in 11 Southern States. Governors and superintendents of education are also giving diplomas of honor to all boys who produced 75 bushels per acre, at a reasonable cost. It is a common occurrence for 500 to 1,000 people to witness the awards of 15 or 20 certificates at a county seat. In one Mississippi county 48 boys averaged 92 bushels per acre. In one South Carolina county 20 boys produced 1,700 bushels of corn on 20 acres. In another county in the same State 142 boys averaged 62 bushels per acre.

This work is having much to do with the increased averages of the Southern States in corn production. It will have something to do with reducing the cost of living, also.

The following are the names and addresses of the winners of the trip to the capital of their country, and also the yields of their respective acres and the cost per bushel:

Names and addresses.	Number of bushels.	Cost per bushel.
		Cents.
Hughey A. Harden, Banks, Ala	120	32
Ira Smith, Silver, Ark	119	8
Joseph Stone, Center, Ga	102⅜	59
Stephen G. Henry, Melrose, La	139⅗	13⅘
William Williams, Decatur, Miss	140½	18
W. Ernest Starnes, Hickory, N. C	140⅜	38
Floyd Gayer, Tishomingo, Okla	95⅛	8
Jerry H. Moore, Winona, S. C	228⅜	43
Norman Smith, Covington, Tenn	125½	37
William Rodger Smith, Karnes City, Tex	83½	13¾
Maurice Olgers, Sutherland, Va	168	40

Dr. Knapp's experience and accomplishment in this work are told in his letter printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD February 2, 1911. Dr. Knapp says that he realized that it was almost impossible to teach old men how to respond—they knew much better than he or anyone else—they had been raising corn in a way all their lives. So he conceived the plan of organizing boys' corn clubs in a small way, and met with wonderful success, as is shown in his statement. He tells of Hopping, of Rogers, who, without the aid of a mule or a horse, except to have his land plowed, actually raised 50 bushels on an acre with a plow manufactured by his own hands and pulled by a goat trained by him.

Dr. Knapp tells pathetic stories of how hard it is to get the old father to help the boy. He tells of one boy who was very anxious to raise some corn, but had no ground. So his father said, "Well, you can have an acre over there on the hillside if you will clear the stumps and logs off." The little fellow worked hard and cleared the land, and then his unkind father took it away from him. The little chap was not discouraged. When the farm demonstrator came around the boy appealed to him, and he in turn appealed to the father, who said, "Well, I will let him have another acre over there on the same hillside, provided he clears off the logs and stumps." He cleared them, worked as vigorously as he could, and produced 85 bushels of corn on that acre, while the old man, who cultivated by the old method on the acre that the boy had first cleared, made only 18 bushels.

Also a statement giving the result of the Iowa Boys' and Girls' Clubs, 1911:

WINNERS OF THE WASHINGTON TRIPS IN THE ACRE CORN-GROWING CONTEST AND THE BREAD-BAKING CONTEST.

Sweepstakes, State wide:
Lester Finch, Fairbank, Buchanan County.
Score, 93.47 per cent; bushels, 99.67; production cost per bushel, 11 cents.
Donor of Washington trip, Wallace's Farmer.

Third congressional district:
Vivian Edwards, Clarksville, Butler County.
Score, 93.05 per cent; bushels, 97.17; production cost per bushel, 14⅝ cents.
Donor of Washington trip, Congressman CHARLES E. PICKETT.

Fourth congressional district:
Harry E. La Ville, Postville, Fayette County.
Score, 89.58 per cent; bushels, 96.22; production cost per bushel, 12½ cents.
Donor of Washington trip, Congressman GILBERT N. HAUGEN.

Sixth congressional district:
David Jones, New Sharon, Poweshiek County.
Score, 81.47 per cent; bushels, 81.32; production cost per bushel, 28⅓ cents.
Donor of Washington trip, Congressman NATHAN E. KENDALL.

Seventh congressional district:
Charles Whitehouse, Granger, Polk County.
Score, 85.28 per cent; bushels, 86.22; production cost per bushel, 24 cents.
Donor of Washington trip, Congressman SOLOMON F. PROUTY.

Eighth congressional district:
Glen Mead, Percival, Fremont County.
Score, 92.01 per cent; bushels, 97.66; production cost per bushel, 18¾ cents.
Donor of Washington trip, Congressman HORACE M. TOWNER.

Tenth congressional district:
Ivyl E. Naylor, Stratford, Hamilton County.
Score, 79.19 per cent; bushels, 75.55; production cost per bushel, 21⅓ cents.
Second prize, railway and Pullman tickets, round trip:
Lewis Helm, Rutland, Humboldt County.
Donor of Washington trip, Congressman FRANK P. WOODS.

Eleventh congressional district:
Clarence L. Brown, Salix, Woodbury County.
Score, 90.58 per cent; bushels, 84.69; production cost per bushel, 21 cents.
Donor of Washington trip, Congressman ELBERT H. HUBBARD.

Pottawattamie County:
Arthur Strohbehn, Treynor, Pottawattamie County.
Score, 74.30 per cent; bushels, 60.01; production cost per bushel, 21 cents.
Donor of Washington trip, citizens of Pottawatamie County.

BREAD-BAKING CONTEST.

Sweepstakes, State wide, bread; baked at Ames Junior Short course, January 11, 1912:
Miss Lois Edmonds, Clarinda, Page County.
Score, 93 per cent.
Donor of Washington trip, Successful Farming.
The mothers of the two sweepstakes winners will accompany the party at the expense of the Wm. Galloway Co., Waterloo, Iowa.
The score for selecting winners was based upon the following items:

	Per cent.
Yield of credit bushels	40
Quality as shown by exhibit of best 10 ears	20
Written account telling history of growing crop	20
Production cost per bushel	20
Total	100

The credit bushels were ascertained by a moisture and shelled-corn test of a sample peck of corn submitted by the acre-yield committee of each contestant to the State College of Agriculture at Ames. The credit bushels in each case represent the value of shelled, air-dried corn.

Here we have the results of demonstration work by practical and scientific men. It is proposed in this bill to extend this work so as to not only educate the boys and girls in school but to send men and women out to demonstrate to them how it is to be done and to encourage them to work, to take up some occupation, no matter whether it be in professions, agricultural, commercial, industrial, or whatever it may be, just so it is an honorable and a good one, so that they may become good and useful men and women, strong physically as well as mentally, to teach not only how to do things but to actually do things and not to drift into mischief through idleness, but to do as other great men and women who have achieved great success in life—men who rose from the ranks without money for a start, yet with their intelligence, industry, enterprise, and a will to rise to work, to conquer, they succeeded, such as Lincoln, Grant, McKinley, Napoleon, Cromwell, Clay, Webster, Marshall Field, and thousands of other memorable men. The surest and safest path to success is untiring industry, energy, constant and useful occupation, integrity, and good common sense. We hear much about luck; take no stock in it; it is too uncertain. If you will be nothing or a failure in life, just stand around and wait to be somebody and to do much and great things at once. Success does not come by accident, but by purpose and persistent industry. The fruits of endeavor and success depend upon one's own efforts, his capacity and inclination to work.

If one wishes to get through this world successfully he must rely mainly upon his own efforts. In this great and expanding country no one need to be without some useful employment. All trades and professions are open to him if he will give his services freely and honestly. If he does he will succeed. He may not get as many millions as some, but he will get more honor, glory, and money than the man who gives his services reluctantly, who holds his pick or hoe or hammer at an angle of 45 degrees, throwing his head back over his shoulders to see if he is being watched by his overseer; or he who is constantly clamoring for additional "off hours" and impatiently looking at his watch for the hour of quitting to arrive, robbing his employer by loafing or giving dishonest work. It is the man who gives his service cheerfully and honestly who is rewarded both by the public and his employers, and not the lazy or dishonest man. Occasionally we see unprincipled lazy and dishonest men carry off honors and wealth, but nine times out of ten it is the man who is willing to work; the man whose character is founded on integrity is the one who succeeds. What a misconception it is on the part of some who believe and contend that it is the indolent, dishonest man who succeeds. No; it is not the demagogue, the liar, the scoundrel, the over-reaching man who succeeds. Let a man be known to be honest and upright, square and fair in all his dealings, and he will enjoy the respect, admiration, and confidence of all who know him. Let him part with anything rather than conscientious rectitude to purposes. The world is looking for men and women of integrity, men who neither lie nor steal, men who know their places and fill them; who will denounce wrong in friend or foe or in themselves. The merchant is looking for him as a salesman or clerk, the patient as his physician, the farmer as his manager or his hired man, the client as his lawyer, and the sweet, charming, and beautiful neighbor girl will be only too glad to accept of his hand if he is of the right character.

Apply energy and integrity and he need have no fear but he will succeed in this land of plenty. What is American citizenship to me? It seems beyond the power of comprehension. Here where all the avenues of American citizenship are thrown wide open for the advancement of every American citizen, be he humble or exalted, native or foreign born, rich or poor, this applies to all positions of honor, trust, and the acquirement of wealth. Here where the man of the lowest walks of life may have an even chance, where we are not required to follow in the beaten paths of former ages, but each allowed to map out his future destiny, where all our schools are open to each and every resident child, from the remotest school district to the highest classrooms in our universities, where the rail splitter, the country merchant, the country teacher became President of the United States and among the greatest and grandest men who ever occupied that chair.

We have many self-made men, and what an inspiration and what an encouragement it is to our young, and what an example and lesson. If one is to succeed in life it is by hard work; it is by fidelity to duty, unfaltering faith in rectitude of purposes, dominated by the noblest and loftiest ideals, with a firm determination to do justice, to do right. One's guiding star should always be sincerity, integrity, shunning deceit and cunning practice. Let no young man delay; let him go to work. Of all the contemptible things idleness is the worst; it is degrading, degenerating, demoralizing, unbecoming; it leads to sin, device, and destruction.

And, deplorable as it is, nevertheless it is true; idleness predominates in too many lives. See the millions who go ragged, hungry, and poor, gambling, swindling, stealing, and robbing, plundering, sponging at the expense of his fellow man rather than to work.

My friends, is it not time that we are giving more thought and attention to the American boy? Let us teach our children in our home and in our schools to work. It has been a hobby of mine that we should have a branch of manual training in all our colleges, universities, academies, public schools, and secondary schools, and it is gratifying to me to have this dream brought into realization to a large extent in our common schools already. Now, one word and I am done. Much has been said in commendation of the Department of Agriculture and scientists employed therein. While I concur in practically all that has been said and appreciate the splendid work done and am proud of its achievement and feel certain that much good will come from it in the future and from the enactment of this bill, yet I do not share in the contention that the department or scientists are entitled to all the credit for what has been accomplished or that we must look to them alone for our future prosperity and happiness. Due credit should and must be given those who have really made this country what it is; those who have built our towns, villages, and homes, our roads, our farms, our bridges and charitable institutions; those who have constructed this vast system of public schools, many of them in poverty, in sickness, in reverses, privation, and sorrow; others in health, wealth, joy, and prosperity, sympathizing with each other's woes, sharing each other's joys, step by step advancing along the lines of accumulation of wealth, culture, and refinement, until to-day we boast of the fact that we rank among the most successful, practical, and intelligent people upon earth. Their onward march to true greatness has placed them in the foremost ranks of modern civilization and refinement.

These towns, these villages, these temples of religion and industrial institutions, the morality and industry of our people all accomplish in this government of the people, by the people, and for the people, are not the achievements of an ignorant or indolent people; to the contrary, they bear upon them the impress of the most enlightened views and policies executed with the greatest prudence, firmness, and wisdom—they are the trophies of freedom and the grandest monuments of our national glory. [Applause.]

By unanimous consent, Mr. RUSSELL was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I certainly approve of the splendid statement to which we have just listened from the gentleman [Mr. HAUGEN] through whose courtesy I am yielded this time. His long and distinguished service on the Committee on Agriculture eminently fits him for a proper consideration and determination of the merits of this class of legislation.

And, Mr. Speaker, I desire to congratulate the young and already distinguished Member from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], who has introduced and so faithfully worked for the passage of this bill. I am exceedingly sorry that we are called to consider it so late in the session. As has been said by other gentlemen on the floor, it is one of the most important bills for consideration by the present session of this Congress.

There are some features of this bill that I am in doubt about. In fact, there are some features of it that I think ought to be remedied, and that I hope will be remedied when it shall be considered for amendment in this House. For instance, there is now appropriated in the agricultural appropriation bill a large amount for extension work by that department. It seems to me that the extension work which is provided for here ought in some way to correlate with the work of the extension department of the Agricultural Department. As I understand, there is no correlation of this work. No one knows how the amount appropriated for the department is to be expended or what proportion of it is to be expended, if any, in conjunction with the work here provided for. In fact, it would appear this is an independent appropriation along lines that seemingly have no connection with the work already provided for in the Agricultural Department.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

There is another matter in this connection, Mr. Speaker, that I think ought to be carefully considered in this House. There is no provision in this bill for educational work except by demonstration work in the field. I think I am justified in saying that the agricultural societies of the United States, the agricultural journals of this country, the associations in the interest of labor, all who are interested in vocational and industrial education, hope that when Congress shall take action on this subject it may be on broader grounds than this merely demonstration work in the field. [Applause.]

There is no provision here by which there shall be any assistance or supervision by the General Government of educational work for the child in industrial, vocational, or agricultural pursuits. While professional education can await mature years, vocational education should commence with early childhood.

And so it has been thought by those especially interested in this work that the field of vocational education should be enlarged. This is not a new thought. Already many bills have been introduced in Congress along these lines. The distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] introduced last year a comprehensive bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] has on the calendar a bill of that character, and there is one also pending now in the Senate introduced by Senator PAGE.

There are meritorious features in each of these bills, as there is certainly merit in the bill we now have under consideration. I regret, therefore, that at this late period of our session we are compelled to pass upon this most important subject of legislation with only a few hours of debate and no opportunity for an analysis and comparison of the other bills referred to.

I shall vote for this bill because I entirely approve its object. It is not likely it can receive consideration at this session by the Senate and become a law, but as it will be pending at the beginning of the next session it ought to result in a completed and well-considered act before this Congress shall close.

IOWA A LEADER IN THIS WORK.

I am proud, Mr. Speaker, of the fact that the great State I have the honor in part to represent early recognized the need of vocational education, especially for the farmer. Her great school, the Iowa State College, primarily devoted to such purpose, was a pioneer in this line, and has given the strongest impetus and the most distinguished leaders to this great work. It gave to the country such men as the present Secretary of Agriculture, Hon. James Wilson, the lamented Dr. Seaman A. Knapp, and many others. I am glad to insert as part of my remarks a letter referring to the legislation under consideration from Prof. Charles F. Curtis, now dean and director of the division of agriculture of that college.

IOWA STATE COLLEGE,
AGRICULTURE AND MECHANIC ARTS,
DIVISION OF AGRICULTURE,
Ames, Iowa, May 16, 1912.

Hon. H. M. TOWNER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have already written to the members of the Agricultural Committees in regard to the Lever extension bill. This bill has my hearty indorsement, but I have all along had the feeling that it does not go far enough to reach the real problem of vital importance to the educational and industrial interests of the United States, namely, vocational education and the training of teachers for such work. This is the most important problem that has been before Congress since the Morrill Act establishing the land-grant colleges. It is of even greater importance than that, because it makes for higher efficiency on the part of our people in preparation for work in agriculture, home economics, and the trades and industries. This is the next and logical step to follow the provision that has already been made for collegiate education along these lines and for experimental and research work pertaining to agriculture.

Extension work is only a part of this secondary educational movement. It will be of immediate and direct benefit to those engaged in production on the farms, but the real hope lies in the training and future efficiency of the boys and girls who are soon to bear the burden of industrial work. This can only be accomplished through the proper direction of the public-school work by Federal aid and a Federal policy, such as has been established in the land-grant colleges through the Federal appropriation for higher education. Provision for extension work, or even for vocational education in agriculture, will not fully meet the requirements. No nation ever became great or maintained a strong place in the commerce of the world by merely playing the part of a producer of raw materials. Education for the trades and industries is just as important as for agriculture.

The only objection I have heard urged against the immediate passage of the Page bill in the Senate and the Page-Wilson bill in the House is on the ground of economy pending the present political situation. I wish to call your attention to the appropriations made by Congress during the past 10 years, and the almost insignificant amount that has been appropriated for agriculture.

Annual appropriations made by Congress.

Year.	Total appropriation.	Appropriation for agriculture.	Per cent for agriculture.
1903	$486,439,306.68	$5,208,960.00	1.07
1904	464,846,770.57	5,978,160.00	1.28
1905	467,159,617.03	5,902,040.00	1.26
1906	489,241,777.30	6,882,640.00	1.40
1907	549,434,246.55	9,930,440.00	1.80
1908	555,739,446.78	9,447,290.00	1.70
1909	627,516,246.83	11,672,106.00	1.86
1910	648,191,676.26	12,995,036.00	2.004
1911	693,725,794.84	13,487,636.00	2.03
1912	634,549,561.40	16,900,016.00	2.66

The appropriations for agriculture during this period have ranged from 1.07 per cent in 1903 to 2.66 per cent in 1912. In view of this record, I do not believe that any Member of Congress can consistently hold that the amount of money carried by this bill, covering the whole field of industrial education and extension work, is a valid objection.

No more important measure has been presented for consideration by Congress during the present generation, and, viewed from the standpoint of politics alone, no more popular piece of legislation could be passed by Congress at the present time.

With high regard, I am,
Very truly, yours,
C. F. CURTIS.

AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. Speaker, there is no more important subject of legislation than the promotion of the agricultural interests of the United States. It is our largest industry, and the one which most intimately and vitally affects the lives and the happiness of our people. To its development should be brought the best thought, the greatest skill, and the highest scientific attainment. The day of empiric knowledge in this great field of human endeavor has passed. The requirements of an exacting era are making insistent and continually increasing demands on the productive resources of the Nation. It will be a double problem the farmers of this age must solve—to be able to meet these demands and to do so without sacrificing their material interests, their manhood and independence, or their rightful share of the benefits of a civilization they have done so much to establish.

CAN OUR FARMERS SUPPLY OUR FOOD?

In the first place, the farmers of the United States must be able to supply the food products for our already immense and rapidly increasing population. Within the lives of those now living our population will exceed 200,000,000. Not only are we increasing numerically, but individual demands are increasing. The per capita consumption of food products now largely exceeds that of even 30 years ago. There are many who believe our farmers will soon be unable to supply the Nation and that we had better arrange to obtain our food supplies elsewhere. The assertion and widespread belief that the farmers of this country are no longer able to furnish at reasonable prices our food supply carried the Canadian reciprocity act. The President has recently said:

> The food problem in the United States may in the near future become a serious one. * * * The total acreage of farming lands in the last 10 years has increased only 4 per cent while the population has increased 21 per cent. * * * During the last decade the productivity has increased 1 per cent per acre. * * * Only 150,000,000 more are capable of tillage either by irrigation, reclamation, or drainage.

Recently, at a meeting in Washington of one of the scientific societies, it was openly advocated that a national commission should be established to fix the prices of all food products so as to prevent further increase in the high cost of living. The demand for low-priced food products is imperative in the cities, and is general among those who purchase but do not produce.

It is easy of demonstration that the farmers of the United States can meet every possible demand for food supplies that the Nation may make upon them without calling for help to Canada, or Argentina, or Australia. Throughout our history we have produced an excess of food products. We have been exporters instead of importers. We have never had to call on other countries to feed our people. While it is true that our lands capable of profitable cultivation are now principally occupied or reduced to ownership, it is also true that not one-half of such lands are now tilled. While it is true that our surplus for export grows less, that is because cheaper lands and cheaper labor supply foreign demands.

The productive capacity of our lands now in cultivation has not been nearly attained. The average yield of wheat per acre is but 12 to 14 bushels. It can easily be doubled. The average yield of corn can be still more largely increased. The production of cattle, sheep, and swine is capable of almost indefinite increase. We can support a billion people instead of a hundred millions without calling for outside help.

EDUCATION NECESSARY.

It is because of these facts that education along these especial lines is of such vast importance, not only to the farmer but to all the people. Those who most carefully consider the subject believe that it is possible to secure such an intelligent adjustment of supply and demand that adequate food products can be secured and reasonabe prices obtained. It is not wise nor would it be permanently profitable for the farmers to exact exorbitant prices, if they could. Neither is it wise nor would it be permanently profitable for the consumers to demand that the farmer sell his products at ruinous prices.

There is not a material interest in the United States that will not suffer if the farmers suffer. On the other hand, every industry more easily flourishes when agriculture flourishes. It is especially true that general business, the professions, all branches of human endeavor find their opportunity for fullest development in a nation where agriculture is fostered and is prosperous. Conditions which bring and keep prosperity to the farmers are those which tend to the prosperity of all.

As Prof. Curtis has shown, the farmers of the United States have received little direct encouragement from the General Government. It will not only be an act of justice but a wise and prudent policy for the Nation to take a larger part in encouraging and a more immediate interest in developing the agricultural interests of the country. It is for these reasons that this bill and the others of like character referred to should receive the careful consideration of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio 10 minutes.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment and ask to have it pending, and ask that the Clerk may report it.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, these amendments are being offered, and I wish to inquire whether it would be in order to reserve points of order now or when they are considered? I wish to know whether it is necessary to reserve a point of order at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that these amendments are offered for information, to be considered as pending, and the point of order can be reserved and made when the matter is called up after general debate is concluded.

Mr. LEVER. To be on the safe side, Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, page 7, after the word "law," insert the following: "And he shall have authority to coordinate all the work contemplated in this act with the work of the United States Department of Agriculture."

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, the only objection I have heard from any quarter to this bill was as to the point whether or not it might interfere with the farm-management work now being carried on by the Department of Agriculture. I am frank to say that if I entertained the fears on that point which are entertained by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], I think I should be disposed to vote against the bill. It seems to me that that work, the farm-management work, that brings the scientific attainments in agriculture right to the door of the farmer, is of immense importance, and I should be very loth, indeed, to vote for any bill which I thought would interfere with it. I do not believe that this bill would interfere with it, but if there is any danger of it so doing, the amendment which I have offered will remove that danger.

As the Clerk read it, the amendment provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall have authority to coordinate all the work contemplated in this act with the work of the United States Department of Agriculture. It seems to me that that would do away with any danger of conflict between the work that is sought to be established in this bill and the work already provided for in the United States Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, I think that no subject which has engaged the attention of this House at this session is of more vital importance than the one now before us. As stated in the first paragraph of the bill, the purpose of the pending measure is to aid in diffusing among the people of the United States useful and practical information on the subjects relating to agriculture and home economics, and to encourage the application of the same.

This purpose is altogether commendable, and the contemplated legislation ought to pass with certain amendments, because it is a long step in the right direction. In the consideration of this subject it seems to me that it is proper to invite attention to the peculiar conditions now surrounding agriculture in this country.

When we make our Fourth of July speeches, and speeches at the county fairs, we are accustomed, and properly so, to talk about the wonderful resources and productivity of this country. We enlarge upon the fact, for example, that the corn crop of this country for a single year is worth a billion and a half of dollars, a sum so enormous that the product of the cornfields of this country for a single year, when converted into money, would pay all of the national debt, would pay for the Panama Canal, and still leave a few millions of dollars in spending money for the American farmer. Or, to put it in another way, if that corn were put into freight cars, it would make a line almost 20,000 miles long—the product of the American cornfields for a single year. Or take the wheat crop, for illustration. If you put that in freight cars, it will make six lines of freight cars reaching across this continent. That is the wheat crop for a single year. Our cotton crop is worth a billion dollars per year. Our hay crop is worth something like $700,000,000 per year and would fill a dozen freight trains each reaching from New York to the Golden Gate; or, taking another illustration, while it is a fact that the product of the poultry business in this country is almost double the product of our mines of silver and gold, and all these things indicate the marvelous productivity of American agriculture, yet we ought not to forget the fact that is set forth in a recent report by the Secretary of Agriculture, and that is, that one phase of all our too prevalent, vulgar, boastfulness would be cured if we but realized that Europe, without Russia, the granary of Europe, occupying but 45 per cent of our surface area, tills double the number of acres of wheat, rye, oats, barley, and potatoes that we till, and from that double area devoted to these five crops the farmers harvest four times the number of bushels that our farmers harvest; and in these five crops Europe produces more bushels per capita for their 300,000,000 of people than we do for our 90,000,000. During the past 30 years Europe has increased her acreage yield of these five crops 75 per cent, while we have increased ours but 8 per cent. Their increase is more than nine times as much as ours.

In that connection I desire to refer to a table showing these crop increases, and at this time I will ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting certain tables and other matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIS. For example, here is a table showing the increase in the yield of the five staple crops in the United States and Germany:

Increase in yield of five staple crops in Germany and the United States.

	Germany.		United States.		Increase.
	1878–1883	1909	1879	1909	Germany.	United States.	Germany.	United States.
	Bushels per acre.	Bushels per acre.	Bushels per acre.	Bushels per acre.	Bushels.	Bushels.	Per cent.	Per cent.
Rye	15.7	29.4	14.5	16.1	13.7	1.6	87.2	10.9
Wheat	19.2	30.5	13.8	15.8	11.3	2.0	58.8	14.2
Barley	24.5	39.4	24.0	24.3	14.9	.3	60.8	1.2
Oats	31.8	59.1	28.7	30.3	27.7	1.6	85.8	6.7
Potatoes	115.5	208.9	98.9	106.8	93.4	7.6	80.8	7.6

Let us take the production of rye, for example. In Germany, in the year 1878, the production of rye was 15 bushels per acre. In the year 1909 they had increased that production to 29 bushels per acre. In the United States, in the year 1879, our production of rye was 14 bushels per acre, and in 1909 we had increased our production only to 16.1 per acre. In other words, in that period in which Germany had increased her yield of rye per acre 13.7 bushels, we had increased ours only 1.6 bushels. Let us take wheat. In Germany, in 1878, the average yield of wheat per acre was 19 bushels. In 1909 it was 30 bushels per acre. In this country in 1879 the yield of wheat was 13.8 bushels per acre, and in 1909 we had increased it to only 15.8 bushels per acre. In other words, while Germany had increased her yield of wheat 11.3 bushels per acre, we had increased ours only 2 bushels per acre, and the same thing is shown relatively of the other crops—barley, oats, potatoes, and so forth. In other words, the fact is that through improved methods of agriculture Europe, which we are accustomed to denominate as old and worn out, has been increasing its agricultural production at an amazing rate, and, going clear beyond this country in the rate of increase.

Now, coupled with that fact there is another fact we must not lose sight of, and a very important one and one which I think well worth dwelling upon. That is the amazing drift of population to the city, and before I take up that matter I want to refer to some other facts——

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. Does not the gentleman think that the different methods, the difference in the production in Germany and other European countries as compared with our country, are largely due to the difference in the labor conditions? Does not the gentleman know the American farmer, while being intelligent in his profession, is operating largely upon relatively cheap land and relatively far from a labor supply, and he must depend upon casual labor conditions and compete with labor conditions of the city, where work is generally steady and regular, and the opportunity of the American farmer to get good labor makes it harder for him to produce and hampers him——

Mr. WILLIS. Undoubtedly there is merit in the suggestion made by the gentleman from Missouri, but it does not seem to me that the reason given is sufficient to account for the great difference in comparative agricultural production in this country and in Germany. These startling facts so true of the whole country are true to some extent of the great State of Ohio, which I have the honor in part to represent. Relatively, Ohio is producing less fruit, less grain, less meat than a dozen years ago, and yet has almost 1,000,000 more people to feed now than then. Some counties show a gradual decrease in the average crop yield, and within the State of Ohio are thousands of acres of worn-out and abandoned farm lands. Our average yield of wheat per acre is 14 bushels; corn, 38 bushels; oats, 32 bushels; and hay, 1 ton. It is perfectly apparent that these yields are far below what they ought to be and what they can be and will be under a system of scientific agriculture. The average product of the Ohio dairy cow is 150 pounds of butter fat annually. Feeding and proper care would easily increase this product to 200 pounds.

The time has come when we must realize that farming to be successful must be carried on scientifically. And if we are to feel our increasing millions and to maintain the amazing prosperity of this Republic we must look to it and see that agriculture is carried on in this country according to the best methods.

Coupled with this comparatively small increase of agricultural production, and in some cases a positive decrease, is the further fact that under our modern system of transportation and distribution the rural producer gets only a comparatively small share of the selling price of his product. As is shown in a table which I shall insert here and which is carefully prepared from statistics collected by the Department of Agriculture, the producer's share in per cent in the price of milk is only 50.

Commodity.	Unit of sale.	Producer's share.
		Per cent.
Milk	Quart	50
Butter	Pound	87
Poultry	do	50
Eggs	Dozen	69
Cabbage	Head	48
Do	Pound	65
Celery	Bunch	60
Apples	Bushel	56
Do	Barrel	66
Strawberries	Quart	49
Do	Crate	76
Onions	Peck	28
Do	Barrel	58
Oranges	Dozen	20
Do	Box	50
Oats	Bushel	74
Melons	Pound	50
Parsnips	Bunch	60
Potatoes	Bushel	59
String beans	Barrel	80
Sweet potatoes	do	61
Turnips	Bunch	60
Watermelons	Each	34

That is to say, the man who runs the dairy farm, furnishes the cow, cares for her, feeds her, and attends to the milking, gets but 50 per cent of what is paid for the milk by the ultimate consumer. In case of poultry the farmer's wife who raises the chickens gets but 50 cents out of every dollar that is paid for them by the consumer. The producer of onions gets only 28 per cent of the consumer's price. The producer of oranges gets only 20 per cent. The producer of cabbage gets only 48 per cent of the price paid by the consumer. The producer of potatoes gets only $59 out of every $100 paid by the consumer. The man who raises the watermelon gets only 34 per cent of the price to the consumer. In other words, with the agricultural production increasing only slowly and in some cases absolutely decreasing, with only a small share of the consumer's price going to the producer, it is very apparent why the cost of living is high. We see clearly two of the reasons that enter into this great problem. Of course, there are other factors, which it is not our purpose here to discuss.

What are the remedies? First, an improved system of transportation and distribution; second, a better system of agricultural production. An immediate necessity for relief in both of these suggested directions is made apparent from an examination of the statistics prepared by the Census Bureau relative to the drift of population to the cities and the comparative depopulation of the agricultural districts. For example, in the State of Ohio, as shown by the bulletin issued by the Bureau of the Census, there are 39 counties that have decreased in population during the last decade, the rate of decrease ranging from one-tenth of 1 per cent in Lawrence County to 17.4 per cent in Paulding County. The decrease in numbers was from 46 in Lawrence County to 5,225 in Wood County. In Ohio, in 1890, 41 per cent only of the total population lived in cities. In 1900 it had increased to 48 per cent and in 1910 it had increased to 55.9 per cent. In 1890, 59 per cent of the total population lived in the country; in 1900 it was only 51 per cent and in 1910 it had decreased to 44 per cent. The urban population is increasing and the rural population is decreasing. There are in the State of Ohio 62 counties out of 88 in the whole State in which the rural population decreased, but there are only 8 in which there was a decrease of urban population.

A study of the map in this bulletin on the population of Ohio shows the startling fact that all through the great agricultural regions of that rich State the population has decreased relatively in the past 10 years. In some cases there has been a steady decrease for 20 and even 30 years. The same general truth is illustrated in another census bulletin which I have before me showing population in the United States. In this bulletin the fact is brought out that there are 252 counties in the United States that have a smaller population than 30 years ago, and practically all of the 252 are agricultural counties. The census bulletin classifies as urban population all that residing in cities and other incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more. I present here a table showing the population of continental United States and the per cent distribution as between urban and rural population.

Class.	Population of continental United States.
	1910	1900	1890	1880
Total	91,972,266	75,994,575	62,947,714	50,155,783
Urban	42,623,383	30,797,185	22,720,223	14,772,438
Rural	49,348,883	45,197,390	40,227,491	35,383,345
	Per cent distribution.
Total	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0
Urban	46.3	40.5	36.1	29.5
Rural	53.7	59.5	63.9	70.5

According to this table, in 1880, 70 per cent of our people lived in the country; in 1890 only 63 per cent; in 1900, 59 per cent; and in 1910, 53 per cent. In 1880 only 14,000,000 of our people lived in cities; in 1890 there were 22,000,000; in 1900, 30,000,000; and in 1910, 42,000,000. Our people are leaving the country and drifting to the city, and we may just as well face the fact and legislate accordingly.

From the hearings before the Senate committee on the Page vocational educational bill, it is shown that for a hundred years in this country we have been taking the boys and the girls away from the farm and bringing them into the cities. Fifteen or 25 years ago it used to be the practice for one or two boys or one or two girls from a large family to go to the city. Now the farmer sells the farm, and the whole family moves there, and he is oftentimes the best farmer in the community. These cold facts are startling and amazing, and are worthy of the most serious consideration by all those who are interested in our country's welfare.

In the New England division of our country more than four-fifths of the population, in 1910, lived in urban territory, as set forth in the report by the Census Bureau. In the Atlantic division the urban population consisted of more than seven-tenths of the total. The proportion for the State of New York was very nearly four-fifths. In the east, north, central, and Pacific divisions the urban territory contained more than one-half the total population in 1910.

In each of the nine geographic divisions the proportion of the population living in urban communities was larger in 1910 than in 1900 and larger in 1900 than in 1890. The increase from 1900 to 1910 in urban and rural population for the United States is shown in the following table from the census bulletin referred to before:

Class.	Population in—		Increase, 1900-1910.
	1910	1900	Number.	Per cent.
Urban territory in 1910	42,623,383	31,609,645	11,013,738	34.8
Rural territory in 1910	49,348,883	44,384,930	4,963,953	11.2
Total population	91,972,266	75,994,575	15,977,691	21.0

The increase for the population in urban areas was over three times that of the population living in rural territory. Of the total increase in the population of continental United States during the past decade seven-tenths was in urban territory and only three-tenths in rural territory. These startling conditions demand a remedy, and a remedy is at least indicated by this bill and by the work which has heretofore been done by the Farm Management Bureau and other bureaus in the Department of Agriculture. In the report of the committee accompanying this bill a quotation is made from a recent address by the President, in Kansas City, in which he said:

The welfare of the people is so dependent on improved agricultural conditions that it seems wise to use the welfare clause of the Constitution to authorize the expenditure of money for improvement in agricultural education and leave to the States and private enterprise general and other vocational education. The attitude of the Government in all this matter must be merely advisory.

It is now proposed to organize a force of 3,000 men, one to every county in the United States, who will conduct experiments within the county for the edification and education of the present farmers and of the young embryo farmers who are being educated. It is proposed that these men shall be partly paid by the county, partly by the State, and partly by the Federal Government; and it is hoped that the actual demonstration on the farms in the county—not agricultural stations or schools somewhere in the State, but in the county itself—shall bring home to the farmers what is possible to do with the very soil that they themselves are engaged upon.

This is a wise and statesmanlike suggestion and in harmony with the general purposes of the pending bill. It is quite apparent with our rapidly increasing population and the comparatively small increase in our agricultural production that the time is close at hand when if there is not more efficient work done on the farm under scientific management the country at large is bound to suffer.

At the same time that our population has increased 20 per cent the farm acreage has increased only 4 per cent. If our population shall increase as rapidly in the next 50 years as it has heretofore, this country will have a population of upward of 200,000,000 people. In order to keep this vast population upon the high standard of living to which American citizens are accustomed and with the maintenance of which we are all concerned, the interest of our people in farm work must be increased and better methods must be used everywhere. The United States Department of Agriculture, working through its various bureaus, especially through the Bureau of Farm Management, blazes the way. No appropriation made by the Government brings so large returns as does the appropriation which goes to the Department of Agriculture. None of that money is more productively expended than that which is used for the farm-management work. The funds so expended are vastly more beneficial to all our people than are ambitious foreign policies and huge navies.

It is hoped and believed that this bill if enacted into law will not interfere with farm-management work, but on the contrary will be carried on in coordination with it.

The problem of the distribution of our population and the proper increase in our agricultural production is one of the mightiest that can possibly concern us, and we can make no mistake in legislation for the encouragement of agriculture. To the end that the life of the American farmer may be made more attractive and profitable and that more of our people may be encouraged to live in the country, where the good Lord intended them to live, and thereby aid in the solution of this mighty national problem, let us pass this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all who desire to extend their remarks on this bill may have five legislative days within which to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That request has been submitted, that all who speak upon this question have five legislative days to extend their remarks upon this bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill because it proposes that this Government of ours shall not only find the young men and women of the country, but "help them to find themselves." It proposes that the State shall go into the business of making the future citizens of the Republic useful to a greater degree than heretofore. I have no other purpose than to vote for this bill, but before doing so I should like to see it very much enlarged in its scope and purpose. I believe in vocational training. I would not limit the Federal aid that we are proposing to give the several States to agricultural and home economics. I would embrace within its provisions the mechanic arts. The great commercial countries of the world that enter into competition with us are teaching their young men how to do mechanical and technical work, and turning them from the Government shop into the factories to meet us with the skill of their acquirements in the markets of the world. Our purpose in the giving of Federal aid ought not to be to advance one line of employment to a higher plane, but to move the great mass of our citizens to a sphere of greater usefulness and efficiency. I believe fully in the Democratic platform of vocational training for the youth of the country. The interdependency of all the agencies in the commerce of the country go to make up the splendid whole. I would extend with an impartial hand to every young man and woman, through proper educational agencies, the assistance that would help us to advance with that confidence we now have in our ability to compete with our brains and our energy in the markets everywhere. The Government should get close to the boys and girls and teach them to know, more forcibly than ever before, that this great force called organized society has emergency use for these units in the social structure. I do not underestimate the necessity for and value of scientific knowledge in the pursuit of agriculture, but agriculture is only one of the elements of our commerce.

Men and women interested in social problems may well inquire what we are to do with the multiplied thousands of young men and women who are flocking to the cities and centers of population of the country, where employment is becoming harder and more difficult to find every day.

Voicing the demand that is now becoming insistent for the special training of the youth for such lines of employment as the country needs and as a partial solution of the social problem confronting us, I quote from the recent report of the president of the board of education of the city of Chicago, made for the year ended June 30, 1912, as follows:

VOCATIONAL AND CONTINUATION SCHOOLS.

The attention of the educators of the country is now centered on the question of necessary provision for the children of our schools who pass the legal compulsory age limit without graduation. Every year thousands of these children are leaving school from the fourth to the eighth grades, inclusive, with little or no preparation for the work which the industrial interests can offer to persons of immature age and experience. The one dominating purpose of both the child and the parent is "to find a job," regardless of the lack of adaptability of the child to the particular work which he finds to do. It is readily seen that the problem of the child in his unguided effort to secure employment is a serious one, and the hope of permanency in the position which he may attempt to fill is based wholly on the laws of chance. As an outgrowth of the inadequate facilities which our schools can offer to these young people, we have the example of many boys without employment who are roaming the streets, forming habits of idleness and consequent immorality. The duty of the public toward these children has long been a matter of discussion, and the evidence of their right and needs are so apparent as to carry the question beyond the necessity for further argument.

The last census report, just out, shows that the urban population in the last decade increased 34.9 per cent, while the rural population increased only 11.2 per cent. The great drift is to the cities of the country, and not to the farm. The problem for the Nation to solve is how to find employment for the thousands of young men and women who must earn a living either in mechanical, professional, or clerical work. Industry is the greatest enemy of crime and immorality. The man or woman who is constantly employed not only is taken out of the conditions that foster crime, but becomes interested in the success of business and the prosperity of the country. The changed requirements in commercial lines not only require more labor, but better and more efficient labor. Always that labor that is most intelligent is most profitable to its employer. That knowledge need not be, either, especially along the line of the employment. A wide general knowledge covering all subjects possible that gives a fund of general information benefits the employee in his general work. This intelligence reenforced by special knowledge to enable him to do certain work becomes especially valuable not only to the employer, but it becomes valuable to the wage earner, because his ability brings him far greater returns. Now, what is the condition of our student population with reference to either vocational or general scholastic training as a basis for the work of the future?

Dr. Claxton, United States Commissioner of Education, states that 92.93 per cent of all the children entering the public schools never get beyond the eighth grade. Only 5.35 per cent ever get into the high school and only 1.71 per cent reach the college and university. The fact might further be stated that only this 1.71 per cent ever have any special training for their future work. The other 98 per cent go out into the world asking employment in lines they have scant qualifications for. I am not concerned about the high-school and college portion, the 7 per cent of the school population—they can take care of themselves in the teaching and professional work of the country. It is the 93 per cent that I am interested in—the class from which are recruited the unemployed, the criminal classes, and the immoral recruits in the social fabric, the men and women without a job who should interest and receive our attention. In the swift competition for wages, places, and employment the uneducated girl or boy does not find the gates open to them. They lack that skill to do the work and do it quickly that the employer is looking for when he employs help. This age, with its enterprise and demand for swift result, does not have any time for the boy nowadays to learn a trade at the expense and time of the employer. That period has passed. The man who wants to work must come with his tools and know how to use them to the very best advantage of the employer or there is no job open for him. The employer must have that kind of help, for he must reduce the cost and increase the volume of his output so that he can meet competition wherever it exists, and to do this he must have skilled labor.

We ought not only to support this bill that provides for better industrial education of the girl and boy, but we ought to support it from a moral and commercial standpoint. Whenever you persuade a boy to earn a living, as a rule, you make a moral man of him and commercially he succeeds. All trades and commercial lines of business and agricultural pursuits are demanding more and better labor—more and better mechanical equipment—increasing the necessity for ability to operate the business. The energy and strenuousness of our industrial life force us to meet the demands of the commercial age. The upward trend, in not only our own country but in every country, makes it a necessity for us to educate the boys and girls, especially for the business they desire to be employed in. Quickness of communication, rapid transportation of merchandise, facilities for information, all these elements of business make the demand strong for the best skilled labor constantly attainable. We want to set on fire the latent capabilities of every boy and girl and make him feel that he is a factor in this mighty rush of progress with which we are filling the world. We can not afford to repress a great force in our industrial life by failing to invite, through special education, the latent powers of the girl and boy from its confines and let it do its best. There is not a State in the Union but that needs these vocational schools that will point as a guideboard to the successful highway for the girls and boys to travel in to success. We want the masses of our citizenship to succeed. That is the perfection of government—to make the citizen self-supporting and happy; and the way to do it is to help him who wants to help himself. Our unlimited resources are welcoming the industrious on every hand to create the wealth for this mighty Nation and share in the fruits of industry and economy. Capital ought to invite this investment to their aid as an auxiliary force in accumulation of larger and larger dividends. Give us the trained intellect of this young Nation of young boys and girls that they may put their brains into the business in which they are employed, and we will not only double our exports of manufactured products but increase immeasurably the comfort and happiness of our own people.

There are other angles of viewpoint to this question. We have spent millions and millions of Federal money in our coast cities, in fortification, shipyards, rivers and harbors, resulting, of course, in benefit to the whole people. All parts of the country have cheerfully given to these great national measures. Why not distribute some of this Federal help to the interior of the country in the shape of vocational schools where the hundreds and thousands of growing youth can have the practical benefits of the expenditure. We owe it to the laboring man, the man on a small salary, with children to whom he can not give the advantages that his more fortunate neighbors can, to place his children on an equality in the start for the world's work that they shall have to engage in. We want to send back to the farm the girls and boys with a practical and experimental education that they may not only know how to retain the productivity and fertility of the soil, but that they may know how to produce more and get quicker and better returns for their labor.

We are landing in this country, approximately, 100,000 foreigners a month, many of them desirable citizens. Many of them, though, not in sympathy with our institutions. It must be the business of this great country to assimilate them into this Government, and instead of making their coming a menace to our liberties to make them a factor in good government. A great vicious force, set against capital and industry individually, must be wrought into the citizenship by teaching them that industry and good morals and an obedience to law are the first elements of personal liberty and free government.

It has been said that the expense will be great. No man counts the expense or the amount of an investment so long as the investment brings a good return. That is all we are interested in. No one doubts that the dividend will be paid. The great growth in industrial training and the results show whether there is a demand for this kind of instruction.

There is another feature of this bill that I like. That is the partnership feature in it. It says to the State it will go into company with you and if you will contribute so much for the industrial education of your boys and girls the Federal Government will give as much as you do for the purpose. The Government wants to unite with the State in the perfection of her citizenship. I do not agree entirely with the administrative features of this bill, but I do most heartily agree with its ultimate purpose.

Mr. LEVER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I shall vote for this bill or not. I hope I may, but I shall not do so unless I am satisfied that it will not interfere with or handicap or circumscribe the activities of the bureau in the Department of Agriculture recently presided over by Dr. Knapp. I think Dr. Knapp was one of the greatest men, measured by deeds done, that we have had in this country for many years. The people throughout the South, our farmers and farmers' organizations, are raising a fund in that country to erect a monument to the memory of Dr. Knapp as a tribute to the great work he did in this farm demonstration and cooperative work. I hope that if the bill as drawn now can be construed to limit the activities of that bureau or to transfer from the department to the State the functions that are now performed in that particular bureau, that the bill will be amended so as to make that construction impossible. I understand one of the purposes of the bill was to curtail the activities of that bureau. Now, if that is true, it is my personal intention to vote against it, because I think it is too valuable a work to be interfered with in any possible way.

Mr. LEVER. I will yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I have no intention of trying to elaborate on what I have suggested. I simply wanted this opportunity to express that view and to get the assurance of the gentleman from South Carolina—for whose opinion I have the greatest respect, because I know there is no man in this country who is more deeply interested in all that makes for the betterment of the farmer than he—that this bill will not cripple the activities of that particular bureau.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi frankly—and I wish I had time to discuss it—as I said to the gentlemen from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] awhile ago, that in the course of time, 10 years it may be—and it is bound to be that long; it may be 20 years—the work in a measure will be transferred from the department to the agricultural colleges.

I yield to my colleague from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN].

Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, having been reared upon a farm, I can never be weaned from the country people and am glad to embrace every opportunity to aid in the advancement and betterment of people engaged in agricultural pursuits of our entire country.

It is not generally known by the Members of this House what a long, hard fight was made to elevate the Department of Agriculture to the position it now occupies—second to none in importance in this Government.

My father, then a Member of this House, made the first report from the Committee on Agriculture, January 21, 1884, to the House to provide for the establishment of the Department of Agriculture and for the appointment of a Secretary thereof. The act creating the Department of Agriculture became a law February 9, 1889, and President Cleveland appointed Norman J. Colman the first Secretary of Agriculture February 11, 1889.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States should have the ready and unanimous support of Congress.

In agriculture, as in charity, "there is a giving that enricheth." The soil is a storehouse in which are locked the secrets of nature, and science carries the key. By national aid and by effort of the States the door of opportunity in agriculture is being opened, but science alone can not carry its researches to the people. This is the part of the understudy, the experimenter, and it is the purpose of this bill.

Our fathers knew that newly cleared lands were more productive than lands planted continuously to a single crop, but they did not know the secret of restoration, and so they wore out their old fields, abandoned them, and cleared new lands. With a scattered population and millions of acres of land, fresh from the hand of nature, this country has long since outstripped all others in the aggregate of production. But our natural advantages of soil are waning, our population is increasing rapidly, and we now find ourselves face to face with the prospect of being forced into foreign markets to buy much of our food supply.

Twenty-five years ago, the agriculture of Belgium was in a deplorable condition. The remedy was found in extension work, such as is proposed in this bill. As a direct result of demonstration work in Belgium, between the years 1885, when demonstration work was introduced, and 1910, the average yield of wheat per acre increased 14.01 bushels; rye, 12.73 bushels; oats, 31.69 bushels; and barley, 19.32 bushels. Nearly all European countries lead this country in production per acre averaged, a fact that is explained by the more intensive methods of farming by the foreigner. In Germany and Holland large families subsist on the products of 2 to 4 acres of ground, while here 25 acres make but a small farm. The foreigner has been driven to intensive methods by the lash of necessity. This country has been living on the prodigality of nature.

The United States spends less for farm-extension work, in proportion to its population and agricultural area, than any European country with the possible exception of Spain. Liberal as we may think this Government has been in promoting agriculture, less than 1 per cent of its annual appropriations have been used for this purpose. And yet, for many years to come, agriculture must of necessity be the chief source of national wealth.

Agriculture in the United States is still in its infancy, and with the touch of applied science can be made to double production many times. Nearly all the States, realizing this, have established agricultural colleges which are teaching the science of agriculture. The deductions of the scientist had to be tried out in experiments, and in this the Government has aided by passing the Hatch Act, contributing to the maintenance of experiment stations. The next logical step was to carry the experiments to the people, a work begun under Dr. Knapp in 1904, and which this bill is intended to amplify.

One scientific farmer in a neighborhood will bring up the standard of farming in the entire community. At first his methods are scouted, then watched, and finally adopted. All of us have seen this result, and it demonstrates in a homely way the wisdom of extension work. There should be located a farm demonstration agent in every county of the United States, about 3,000 in all. These men should give immediate supervision to one or more farms in each county and should coordinate with all adjoining farmers, so that from these centers would radiate influences that would revolutionize farming. Such work has already been begun on a small scale and results have been amazing.

Just prior to the Civil War all the property of this country was assessed at $12,000,000,000, and the South owned 44 per cent of this. It is estimated that the Civil War destroyed, directly and indirectly, more than $5,000,000,000 worth of property in the South. Prior to the war South Carolina was $68,000,000 richer than Rhode Island and New Jersey combined. After the war so great was the reduction of values in the South that Massachusetts alone returned more than half as much property as all the Southern States combined. Stripped of her wealth, bereft of much of the flower of her manhood, the task of recuperating the agriculture of that section would have staggered and perhaps crushed any other people on earth. How well she has acquitted herself of the task let the records say.

Marvelous as has been the agricultural recuperation of the South, the real work of production is just begun. Drake's 255 bushels of corn per acre and the boy Jerry Moore's prize acre of 228¼ bushels, both raised on South Carolina lands, only demonstrate what may be done in the South. We need but to put a Drake, a Moore, or a Williamson in every township of the South, and this country can feed the world. The South Atlantic and Gulf States, by reason of the long growing season, abundant rainfall, favorable climatic conditions, and varying soils of varying altitudes, are the natural agricultural States of the Union, and the products of these States constitute the Government's largest commercial asset. Nowhere on the earth's surface is there a large area of land so favored by points of advantage for farming and so signally free of disadvantages as the Gulf and South Atlantic States. Uncle Sam has his hog pasture and his cattle pasture and his wheat and corn patches that he can depend on sometimes, but his real farm, his money crops, and his garden spots lie in the Atlantic and Gulf States. Until recently this part of his possessions has been neglected—left to work out its own salvation.

To illustrate the leavening effects of demonstration work, I desire, in brief, to cite the history of the work in South Carolina, for the reason that I am more familiar with this.

About 25 years ago Clemson Agricultural College, the greatest agricultural college in the Southern States, was established in South Carolina. At that time more than 75 per cent of the lands of the State were under mortgage; farmers were discouraged, and many abandoned their farms and moved into small towns. In time an experiment station was established in connection with the college. The station took up the analysis and adaptability of soils while the college was educating hundreds of boys in agriculture. For 10 years the work of the college and station was scarcely perceptible; it was preparatory work. Then extension work was introduced on a small scale, and good results were immediate. In 1904 Dr. S. A. Knapp came into the State, and working with and through the college amplified and enlarged the extension work of the college. As a result of the small amount of extension work done agriculture has improved more than 33 per cent; and during the year 1911 the corn yield in South Carolina was double the average yield for the 10 years previous, and yet the production of all other crops was greatly in excess of previous years.

There is a large area of land in South Carolina between Columbia and Charleston that has been considered worthless. The Southern Railway deeded 300 acres of the worst of this land to Clemson College, conditioned that the college establish an experiment station on it. Soil experts of the college made analysis of the soil and found that it was rich in all or nearly all the requirements for plant food, but that these properties were inactive because the section was submerged in water. Drainage then was the solution, and to this the college directed its energies. Prior to the college taking over the land it would not make a pound of cotton or a peck of corn to the acre. Now, under the skilled hand of the scientist, it is yielding crops that would rival the crops of the Nile. Corn, cotton, vegetables, grasses, all grow to perfection on the station, and this demonstration alone will likely be developed into one of the richest producing areas of the State. The station is located about 20 miles above Charleston on the Southern Railroad, and already scientific agriculturalists and truck men are making preparation to settle near by.

Clemson College has under way still another station, and, I am informed, contemplates still a fourth. These will each be located in sections of varying soils and altitudes, and will practically cover conditions over the entire State. If other States will follow South Carolina's lead, and the National Government will carry the work of the stations and colleges to the people, the problem of rural emigration will have been solved. Give farming an equal chance with other vocations, demonstrate the profit in it, and the farmer will stick.

Conditions as regards rural advantages have very much improved in South Carolina in the last decade, though in many sections of the State there is great room for improvement still. In my district practically every section is connected by telephone. The mail is carried to the door of almost every man. Trolley lines are being built, connecting country and town. Many farmers have their own electric lights and waterworks and travel in automobiles. These are the immediate results of improved methods of farming, and the State is not yet even in the morning of its development. Though we hold the world's record for the production of corn per single acre and the championship for the production of cotton in proportion to area; though we grow apples in the mountains, peaches and plums in the midland, vegetables on the coastal lands, and field crops everywhere; and though we grow all these things in perfection, we need the assistance of the National Government to make the best conditions general and to carry development to the door of every man. Every dollar spent in this way will, in time, be returned to the wealth of the Nation a hundredfold. Agriculture can be restored, in point of preference as a vocation, to its proper station; the Nation, already the richest in the world, can double its assets; and our people will become more and more content as agriculture becomes more and more prominent in our industrial policy. Profitable farming spells back to the farm. Back to the farm spells relief for the congestion of unemployed in our cities, and a consequent healthy public sentiment.

Though South Carolina is the second cotton manufacturing State in the Union, and hundreds of thousands of horsepower waterpower are yet unharnessed, manufacturing is normally a secondary industry with our people. Opportunities for manufacturing were so great as to hasten prematurely our manufacturing period, and this, considering our small white population from which the manufacturer had to draw, seriously crippled agriculture.

Now, with improved methods of farming, the exodus has again set in toward the country, and the two great industries, farming and agriculture, are working hand in hand for the certain preeminence of our State.

We are on our feet; we are working for the prosperity of the Nation; we beckon to our sister States to follow. Give us and our sister States a helping hand and the achievement of the past will not even foreshadow the future wealth of this Nation. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have the following amendment read and remain pending until the proper time.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after the word "to," in line 13, page 2, the following: "Students in graded public schools in districts of not less than 25 square miles in area and to other," so that section 2 when so amended shall read as follows, to wit:

"SEC. 2. That it shall be the object and duty of said agricultural extension departments to give instruction and practical demonstrations in agriculture and home economics to students in graded public schools in districts of not less than 25 square miles in area and to other persons not resident in said colleges in the several communities, as may be provided by the States accepting the provisions of this act, and to convey and impart to such persons information on said subjects through field demonstrations, publications, and otherwise."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa reserves a point of order on the proposed amendment. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] is recognized.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, as indicated by the amendment which I offered, I believe this bill should be amended, and I believe it can be improved by the amendment which I offer. However, if the amendment which I shall offer be not adopted, I shall then support the bill as it has been presented by the committee.

Mr. Speaker, I regard this in many respects the most important bill that has been before this House during this long session of Congress. I do not think that we as representatives of the people of the United States really comprehend the importance of this subject. In my judgment, if something is not done to encourage the agricultural interests of this country, in the near future many great evils will overtake all classes.

In some remarks which I made here a few weeks ago on this very bill, when another bill was under consideration, I said that there were four propositions which I considered self-evident: First, that agriculture should grow as rapidly as our population; second, that the production of food products should also increase as rapidly as our population; third, that our rural population should increase as rapidly as our urban population; and fourth, that agriculture should grow as rapidly as other important fundamental industries of our country. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the statistics gathered by the Census Bureau in 1910 demonstrate that not one of these propositions is true. Agriculture is not growing as rapidly as our population. From 1900 to 1910 the population of this country increased 21 per cent, the number of our farms increased 5 per cent, the amount of our farm land increased 7 per cent, the amount of our improved land increased 15 per cent, showing that the growth of agriculture is not keeping pace with our population. Second, the production of food products is not increasing as rapidly as our population. Our population increased 21 per cent. The acreage devoted to the production of cereals in this country, between 1900 and 1910, increased but 7 per cent, and the production of cereals increased but 1.7 per cent. Now, to my mind, it is alarming that in this great country our population is increasing in a decade 21 per cent, and our cereals, which constitute largely our food products, are increasing but 1.7 per cent. The rural population is not increasing as rapidly as our urban population. As has been stated here this afternoon, from 1900 to 1910 the urban population increased 34 per cent and a fraction and the rural population increased but 11 per cent. Thirty years ago 70 per cent of our population was in the rural districts. To-day not exceeding 45 per cent of our population is in the rural districts. Ten per cent of the entire population of the United States is in three of our great cities. Twenty-five per cent of our entire population is in cities containing 100,000 or more of population. In some way we must arrest this flow of population from the country to the city. In some way agriculture must increase as rapidly as the population. In some way the production of food products must be made to increase as rapidly as the growth of our population. There has been in recent years much discussion about the high cost of living. To my mind, Mr. Speaker, the figures which I have quoted here in my few remarks explain a large part of that condition.

Now then, I believe that this bill should be amended in accordance with the amendment which I have presented, in order that the instruction which is given by virtue of this appropriation shall go to the rural graded schools, and when I have an opportunity I hope to discuss that part of the subject. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have become very much interested in this bill because it carries forward a work that has been in progress for the last six or seven years, a work that is going to accomplish in practical results more than has ever been accomplished before since the Agriculture Department has been organized.

I suppose the question of the increased efficiency in the science of agriculture would not arise to as great an extent in the State from which I come as it would in some other States. I do not think I need be accused of exaggeration when I say that there is perhaps no State in the Union that stands as high in agriculture, in the broad and systematic development of that science, as the State of Iowa. [Applause.] The soil and climate of Iowa conduce to the raising of immense crops. The farmers out there are prosperous. There is not any question about a famine in that State. And yet I find that the statistics show that the progress in agriculture in my State has not been as rapid as it has been in foreign countries and in some other States of this Union.

The fact of the matter is, that the pioneers who went to such States as Iowa and settled there and developed that country went there chiefly to found homes. For years farming has been simply a means of securing a livelihood only. In recent years, however, we have come to recognize the fact that farming is a business proposition. In other words, it is not going to be a question in the future of securing a fair price for farm products, but the problem is going to be to raise enough of farm products to supply the demand.

And so I say that this bill is along the right lines. It is going to bring the technical knowledge, the actual developments of science, right down to the door of the American farmer, and I want to assure the Members of this House that this so-called question of book farming is not the bugaboo that it once was among the farmers. Recently I had reason to go out to a certain farming locality in my district, and I found there a discussion going on among farmers about raising enough money to secure the services of one of these farm experts to come among them and inaugurate their demonstration work. I was interested in the number of farmers who had gathered to discuss that proposition, and I was surprised to find that the farmers are vitally interested in this proposition. I was surprised to find the amount of interest that had been stirred up already among the farmers of my State with reference to the developments in the Department of Agriculture. And so I say that this bill is going to help to bring this technical information to the door of the American farmer. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PEPPER. Can I have a little more time?

Mr. LEVER. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HAUGEN. And I yield two minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. PEPPER. Now, if I thought, with other gentlemen, that this enactment would interfere with the crop demonstration work that is now being conducted by the Department of Agriculture, I would certainly be disposed to criticize this bill. But gentlemen know that to-day the Agricultural Department is cooperating with the agricultural colleges of this country in the very kind of work proposed by this bill. The plan of Dr. Spillman is to have a State leader in every State, half of whose salary is to be paid by the General Government and half by the agricultural college of that State, for the purpose of general supervision of the experts in the employ of the counties, and I can not see how there can be any lack of harmony between the purposes of this bill and the general plans of the department.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. PEPPER. I do.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Do I understand from the gentleman's argument that there is to be a duplication of this cooperative work?

Mr. PEPPER. I do not believe so.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. In other words, that the Agricultural Department will carry on this work as it has been carried on heretofore, and in addition to that the States of the Union will engage in it?

Mr. PEPPER. I do not believe that will happen, for the reason that you will find that in every State where an agricultural college is in existence the men connected with it in every capacity—the professors and the instructors—are insisting upon a thorough cooperation with the department at Washington, so that there is not any possibility of conflict.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Do they have cooperation now? If so, what is the necessity of spending this extra $3,000,000 a year?

Mr. PEPPER. The necessity is just this, as I look at it: Under the present agricultural bill, to illustrate, there are three counties in the State of Iowa that are going to have the benefit of the appropriation carried in the bill. Every county in the State of Iowa would have the benefit under this bill. I believe that there can be a more scientific handling of the money. It is all the same money. It comes out of the Federal Treasury, whether you appropriate it in the agricultural bill or whether you carry it in this bill. It is a Federal fund. I believe the plan can be handled better by having it enacted into law in the form of a definite policy of this Government, and carry the extension work into every county in the United States and bring to the farmer the actual technical knowledge gathered by the experts and by the men who have given years of study to this subject, who will bring it to their doors.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. What basis have you for the belief that the passage of this bill will not interfere with the demonstration work such as is now being conducted by the department?

Mr. PEPPER. Nobody has pointed out how it will interfere, and therefore in the absence of any information of any kind showing why it will interfere I assume, I think quite naturally, that it will not interfere.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit me there?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. The report of the committee points out where it will interfere.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Does not the gentleman know that the money to be used in the South is solely to combat the ravages of the boll weevil.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I know that originally the demonstration cooperative work in the South started as the result of the boll weevil, but it has far outgrown that.

Mr. LEVER. But they have made it under that pretense.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The expenditure of the money is not permitted except for the purpose of meeting the ravages of the boll weevil. Is not that true?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. The boll weevil in some respects was a very unfortunate business.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. No; I think it was a fortunate business.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. But in another way it has served a very useful purpose.

Mr. PEPPER. I want to say to the gentleman that, so far as I am concerned, I believe the disposition of the amount of money that is contemplated in this work should be fixed by law, rather than by a policy of the Agricultural Department. Therefore I am in favor of whatever policy Congress adopts being put into law, saying exactly how we want this money expended.

Gentlemen opposed to this bill can not hope to hide behind mere technicalities. If you are opposed to the proposition, you should come out in the open and say so. So far as I am concerned, I believe in giving every aid possible to the American farmer. He and the work that he does forms the bulwark of our national prosperity. If the Government can assist him in solving the many problems constantly arising, we owe it to him and to the people generally to do so.

We hear these days a good deal about "conservation of our national resources." In my judgment the real problem of conservation consists in being able to conserve our soil, making it more productive instead of less so; increasing the yield instead of decreasing it.

During the past 30 years Europe has increased her acreage yield of wheat, rye, oats, barley, and potatoes 75 per cent, while we have increased ours 8 per cent.

Their necessities has compelled them to progress. Our abundant resources seem to have made us careless.

Mr. Speaker, I have not the time to elaborate upon this phase of the subject, but I hope that this bill will soon be enacted into law, and I am sure if it is no man in this Hall will ever regret having voted for it. [Applause.]

Mr. BEALL of Texas. It will keep cooperation in the Agricultural Department.

Mr. PEPPER. It will not kill the work. It may modify the appropriation in some respects, but the work is identical, and will not stop as long as the American people are in favor of conserving and developing their national resources. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAKER). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa has 49 minutes, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has 11 minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY].

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, only a little while ago, on a beautiful Indian summer day in early September, I took my leave of the rustling cornfields of Pike County, Mo., and went away to attend the law department of the State university.

At present I have the honor and the pleasure to represent in this House a district made up almost entirely of one of the great cities of the Nation. But my heart goes back to the farm, and my sympathies go out to the people everywhere who are now on the farm, no matter whether they were there then or have since located there.

I desire to congratulate the committee for having reported this bill to extend agricultural experiment-station work to the farmers. We of the cities will profit thereby in cheaper and better food products. My observation has convinced me that it is as much to the interest of the residents of a great city to have the farmer prosper as it is to the farmer himself.

When the Union Station was recently completed here in the Capital the literature of the world was searched for appropriate sentiments to be inscribed upon the face of that magnificent marble structure. One of the inscriptions is a tribute to agriculture and reads: "The farm—Best home of the family—Main source of national wealth—Foundation of civilized society—The natural providence." [Applause.]

I desire to see reforms that will make farm life more cheerful and pleasant, and which will bring the farm and the city closer together. To this end I have worked at this session for Federal aid to roads used as post roads and for an outright parcel express.

A parcel express would form a conduit between the farm in the country and the kitchen in the city. It would likewise bring to the farm very many of the advantages of city shops and stores. A parcel express would go further than any other single reform in reducing to the city dweller the present high cost of the vital necessaries, such as butter, eggs, milk, vegetables, fruit, and other farm products. At present the express companies exact such exorbitant prices that it is next to impossible for the farmer to ship his products in small packages to the city. And when such shipments do go by express the charges are such that the consumer frequently pays as much or more to the express company than he does to the farmer. The parcel express is now in full, complete, and successful operation in Germany. There the Government postal authorities provide specially manufactured containers for shipping liquids, and these containers may be returned to the shipper at a reduced charge.

During the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill by this House it was proposed to add an amendment providing for a parcel express. The Lewis-Goeke bill was deemed the best measure to accomplish that end. The Committee on Rules brought in a rule which was adopted making the Lewis-Goeke bill in order, otherwise such an amendment could have been objected to by any Member as being out of order for the reason that new legislation is not permissible on an appropriation bill. But even with the special rule making the Lewis-Goeke bill in order, when the time came to offer the bill as an amendment the leaders had decided to let the latter drop for this session. Accordingly, I offered the Lewis-Goeke bill myself as an amendment, but it was voted down.

Thereupon the bill went to the Senate about May 1, and was considered for several months by the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, of which the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE] is chairman. That Senator succeeded in having an amendment adopted in the Senate known as the Bourne parcel-post amendment. Meantime our Democratic friends had met in convention at Baltimore and declared in their platform for a parcel post, so that when the bill came back to the House the Democrats could not with very good grace refuse to concur in the Bourne amendment. Accordingly the Bourne parcel-post amendment was agreed to and became a law.

While I should have liked very much to have seen an outright parcel-express provision adopted, with a weight limit of 125 pounds, instead of a parcel post with a weight limit of 11 pounds, still I regard the Bourne amendment as a long step in the right direction, and as it gives wide latitude to the Postmaster General in working out the plan, I hope to see the parcel post grow in a short time into a genuine parcel express. I shall work to that end, and shall favor additional legislation for that purpose.

While I believe I am the most radical Member of this House upon subjects of legislation to relieve the people from the burdens now imposed upon us by trusts and monopolies, still I feel at heart that I am as conservative as any Member ought to be.

No gentleman upon this floor has any greater regard for established rules of law than myself.

Of the patriotism that is instilled into the bosom of every American youth I received my full share.

By my training I have learned to revere the rules of justice which for centuries have vouchsafed to our people the right to be free, the right to acquire property, and the right to hold and enjoy property when once acquired.

No vote of mine, either as a citizen at the polls or as a public officer in legislative halls, will ever be cast in such a way as to trench upon those rights.

But Sir William Blackstone recites that the object of the law is to protect the weak against the aggressions of the strong, and to my way of thinking the laws of the United States to control monopolies are at least a half century behind the times.

To enable our national laws to overtake conditions full and sweeping reforms are necessary. Naturally enough most of those who have profited by the absence of suitable laws are opposed to these reforms. However, we find a man of that class here and there who is farsighted enough to see that injustice persisted in can only result in disaster, and who is therefore aiding the present movement for laws to set matters right.

Such a man, in my opinion, is George W. Perkins.

In my speech in this House of August 21, 1911, I made this statement:

> If those who now enjoy the profits from large blocks of industrial and public-service corporation stocks want their children and their grandchildren to enjoy that same opportunity they will see the wisdom and the necessity of placing all industrial and public-service corporations upon a basis that is fair to the public. Otherwise Government ownership will come as surely as one day follows another. For that reason I stated in my campaign speeches that those who advocated Government control, as I do, were in reality the best friends of the owners of such stocks, and I am glad to note that in the past few weeks several of the greatest captains of industry in the United States have come to see the matter just as I do.

On August 17 of this year, in a speech on Boston Common, Col. Roosevelt was questioned by a man in the crowd who called out, "How about Perkins?"

"I am delighted to tell you about Mr. Perkins," the Colonel replied.

"Mr. Perkins is a rich man," he said. "He came into this movement not at my request, but of his own initiative. I felt just the same curiosity that a man in the crowd who asked me about him felt. I said to him, 'Mr. Perkins, why are you supporting me?' Mr. Perkins flushed and said he did not know but that he ought to be offended; but I told him he should not be, and that I was both surprised and pleased to have his support.

"'The prime reason why I am with you,' he told me, 'is because I have children. I have come to the conclusion that this country won't be a good place for my children unless we have substantial justice; unless the relations between capital and labor are on a better basis. I wish to support any movement that will bring that about.'"

Now, I do not know just how much good I have done in the progressive cause, but I do know that I introduced in this House on April 20, 1911, a bill to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, giving to that body authority to fix rates based upon physical valuations, and also the power to fix maximum prices in the interstate sale of any commodity when found to be controlled by an absolute monopoly. And that was the first bill ever introduced in the House that went that far.

I stand for the progressive program, and hope that after the people are heard from at the coming election a majority of the Members of the House and Senate will feel the same way about it. [Applause.]

The present value of the wealth of the United States is one hundred and twenty-five billions of dollars. Fifty men own 40 per cent of this wealth. Two hundred thousand men own 70 per cent of our total wealth, leaving only 30 per cent for the remaining nearly ninety millions of people.

The 20 directors of the United States Steel Corporation are also directors in various other corporations. The total corporations represented by those 20 men own nearly one-fourth of the total wealth of the United States.

It is little wonder, when we consider that the commercial conditions of the country are in such shape that all the profits are drifting into the tills of a few men, that the average family is poor and is maintaining a more or less struggling existence.

Two-thirds of the families of this country have an income of less than $900 a year. Those two-thirds of our population must rigidly economize in order to exist. Those two-thirds of our population could control elections and get fair laws put upon the statute books if they would but determine to do so. Nearly one-fourth of the families of this country have an income of less than $400 per year. These are census figures. Can any mere party name longer control the ballots of thinking people in the face of these facts? [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I support this bill because it seeks to bring home our national educational forces to communities. Agricultural education, so beneficently and auspiciously started under the Morrill Act of 50 years ago, seeks in this bill to achieve the rich fruition of its early sponsors.

Agricultural education stood a long time in splendid isolation, receiving the contempt of the learned and the prejudiced opposition of the unlearned. That was the day when, if a boy started to college—a girl seldom did—the community inquiry was "would he be a pedagogue, or would he pettifog, was it to be preaching or practicing, pills or prayers." [Laughter.] The proposed book farmer brought forth the humorous wink, the doubting head shake, and the pitying dismissal as of a "sad case."

I remember when I finished my course at Ames, Iowa, and carried home my diploma, signed by its then president, Seaman A. Knapp, so graciously referred to in the report filed with this bill and so frequently named in this debate, I was asked many questions. I recall one, "Did Knapp teach you to rock the cradle or swing it?" Well, whatever I was taught, I have rocked the cradle since, but have never swung one. To be perfectly frank with you gentlemen, one of the reasons why I went to the agricultural college, instead of to the State University, was because I could have a job such as milking cows night and morning at 10 cents an hour. This had the laudable purpose of enabling me to pay my board. Now, when I petition some lusty youth to work for twice that and his board on my farm and dairy, I see the inspiration of a modern Virgil for a twentieth century volume of Bucolics.

Let me tell you, brother of the Southland, whose love and veneration for Dr. Knapp prompt eulogies on every fitting occasion, and to whom through southern gold alone there is to be erected here in Washington a monument to preserve his memory and commemorate his deeds, Dr. Knapp, at Ames, as dean of agriculture, vice president, and president, had a stormy career. Do you know the serious fault urged against him was, he was not practical? He was of those who had a vision, but the man was master of the vision and never became a visionary. Knapp, Wilson, Wallace, and Budd saw the vision of the great Northwest. They saw its fecund soil, bathed by the rain and the dews, tilled by the brain-directed hand of toil, made to yield a thousand times the gold which comes in response to weary pick and dangerous blast of the Rocky Mountain Range. [Applause.] Was Dr. Knapp practical? If intensely so and for himself he might have stayed in my native State, there to have profited by and enjoyed his opportunities. I love to think of Iowa, my native State, from which the ranking member of the Agricultural Committee comes, and is now generously granting me time for speech. There she rests, the central jewel in the diadem of the Union, rich in the wealth of her vales and plains, wrought out by the industry and genius of her sons and daughters; blessed with forestry, water power, and a measure of minerals. She was the first to snatch the laurel of literacy from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. For two or three decades she has been struggling with Nebraska for its retention. Her fame rests in the wise words and prudent deeds of her statesmen at either end of this Capitol, living or dead. [Applause.] For years it has been a greater honor to be an Iowa Member than it was anciently to be a Roman, and that was greater than to be a king. [Applause.] When a boy I heard an Iowa orator use the following extravagant language:

"The Lord made the heaven and the earth. At His mandate there was the separation of the land and the sea. He made man, and He caused there to be established states, principalities, kingdoms. Then having looked upon it and called it good, and profiting by His experience, made Iowa, adorned with beauty, filled with fatness, and naught lacking for the comfort and happiness of man."

[Applause.]

Let not my Iowa friends too soon congratulate themselves upon this unanswered encomium.

"Friends, the Lord seems to have profited further by His experience. He long since learned that for the happiness of His people He could do too much. His enterprise at Eden was not a complete success. He had done too much for the early children of His creation. We all know that a smooth sea never makes a skillful sailor. We know that success uninterrupted without serious obstacles to overcome never qualify men for the highest happiness. And the Creative Genius, recognizing and following these principles, looked upon a desert waste unadorned, unproductive, and uninviting, and He said, 'Here in this part of My dominion, apparently marred by My manifest neglect, I place a few of the choice children of My creation. And if in the years to come they shall through diligence and enterprise make these apparently barren plains yield their abundance, cause beauty to stand where unsightliness stood, raise cities where solitude once sat, establish thousands of homes where children and happiness are; if the wheels of industry shall roll unceasing; if great colleges and universities shall be established; if happiness shall be in humble cot and marble mansion; if pæans of praise and voices of prayer shall rise to My name and glory from humble chapel and vast cathedral, then will I visit My children, look upon the works of their creation, call it "good" and make My dwelling place with them forever.'" [Applause.]

It is finished. He has looked upon the work of the children of His creation in our fair State. He has blessed it. He has called it "good"; and He is making His home with us forever. Men call this place Nebraska. [Applause.]

But I have wandered far afield. I was talking of Dr. Knapp. This bill represents a concrete statement of a portion of his vision. He was said not to have been practical. I do not know how his assets scheduled when the executor took charge. It may have been that—permit a pardonable paraphrase—"for others he could save, for himself he could not save." I only know that his old neighbor, the head of the Department of Agriculture, favored his going to the Southland, not to deepen the people's prejudice for free trade, not to convert them to the doctrine of protection, but to aid them to see that which they had. He traveled where De Allyon had marched, where Ponce de Leon led his band, and where De Soto forced his army to the Father of Waters. Some of these sought fame, others youth, still others conquest; but all sought gold, and they found it not; but wherever Seaman A. Knapp placed his foot and industry followed, convertible gold came up and continues to come without aid of shovel or pick, drill or dynamite. More gold than would have satisfied the dreaming demands of pillaging Pizarro or conquering Cortes. [Applause.] I am pleased with the zeal of the author of this bill, whose industry is proverbial and which could not well escape the notice of a new minority Member with time on his hands. His work is doing much for his section, and this bill broadened, as I hope it ultimately will be, without taking anything from it, will register a great forward step. You will permit a pardonable pun if I say the author of this bill will be referred to as the "Lever of the South." [Applause.]

I would not be didactic, but, seeing the beginning of a great industrial transition in the southland, permit me to encourage it by saying:

"Arise, if the past detain you;
"Her sunshine and storm forget;
"No change so unworthy to bind you
"As those of a vain regret.

"Sad or bright, she is lifeless ever;
"Cast her phantom arms away,
"Nor stop, save to learn the lesson
"Of a nobler strife to-day."

[Applause.]

While I favor this bill and all of it, I hope it will be completed when in conference between the House and the Senate by the additional provisions embodied in the Page-Wilson vocational bill. Then we will have the greatest scheme of education ever evolved by the educational forces of America. A fulfillment of the plan taken up and advocated by its statesmen and written into the law by the Representatives of the people and the States.

The new learning, then called the novum organum of early England, was the work of one man, and he a high officer of the Government, an aristocrat, Lord Bacon. This system of education will be the crystallization of the most advanced and matured thought among all the educational, industrial, and professional forces of America.

The bill before us will enable the farmers to produce more cheaply, at the same time with greater profits, food for the entire people. The Page-Wilson bill will, in addition, be a similar service in the trades and industries. It will further add the science and practice of home making. The present bill will extend farm demonstration, found so effective in the South, to all the States of the Union. The Page-Wilson bill will take up the work of State colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts, carrying it to the mass of the people in these industries, as was intended by the authors of the land-grant act of 1862. The present bill will enable the bright farmers to advise and direct their neighbors. The Page-Wilson bill will carry the new education, the new inspiration, the modern science and technique to the youth of both farm and town. The general purpose of the Page-Wilson bill is to place the college of agriculture and mechanic arts at the head of a unified system of education relating to agriculture, the trades and industries, and home economics, extending through practically all the schools of the State, including bureaus of demonstration and extension work in each county. Further, while the present bill will set to work practical men as teachers of less practical men, the Page-Wilson bill will direct State colleges and normal schools in providing sufficient well-equipped teachers in the three great departments of practical learning. In short, while the present bill will reach but one great branch of vocational education, the Page-Wilson bill will comprehensively grasp our entire school system and make it useful to all the people who toil.

The work sought to be done through the Page-Wilson bill is not entirely new, nor will it be sporadic. In small and independent ways it is being attempted and wrought out in many different communities through private enterprises or municipal or State plan and aid. To do a thing in America our leaders in thought have but to see the need. Our enterprising men and women seek out, experimentally, the way and then the public, duly advised, places behind it its sanction and support, and within the lapse of reasonable time it is accomplished. Formerly we were a Nation hampered by overproduction, but that period is passed. Consumption, fast speeding on its way, is overtaking production, and our economists of all schools and parties agree that if America would feed itself its depleted soil must be restored. Its swamps and wastes must be reclaimed and the efficiency of its producers enhanced. If America would construct for times of peace and war the things which America needs, the strong hand must be taught to move obedient to a clear and active well-trained brain. So that our youths who will mingle our substances, shape our tools, and form our implements must bring about that mingling of hand and brain which comes only from proper training in the formative periods of life. [Applause.]

There have been in times past vast sums spent in schools to train men to fight, schools to prepare them for business, schools to fit them for teaching, preaching, thinking, and the alleviation of suffering and the saving of life; but for the establishment and care of that bit of heaven here on earth, the home, where women and children's time is mostly spent and more of the husband and father's time should be, has been left to guess and haphazard. It was allowed to be wrought out from the doubtful experiences of too often antagonistic mothers-in-law who would fain perpetuate their own peculiar system of disorder upon the family constituted by the son of one and the daughter of the other. [Applause.]

The young woman on the farm, coming from the sources of the foodstuffs and textile materials, has a better opportunity in our colleges and public schools, where domestic science shall be taught, to develop into intelligent educational conductors or superintendents of homes than are those reared in city life or factory shadow. As such, in the years to come, there will be a demand at an increased scale of salary. All reputable labor is honorable, and conduct of a home as wife or employee would be more desirable than toiling in factory, wearying at bargain counters, patiently withstanding, without rebuke, the sneers of haggling customers, or even enduring the strains incident to the teacher's life. And where the best women are, there men are usually found to linger, and many arrange to stay for life.

With the poultry and dairy, the two best money-making departments of the farm, women are scoring financial success.

As time goes on woman's activities in other farm departments will, with our improved facilities, take the lead and reap the benefits of farming's financial opportunities. Parlors and drawing-rooms are negligible apartments. Comfort and happiness lie in the sanitary kitchen, orderly dining room, and well-ventilated bedchamber. These three can always be had in the country. They constitute the best balm for family friction and the most potent antidote for divorce. [Applause.]

There may be inspiration in tariff changes, in battleship construction, in transportation enterprise, in canal building, and many other activities of our Government, but I know of none entitles to more consideration than the Government seeking to aid the upbuilding of intelligent, well-ordered, sanitary, and happy homes, where the children are to be born who will appreciate and defend the nation which took an interest in them and theirs. [Applause.]

I recently attended the commencement exercises of a large country school in Maryland, 18 miles north of Baltimore. The young graduate of one of our State colleges of agriculture was graduating his first class in agriculture and home economics. I saw the practical demonstrations on and by the platform of these young men and women. There were fruit demonstrations, dairy tests, chemical experiments. There were the products of the manual training of the different classes which showed clear conception and creditable execution. Perhaps more interesting than all upon the platform, the young ladies tested the purity of the various food substances, measured the quantities to be used, prepared inviting and palatable foods within the view of thousands there assembled.

I saw there in miniature, probable results of vocational learning, aided by this great Government, carried on by the intelligent educational forces of the country in every community of the land, and I thought that with these, no department of our labor could or would be repulsive, but that it all would and could be made attractive, and when labor is attractive, the products of labor will be valuable, wholesome, and beautiful. [Applause.]

A thought of this school's work should not be overlooked, because it seemed to connect the homes and the farms in such a way as to give it not only desirability but durability. I learned that each of 16 boys had been supplied with four varieties of corn to plant one-fourth of an acre in all; and I further learned that in every case the boy had beaten his father in bushels of corn per acre raised in the same field. The boys were growing potatoes to obtain new varieties, and the fathers were vying with them in the enterprise. The fathers were also aiding the teacher in experiments to determine what were the best fertilizers for the soils in that immediate community. More than this, I learned that the teacher of home making was cooperating with the mothers of the community.

These mothers came to school for classes and domestic science on Saturday of each week. This led me to see the need of a more comprehensive legislation than that embodied in the present bill. I saw that they needed for the great enterprise more teachers for agricultural industrial training and home making. Upon study of the Page-Wilson bill—which I trust will be called the Lever-Page-Wilson bill—I found ample provision in the articulation of all the public school systems, including agricultural, normal, high, and country schools, provided for in this excellent Page-Wilson measure. I shall not take the time nor space to go into detail of this favored measure, but let me say this: That it does not shift the burden nor does it grant too great authority to the General Government. It seeks merely to cooperate in effort and equally contribute to the necessary expense. Nor does this system propose to make over or abolish the best lines of intellectual training now followed. They are not to be modified except as the best educational thought of our country unitedly sees fit to modify them.

It is a matter of congratulation that the school forces of our country, the agricultural forces, and the labor forces are practically united upon this measure, and some day it will be a proud fact, to be recalled by every Member of this body, that he assisted, in whatever capacity, to crystallize into law the proposed measure.

We are all disappointed in that our census figures show a strong current of our young life moving from the farm to the cities. Philosophers may think, economists may reason, and politicians debate, but one of the large reasons for the high cost of living is this selfsame drift. Upon the ocean currents move that mighty swelling force as if they would submerge the nearing continent, but neighboring and countering currents in due time set in, and the great balance is reestablished and maintained. So should our currents moving from farm to city, from city to village, and from village to farm not be a vast movement, but a nice balancing of currents, which will show the intelligent choice, based upon comfort and opportunity and all callings to become respectable, honorable, and desirable.

I have left entirely the discussion of the trade schools to Members from the large cities. Of them I am not informed. I think, in a measure, I do know the farm and home, and whatever can be done to better them will better the generations to come and strengthen our Nation. This must be done if we would retain our leadership in the arts and industries. This must be done if the American race is ultimately to be built up as the distinctive leading race, to see the way, to lead the way, and to hold our rights for the enlightenment and betterment of all mankind. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I now yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], and the balance of my time I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I was in hopes that when the question of industrial education arose in the Congress that ample time might be given to all those who desired to express their convictions fully upon the subject. But it is quite apparent that at this late stage of the session and at this hour it will be impossible to discuss all of the subjects involved in industrial education.

A remark was made a moment ago touching the subject of the law and the learned professions, and especially concerning the lawyer. That recalls to my mind that quite frequently I have heard it said that if there was a smart boy in the family we would make a lawyer of him; the next in intelligence perhaps should become a physician, and so on down through the learned professions; and, finally, if we had a boy or a girl of little intelligence, we would make a farmer of the boy and a cook of the girl.

Now, Mr. Speaker, from my investigation of the subject of scientific agriculture, I wish to be recorded in this presence and upon the records of this House as saying that more intelligence and more scientific research and knowledge is necessary in making a perfect farmer, thoroughly versed in the complete science of agriculture, than it is a lawyer, or any of the learned professions. A learned and skillful lawyer, if unscrupulously inclined, may, by dextrous presentation of judicial pronouncements, apparently apt, and by failure through ignorance or otherwise withhold or refrain from presentation, and by deceit and sophistry, obtain from a court or jury an erroneous, unjust, and illegal decision. But when nature and nature's laws pertaining to mother earth is the subject for solution there is but one key that can unlock the treasure vault that lies hidden in the soil, and that key is "know how"—not "guesswork." No sophistry, deception, or special pleading can deceive nature, and yet the farmer, without skill or training, without scientific knowledge of the subject, is expected to and is forced to grapple with it unaided, and without being given even rudimentary technical information. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the perpetuity of this Government largely depends upon the proper education of our people. They must be intelligent, temperate, industrious, skillful, and constantly employed, if prosperity and happiness are to be their lot. These qualities can only come through right kind of educational and industrial training.

To-day there is a very strong demand for the education and training of the entire individual mentally and physically. The demand for culture and scholarship in the broadest meaning of the terms is just as great as it ever was. But there is a greater demand now than ever before for the education and training that will fit the boy and girl for the practical affairs of life, be their residence either in the city or country.

It is apparent that the problem of education is industrial as well as academic. It must exalt the dignity of labor and teach habits of industry. Education heretofore, I am inclined to believe, has been rather too academic; that is, it has held too closely to the textbook and shut the door to nature and life. Our greatest educators see this problem and are trying to solve it. It is not proposed to do less headwork, but it is proposed to do more skillful handwork to supplement the head. By making this handwork more skillful and scientific tends to make it more interesting and alluring. To-day, Mr. Speaker, vocational education, either upon the farm or in the workshop, has become a vital problem to solve if we expect to compete industrially with the civilized nations of the world. Germany, France, England, and many others far outstrip us in this regard at the present time. But to-day there is a new awakening, and our educators, legislators, farmers, professional and leading business men are of one mind in a desire that the evolution of our school system shall be directed into lines which shall carry to all the people at least a portion of our accumulated technical knowledge, and thus add greater efficiency to our workers. Our population to-day reaches 90,000,000, and of this number at least 33,000,000 are engaged in what is known as the gainful occupations. Of this latter number at least 30,000,000 are interested in agriculture and mechanic arts and fully 25,000,000 others are interested in home economics, and I maintain that education, vocational and practical, along lines which will teach this army of our producers more skillfully to perform the occupation which they must follow is the greatest problem which confronts us as a nation to-day, and any legislation designed for such purposes and which will accomplish this result will be doing simple justice to the workers and home makers of our country.

Heretofore considerable legislation has been enacted along this line, and as a result thereof material results have been accomplished, and to-day other bills are proposed and are now pending, awaiting the action of this Congress.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the magnitude of this subject and with the prospect of speedy action upon some of the measures now pending, it might not be amiss to briefly trace the history of some of the present laws now upon the statute book and the accomplishments thus far obtained thereunder.

In 1862 the original Morrill Act was passed and is still in force. This law gave to each State 30,000 acres of public land for each Senator and Representative in Congress, to be expended in—

The endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical study, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the legislature of the States may respectfully prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life.

The income from this amounts to about $16,000 annually to each State on the average, varying greatly in the different States. The income from this land amounted for the year 1911 to $797,628.

The act which is known as the second Morrill Act, passed in 1890, gives to each State maintaining one of these colleges an additional sum of $25,000 a year for the following purpose:

To be applied only to instruction in agriculture, the mechanic arts, the English language, and the various branches of mathematical, physical, natural, and economic sciences, with special reference to their applications in the industries of life and to the facilities for instruction.

Again in the year 1907 another act of Congress was passed known as the Nelson amendment, which adds a like amount annually to each State maintaining one of these colleges, to be expended for the following purposes:

The expenditure of said money shall be governed in all respects by the provisions of said act of Congress approved July 2, 1862 (first Morrill Act), and the said act of Congress approved August 30, 1890: Provided, That said colleges may use a portion of this money for providing courses for the special preparation of instructors for teaching the elements of agriculture and mechanic arts.

Thus giving a total of about $66,000 annually to each State on an average.

At the present time there are in existence and in successful operation in the various States 67 agricultural and mechanic arts colleges initiated and maintained under and by virtue of the original Morrill Act of 1862 and the various acts supplemental thereto.

The total number of students enrolled in these agricultural and mechanical colleges in 1911 was 45,871, only a part of whom study agriculture and the mechanic arts. In correspondence and extension courses there are 169,458; nearly all in agriculture and home economics.

The total appropriation from the Federal Government to the several States under the second Morrill Act of 1890 to date amounts to $23,752,000, while those under the Nelson amendment of 1907 amount to date to $2,490,000, making a grand total for these two direct appropriations of $26,242,000. This, together with the income from the proceeds of the land-grant act of 1862, aggregates nearly $40,000,000. Of this sum at least thirty-five millions have been expended in the interest of educating that 2 per cent of our school-going population who attend colleges. A few millions have been expended in State agricultural experiment stations and for college extension work in educating the adult farmers.

Not 5 per cent has been used in schools of lower grade in educating boys for the trades and industries and to return them to the management of the home farm, and practically nothing to train men already in the trade, for their occupation.

Figures concerning the total amount appropriated by the various States for the support of these land-grant colleges are not available, but the amounts appropriated for the year ending June 30, 1910, were $11,041,000. Owing to the fact that these colleges and universities have many courses other than agricultural and mechanic arts, only a part of these sums have been used in the teaching of agricultural, mechanic arts, and home economics.

These various Federal appropriations have had a very large effect in building up our State colleges and universities. They are beginning to have a tremendous effect on agriculture and home economics, but have done less directly for educating the trades worker.

Their engineering departments have dealt almost wholly with producing engineer graduates of the higher or collegiate courses.

Mr. Speaker, in 1887 the Congress passed what is known as the Hatch Act, providing for establishing a State agricultural experiment station in each State. Thus Congress took the lead in establishing at each State college of agriculture an institution of research. Under this act each State receives from the Federal Treasury $15,000 annually, to be expended at such stations in—conducting original researches and verifying experiments on the physiology of plants and animals; the diseases to which they are severally subject, with the remedies of the same; the chemical composition of useful plants at their different stages of growth; the comparative advantages of rotative cropping as pursued under the varying series of crops; the capacity of new plants or trees for acclimation; the analysis of soils and water; the chemical composition of manures, natural or artificial, with experiments designed to test their comparative effects on crops of different kinds; the adaptation and value of grasses and forage plants; the composition and digestibility of the kinds of food for domestic animals; the scientific and economic questions involved in the production of butter and cheese; and such other researches or experiments bearing directly on the agricultural industry of the United States as may in each case be deemed advisable, having due regard to the varying conditions and needs of the respective States and Territories.

Supplemental to this Hatch Act of 1887, the Congress in 1906 passed what is known as the Adams Act, under which an additional sum of $15,000 annually is given to each State for the following purpose:

To be applied only to paying the necessary expenses of conducting original researches or experiments bearing directly on the agricultural industry of the United States, having due regard to the varying condition and need of the respective States or Territories.

Thus making an annual appropriation of $30,000 for this research and experimental work. Up to date these experiment stations have received from the Federal Treasury $21,600,000; the average State thus receiving annually $96,000 for its agricultural college and its experiment station, making for the 48 States an annual appropriation of $4,608,000.

Mr. Speaker, I have thus far called attention to the various acts of Congress authorizing, initiating, and establishing our present system of industrial education, as aided from the Federal Treasury, showing the nature of the work done, amounts appropriated therefor, and those particularly benefited thereby. It must be apparent that only a small portion of our population have received this direct benefit and that a vast amount of accumulated technical knowledge is stored in the minds of the few. The captains have virtually received it all, while the vast army of our industrial workers and the actual producers of our wealth are left to toil ignorantly and unaided by scientific training. This vast army of workers comprises nearly 93 per cent of our entire population. They work at a great disadvantage.

Mr. Speaker, the latest statistics show the school population in the United States between the ages of 5 and 18 years is 24,240,000, and the number of pupils and students of all grades in both public and private schools and colleges is as follows: Elementary, 17,960,000; secondary, 1,035,000; higher, including all colleges and normal schools, 331,400. Grand total, 19,326,400.

To further illustrate the great need for the dissemination of this technical, scientific, and useful information to the masses it is but necessary to revert to other statistical facts. At present our population is approximately 90,000,000 people. Counting 5 persons to the family, there are 18,000,000 families. Counting one breadwinner to the family, there are 18,000,000 breadwinners. But the most casual observation will convince anyone that two out of every five, rather than one, must, and do, toil for a living, making 32,000,000 breadwinners. There are in this country about 112,000 ministers of the gospel, 115,000 lawyers, 132,000 doctors, and about 500,000 teachers; fewer than 1,000,000 engaged in the so-called learned professions. Let us say that there are about 1,000,000 merchants, superintendents, and managers of the vast business enterprises—men and women who do the headwork in the country's business.

It is apparent from this that of the 36,000,000 breadwinners at least 33,000,000 of them must work with their hands. It is therefore quite apparent that our problem of education is not only academic but largely and, as I contend, chiefly industrial as well. Can there be any doubt of the great importance in successfully solving a problem which has to do with the moral, social, and industrial uplifting of the vast majority of our people, in whom and upon whom rests the material work of increasing the prosperity and happiness of our beloved country? As a Congress, representing as we do a constituency unequaled, what are we now doing along legislative lines to improve conditions? Are we moving at all? And, if moving, are not our movements too slow and upon too narrow a plane and too parsimonious? More recently various attempts have been made by the introduction of bills in the Congress to extend our system of industrial education more directly to the masses. Briefly, to enumerate, will say that in 1906 Congressman Livingston, of Georgia, introduced a bill to appropriate $10,000 annually for an agricultural high school in each rural congressional district in the United States, and Congressman ADAMSON, of Georgia, also introduced a bill seeking to appropriate $2,500 for a branch experiment station at each of such agricultural high schools. I am informed that these measures were introduced at the suggestion of Gov. J. M. Terrell, of Georgia, who was instrumental in organizing 11 agricultural high schools in the respective congressional districts of Georgia under a State law passed in July, 1906. These bills were never acted upon. These suggestive bills of Representatives Livingston and ADAMSON were the nucleus of a bill which I introduced in the Congress in January, 1907, which was quite generally known and approved throughout the United States as the Davis bill, and numbered H. R. 24575 and entitled:

A bill to provide an annual appropriation for industrial education in agricultural high schools and in city high schools and for branch agricultural experiment stations and regulate the expenditures thereof.

This bill I have reintroduced in each succeeding Congress, including the present, and it is now known as H. R. 6333 and entitled:

A bill to cooperate with the State in encouraging instruction in agriculture, the trades and industries, and home economics in secondary schools; in preparing teachers for those vocational subjects in State normal schools, and to appropriate money therefor and regulate its expenditure.

This bill in its present amended form, and after much consultation with nearly all of the leading educators of the country, has received the indorsement and approval of most of the educators and institutions of learning, including hundreds of others, such as boards of trade, transportation companies; National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry; agricultural organizations in various States, commissioners of agriculture, commercial clubs, manufacturers and business men's associations, the National Society for the Promotion of Industrial Education, all normal-school associations, and hundreds of others, in all business and industrial lines.

Mr. Speaker, in 1910 the late lamented Senator Dolliver, of Iowa, introduced this bill in the Senate, and the Committee on Agriculture, of whom he was then chairman, after an extended hearing thereon, reported the bill favorably to the Senate, and, no doubt, were it not for his untimely death the same would now be a monument to his name upon the statute books of the Nation.

During the present session of Congress Senator PAGE, shortly after the death of Senator Dolliver, became sponsor for that measure and reintroduced it in the Senate. Elaborate hearings have been had thereon, and it is now before the Senate for passage, and I trust will be favorably considered and passed. The Page bill, while embodying the main features of the Davis-Dolliver bill, is much more elaborate and extensive, calling for far greater appropriations, yet, in my mind, wholly warranted. Every dollar invested for the education of our people along this line, and especially for the conservation and uplift of the youth of this Nation, is not wasted, but, on the contrary, the benefits to be derived therefrom will be of untold value.

Mr. Speaker, I have now come to the bill under consideration, introduced by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], it being a bill—

To establish agricultural extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto.

This bill seeks to aid in diffusing among the masses of people of the United States some of the useful and practical information which has accumulated by and through the work and teachings of our agricultural colleges and experiment stations. The principal object of this bill is to teach the farmer by actual demonstration the scientific methods which are taught theoretically in these great institutions. Of the beneficial results which will be obtained by the enactment of this bill into law there can be no doubt, and I commend it in all ways and trust that Congress will unanimously approve it, and that the insignificant expenditure from the Federal Treasury will not deter in the least a favorable vote for its passage. I apprehend that, if objection there be, it can only arise from the fact that the bill is too limited in its scope; that it should be enlarged so as to include scientific education to youth of our country along all industrial lines—agricultural, mechanic arts, and home economics—as well as actual demonstration to the older upon the farm.

But, Mr. Chairman, if we can not get all that is desired, that is no reason why we should not gladly accept a part. I shall not attempt to add to the already luminous speech of the gentleman from South Carolina concerning his bill, which he delivered a few days ago on the floor of this House. It is replete with knowledge, aptly put, and contains statistics irrefutable and of great value.

Mr. Chairman, thus far I have dealt largely with the legislative structural portion of our industrial educational problem, and perhaps somewhat crudely. Now, if the House will bear with me, I should now like to devote a little time in giving speech to some of the ideas that have crowded on me for several years during my investigation of this subject. I would like to give some of the reasons why I think it is imperative upon us to grapple at once with this all-important subject of vocational education.

Mr. Chairman, an education which educates away from the soil is wrong both in tendency and results. Agriculture is fundamental and basic, and in the final analysis we revert to the soil as the source of our wealth, prosperity, and happiness as a people. Our higher institutions of learning reach only 1 or 2 per cent of the population. The assumption is that society should provide technical education for certain professional classes, but that primary and general education is all that those who till the soil, work in the mechanical industries, and keep the homes in our city and country are entitled to.

My correspondence and personal investigation and conferences in reference to technical secondary school education along industrial lines have revealed to me many facts concerning our industrial educational facilities. It clearly appears that Congress inaugurated a revolution in our education by the passage of the Morrill land-grant act of 1862. I am now ready to question whether mere literary education is not radically narrow for the great body of our boys and girls, nearly all of whom must work in the productive and home-making vocation. Of some things my investigations have given me decided opinions. They are past the stage of inquiry. I know that agricultural research as developed in the United States Department of Agriculture and in the State experiment stations is a public enterprise of vast good to our agricultural industries and to our home making. Agricultural schools have also become a great power for good. The agricultural collegiate course in our State colleges and universities are coming into their own, and their graduates now form the nucleus of an army which is to transform American country life so as to give us a higher rural civilization. These graduates have already begun the work of developing a country-life education into a system in which are articulated agricultural collegiate courses, agricultural high-school courses, and consolidated farm school courses, supplemented by various forms of college extension, such as traveling schools, farmers' institutes, and demonstration farms, and by a literature which will make available to all farmers the results of agricultural research.

Mr. Speaker, judged by the conditions existing at the time of the passage of the land-grant act 50 years ago, the progress made in industrial education is flattering, but much more should be done to accomplish desired results. There is a broad chasm to be spanned educationally from the common school to the college, at least so far as vocational education is concerned. The bridging of this chasm seems to me to be the all-important subject for consideration now. The secondary school, sometimes called the "people's college," is the greatest factor in accomplishing this result.

The essential features of the Davis-Dolliver and Page bills provide for about 300 rural district schools of secondary grade, in which scientific agriculture and home economics are to be taught, in addition to the ordinary branches usually taught in secondary schools. The various States are to provide the farm and buildings upon which such schools are located and provide and maintain all equipment required for teaching the ordinary courses of a school of secondary grade, and the Federal appropriation shall be used only for instruction for distinctive studies in agriculture and home economics.

These bills further provide an appropriation for distinctive instruction in the trades and industries, home economics, and agriculture in separate secondary schools organized for that purpose.

We may roughly estimate that we have about 5,000,000 pupils preparing for country life and about 10,000,000 preparing for city life, and that 93 per cent of these pupils at present receive only an ordinary primary-school education, wholly devoid of any scientific or practical training along the line of the occupations which they are expected to follow. Most of the teachers in our primary-grade schools are graduates from our present secondary schools, and without vocational education, hence are unfitted to teach along these lines. The graduates from the secondary schools contemplated by this system of education provided for in these various bills would be competent instructors, therefore are much needed, and until they are obtained little progress will be made in the proper education of our industrial army of workers and home makers.

The specialization of industries and the close division of labor have made a new world, into which the graduates of our schools are precipitated. The old education leads the pupil to believe that he is prepared for life. His preparation is only general. The new education must prepare the pupil for some specific line of life. It must be broad and practical. It must combine the theme written in the book, the theme written in the soil and in the machinery, with the inspiration for the best living which modern conditions can provide.

A properly equipped Army and Navy are essential to the stability and peace for our industries; but should we not also see the importance of expenditures which create individual efficiency and wealth? Should we not make it possible for every boy and girl to secure at least the rudiments of technical industrial education? Surely our financial ability would warrant this.

The three great wastes in the economies are land, material, and labor, and by far the greatest waste is from inefficient labor. The nation that uses its labor, lands, and products to the best advantage will take the lead in civilization and in power. Again, our most important racial and national institution—the home—can be developed along with our other institution only as we give to it the discoveries of science and build it up through education. It is not enough that America have homes averaging better than homes of other parts of the world; they should be very much better. When the homes of our rural population are made more attractive through the proper education of the dwellers therein, then, and only then, will the farm homes as places to develop splendid families be appreciated at their true American value.

The feverish desire to leave the land and go to the city, which is quite prevalent to-day, should be removed. Scientific agriculture, horticulture, and home economics will dignify rural employment and thus tend to produce more comfort, satisfaction, and contentment upon the farm.

Recurring again to these proposed secondary schools, it is noticeable that our State colleges have been the means of developing a limited, but very substantial, number of them. Minnesota in 1888 took the initiative and established one of these schools upon its State college grounds, and since then the States of Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, Oklahoma, Maine, Alabama, Georgia, New York, Rhode Island, Washington, Wisconsin, Kansas, Tennessee, and a few others have established one or more of these schools, until the total at present is about 40.

There are about 3,000 agricultural counties in this country, and the Davis-Dolliver and Page bills contemplate establishing these secondary schools on an average of one in each district comprising not less than 5 nor more than 15 counties, making 300 schools in all. Should we be fortunate enough within the next few years to establish, equip, and maintain these 300 schools, very soon thereafter a sufficient number of teachers would be evolved therefrom to amply supply the quota required for instruction in vocational education in all of the rural primary schools of the country. Then and only then will we be in position to give to the rural youth of this country the practical education which they should obtain.

The paramount reason for broadening our education is that we may produce a higher and more efficient civilization. We want leaders who are more definitely trained as to their heads and hands; as to their power to be useful in productive industries, in home making, and in character building; we want the whole people to produce sufficient wealth that they can afford means for schools and time for going to schools. And we want the home, the school, and the great school of practical life organized to develop men according to the highest standard, each man and woman combining high efficiency in practical production, or in home making with the ability to be useful to their fellows in whatever may arise.

Those who are personally in contact with the education in such agricultural secondary schools as those at the University of Minnesota, Lincoln, Nebr., and in other States, and those who have followed the young men and women when they return from these schools to the farm community, are unanimous in their belief of their beneficiality. These young people are to be the Nation's best guaranty that our agriculture and our country home will be of that quality which our ever-improving times make possible. We need no better evidence of the value of our city mechanic high schools than the fact that manufacturers are ever alert to secure those graduates who have been developed into efficient technical workers.

Listen to statements from some of our great educators. Kenyon L. Butterfield, president of Amherst Agriculture College, says:

There is great need of the kind of school provided for by the Davis bill. I have felt for many years that there was a "missing link" in our agricultural education. The agricultural colleges have done noble work, but they can never solve the problem of educating practical farmers without the help of the agricultural high school, and what may be said of agriculture may also be said of the other industries. I can not too strongly emphasize the need of a system of secondary school of agriculture.

George E. Fellows, president of the University of Maine, in speaking of these schools says:

It will take a century to otherwise accomplish throughout the country what may be thoroughly established in five years by means of the assistance proposed in the Davis bill.

Rufus W. Stimpson, president of Connecticut Agricultural College, says:

We need more strong secondary schools of industry in New England. A start has been made, but in forwarding this movement help should come from Congress as the Davis bill proposes. There is only one organized body competent to deal with the question of the rapid development of technical education for the workers in the industries throughout all the States, and that is Congress.

K. C. Davis, of the New York State College of Agriculture, speaking of the secondary schools, says:

The need for well-organized, well-equipped secondary schools of this order is reaching a climax which can not be ignored or postponed.

H. E. Deemer, chief justice of the Supreme Court of Iowa, in a somewhat lengthy letter written to the Hon. Charles F. Scott, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, on April 29, 1908, discussing the subject of industrial education, uses this language:

We have no secondary school of agriculture or for industrial training. Intensive farming is our salvation agriculturally, and industrial efficiency is demanded in the commercial world. Neither of these is now being supplied to the boys who are to be our farmers or those who are to be the mechanics in the shops. The greatest gap we have in our educational system is due to the lack of such secondary schools as are proposed in the Davis bill. The only armies we need fear in the future are the industrial forces of our competitors.

Mr. Speaker, of the many hundreds of distinguished men who have fully indorsed this system of secondary education, I shall be content with mentioning two others. Mr. H. H. Seerley, president committee on agricultural education of teachers, National Educational Association, Iowa State Normal School, in a letter addressed to the chairman, House Committee on Agriculture, April 30, 1908, says:

The organization and development of systems of industrial education in the several States for the purpose of educating and training the masses of the pupils in secondary and elementary schools is the most important question of the present day. The prosperity and the success of these industrial classes are so important to the whole country that the Nation can not be indifferent to the demand for this sort of education.

During the year 1907, while Mr. Roosevelt was President, in addresses made at Lansing, Mich., he said:

Our school system has hitherto been well-nigh wholly lacking on the side of industrial training, of the training which fits a man for the shop and the farm. This is a most serious lack, for no one can look at the peoples of mankind without realizing that industrial training is one of the most potent factors in national development.

Again, at Keokuk, Iowa, he said:

We should strive in every way to aid in the education of the farmer for the farm, and we should shape our school system with this end in view; and so vitally important is this that, in my opinion, the Federal Government should cooperate with the State governments to secure a needed change and improvement in our schools. It is significant that both from Minnesota and Georgia there have come proposals in this direction in the appearance of bills introduced in the National Congress. Such agricultural high schools as those in Minnesota and Nebraska for farm boys and girls, such technical high schools as are to be found, for instance, in both St. Louis and Washington, have by their success shown that it is entirely feasible to carry in practical fashion the fundamentals of industrial training into the realms of our secondary schools. At present there is a gap between our primary schools in the country and the cities and the industrial college collegiate courses which must be closed; and, if necessary, the Nation must help the States to close it.

Too often our present schools tend to put altogether too great a premium upon mere literary education, and therefore train away from the farm and the shop. We should reverse this process.

Mr. Speaker, this new system of education which I contend for, and in which I think the Nation should assist the various States in establishing by cooperation, is neither radical nor revolutionary. It is the logical extension of the policy which the Government adopted when the act of 1862 was passed. In answer to the arguments of the opponents, that this legislation is a subject for State initiative, my observation has been that the effect of Federal aid has been, not to paralyze or weaken State or local activity and effort for industrial education, but to stimulate to greater exertion. It is safe to say that the passage of a secondary-school bill of the kind which I have mentioned would inaugurate in all these States a movement for practical education which without Federal aid would be long in finding fulfillment. Again, to quote President Fellows, of the Maine University:

> It will take a century to otherwise accomplish throughout the country what may be thoroughly established in five years by means of the assistance proposed in the Davis bill.

Mr. Speaker, the product of our old-time education is often precipitated into a world for which he has been but poorly prepared. We have fostered an education which cultivates tastes in our young people beyond their ability to satisfy, hence they are easily discouraged and discontented with their home surroundings, if living in the country, and flee to the city in the belief and hope of bettering their condition. Most pernicious miscalculation, for these hopes are ofttimes blasted.

The tendency of the old education was, and is, to separate the world of culture from the world of work—to separate the ornamental from the useful. It said in effect that one set of men should do the work and the other have the learning. It fostered the fallacy that there was no relation between the theme of the book and the work to be done. It separated men into two classes, in one class the professional man—the scholar—the man who lives by his wits, and in the other the toiler—the laborer. The new education makes no such separation. It has faith in the democracy of learning, and believes that honest toil, whether performed in field, factory, or home, when properly and intelligently done, is of equal dignity and worth with the work performed in the so-called higher profession, and has a more practical value to society. Labor takes on new dignity when performance of the task is inspired by intelligent effort of mind and soul. Teach the youth to be more proud of the things he can properly do than what he can say, and then contentment is assured. [Applause.]

The new education must prepare the pupil for some specific work. The great need of the country to-day is not more lawyers, more doctors, more professional men, but more skilled toilers, more trained farmers, and more home makers, who will dignify their several vocations by intelligent performance of duty.

The establishment of the land-grant colleges has resulted in the accumulation of a great body of scientific and technical knowledge in the industries that is now in the possession of a few, and the problem presented to-day is how to successfully impart this knowledge to the 5,000,000 boys and girls preparing for rural life and the 10,000,000 boys and girls preparing for city life.

As I said before, one of the most important services these secondary schools of agriculture will perform, will be the education of many young people from whom will be developed a class of teachers who can successfully direct our rural schools. Not only that, but these graduates will be an important factor in rendering country life more attractive. The experience of my own State of Minnesota, and of Nebraska, and other States which have successfully conducted these secondary schools shows that the majority of the graduates actually do go back to the farm. I believe the number in my State is about 70 per cent. Farming, with its maximum financial returns, will never be a realized fact in this country until the science of tilling the soil becomes the possession of the millions who till the soil. It is often said that anyone knows enough to be a farmer, but such is not the case. The science of agriculture in all its branches is as intricate as any other science. Through it alone can nature be induced to yield up its most bounteous treasure.

The correct, the equal and proper distribution of population as between city and country can only be brought about, or at least more easily be brought about, by making country life more attractive through a proper conception of the dignity of the science of agriculture and home making.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, in fact am thoroughly convinced, that our various States are ready and willing to cooperate with the Federal Government in the practical solution of the problem of providing scientific industrial education, and that every dollar invested by the Federal Government in this behalf will be multiplied manyfold by the respective States. Such has been the result in the past, and doubt can not be entertained that the future will do likewise.

Statistics show that the Federal Government has charge of the easy and indirect methods of taxation and secures much more of the people's wealth for public expenditures than do all the States combined. Such being the case, how can Congress better aid the States than by thus returning some of the people's money to them, to be used in promoting and in better supporting the education of the Nation's workers, thus conserving the young men and women of our country, which are our greatest asset?

Finally, Mr. Speaker, in my judgment no institutions are better adapted to build up true American citizenship than our agricultural and mechanical colleges and secondary schools, where literary, ethical, scientific, industrial, and military training are blended into a strong, sensible, inspirational scheme of education. Congress did wisely in establishing them, and as this great Nation grows in power and wealth it should further recognize them and build them up. [Applause.]

NOTED EDUCATORS WHO INDORSE THE DAVIS INDUSTRIAL VOCATIONAL BILL.

Prof. Charles H. Morse, executive officer, Massachusetts, commission on industrial education.
Prof. Thomas H. Hunt, dean of the school of agriculture of the Pennsylvania College.
Hon. J. A. Wilkinson, commissioner of agriculture for Alabama.
Prof. Fassett A. Cotton, State superintendent of public instruction, Indiana.
Hon. William M. Liggett, dean of department of agriculture, St. Paul, Minn.
Dr. George E. Myers, principal of the McKinley Manual Training School, Washington, D. C.
Hon. William F. Hill, master of the State Grange of Pennsylvania.
Prof. H. H. Seerley, president committee on agricultural education of teachers, National Education Association, Iowa State Normal School.
Prof. Kenyon L. Butterfield, president Massachusetts Agricultural College.
Dr. Rufus W. Stimson, president Connecticut Agricultural College.
Prof. P. P. Claxton, president University of Tennessee.
Prof. W. M. Alexander, president National Society for the Promotion of Industrial Education, West Lynn, Mass.
Hon. H. E. Deemer, chief justice Supreme Court of Iowa.
Prof. William Robertston, superintendent of Crookston School of Agriculture and Northwestern Experiment Farm.
Prof. Arthur D. Dean, president Young Men's Christian Association of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, Boston, Mass.
Hon. James J. Hill, former president of Great Northern Railway Co., St. Paul, Minn.
Mason S. Stone, superintendent of education, Vermont.
E. I. Sanderson, New Hampshire Agriculture College, New Hampshire.
W. C. Palmer, Winona Agricultural Institute, Winona Lake, Ind.
E. B. Norris, chairman executive committee, National Grange.
P. H. Mell, president Clemson Agricultural College, South Carolina.
R. A. Moore, University of Wisconsin.
E. W. Lyttle, Albany, N. Y., formerly president of National Educational Association.
W. D. Gibbs, president New Hampshire College of Agriculture.
H. C. Morrison, superintendent public instruction, New Hampshire.
Albert B. Cummins, governor State of Iowa.
John C. Cutler, governor State of Utah.
David S. Simpson, judge district court, Minneapolis, Minn.
J. L. Sheldon, governor State of Nebraska.
E. F. Ladd, food commissioner, North Dakota.
Peter J. Shields, judge superior court, California.
F. B. Lenfield, director Montana Agricultural Experiment Station.
W. M. Munson, West Virginia Experiment Station.
Cyrus W. Northrop, president University of Minnesota.
J. M. Terrell, ex-governor of Georgia.
Fred M. Tisdel, president University of Wyoming.
Charles Schuler, commissioner of agriculture and immigration, Louisiana.
E. J. Watson, commissioner department of agriculture, etc., South Carolina.
W. J. Beal, agricultural college, Michigan.
Horace Edwards, president Rhode Island College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts.
E. A. Jones, State commissioner of common schools, Ohio.
J. C. Hardy, president Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College.
W. M. Holloway, superintendent of educational department, State of Florida.
P. B. Barringer, president Virginia Polytechnic Institution.
J. D. Eggleston, jr., superintendent public instruction, State of Virginia.
President H. C. White, Georgia, chairman executive committee American Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations.
J. W. Olsen, St. Paul, Minn., State superintendent public instruction.
E. W. Randall, dean department of agriculture, University of Minnesota.
Dean C. F. Curtiss, Iowa State College.
Prof. H. A. Morgan, Knoxville, Tenn., dean of agricultural college.
Dr. A. N. Soule, Athens, Ga., president agricultural college.
Dr. Tait Butler, Raleigh, N. C., superintendent farmers' institutes.
Hon. F. A. Derthick, Mantua, Ohio, master State grange.
O. B. Martin, Columbia, S. C., superintendent public instruction.
John M. Stahl, Chicago, Ill., president Farmers' National Congress.
Supt. George McKerrow, superintendent farmers' institutes, Wisconsin.
Dr. H. L. Russell, dean agricultural college, Madison, Wis.
Dr. Wallice Buttrick, secretary general educational board, New York.
Dr. Wycliffe Rose, Knoxville, Tenn., general agent Peabody Fund.
Prof. L. G. Carpenter, Fort Collins, Colo.
Dr. K. C. Davis, director New York School of Agriculture, Canton, N. Y.
Judge James A. Beaver, Bellefonte, Pa., judge superior court of Pennsylvania.
President J. H. Worst, Fargo, N. Dak., president North Dakota Agricultural College.
President George E. Fellows, Orono, Me., president University of Maine.
Dr. N. C. Schaeffer, Harrisburg, Pa., State superintendent of public instruction.
E. C. Bishop, Lincoln, Nebr., State superintendent public instruction.
Judge Peter J. Shields, Sacramento, Cal., judge supreme court.

ORGANIZATIONS INDORSING THE DAVIS BILL.

J. W. L. Corning, president Minnesota State Association of Builders' Exchange.
A. V. Williams, secretary Employers' Association of Minnesota.
National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry.
Allied agricultural organizations of Pennsylvania.
Barnard Club, Providence, R. I.
Commercial Club, Joplin, Mo.
Board of Trade, Newark, N. J.
Chamber of Commerce, Honolulu.
Commercial Club, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.
Commercial Club, Topeka, Kans.
Farmers' National Congress.
Southern States Association of Commissioners of Agriculture and other agricultural workers.
Merchant Tailors' National Protective Association of America.
Commercial Club, Duluth, Minn.
Minnesota State Association of Builders' Exchanges.
State Board of Agriculture, Rhode Island.
Commercial Club, Ardmore, Okla.
California State Grange.
Board of Trade, Camden, N. J.
Commercial Club, Dallas, Tex.
Chamber of Commerce, Erie, Pa.
Business Association, East Liverpool, Ohio.
Chamber of Commerce, Los Angeles, Cal.
Minnesota State Butter and Cheese Makers' Association.
Board of trustees, Georgia agricultural high schools.
Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, Milwaukee, Wis.
Board of Trade, Little Rock, Ark.
Commercial Club, Lewiston, Idaho.
Merchants' Exchange and Board of Trade, Portland, Me.
Chamber of Commerce, Quincy, Ill.
Farmers' State Alliance, North Carolina.
Savannah Cotton Exchange.
Chamber of Commerce, Syracuse, N. Y.
Colorado State Teachers' Association.
Red Wing, Minn., Commercial Club.
Manufacturers' Bureau of Indiana.
Alabama Live Stock Association.
Minnesota State Dairymen's Association.
Eastern Manual Training Association.
National Agricultural Press League.
Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce.
Builders' Exchange, Faribault, Minn.
Board of Education, Erie, Pa.
State Teachers' Association of South Carolina.
Commercial Club, Faribault, Minn.
Alabama State Horticultural Society.
Vermont Schoolmasters' Club.
New York Cotton Exchange.
Minnesota Farmers' Club.
Builders' Exchange, St. Paul, Minn.
Rhode Island League for Rural Progress.
Minnesota Educational Association.
National Society for the Promotion of Industrial Education.

Mr. LEVER. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Fifteen minutes. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] has consumed all of his time. That leaves 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, the City Club of Memphis, Tenn., is an association of thinkers and doers. It is composed of the best men in our great city. It has for its object the building up, beautifying, and uplifting of our city and country. It takes the liveliest interest in all civic and governmental affairs. Since the recent floods on the Mississippi River it has devoted a great deal of time, study, and research to floods and levees. It has had learned lecturers before it, and some time ago it passed a resolution on the Newlands river regulation bill, which resolution, after maturer consideration, it has modified. I have before me a copy of the report of the committee on the subject of levees and the resolution modifying its former utterance on this subject, and the report is such a learned and able one that I think it should go into the RECORD so that the country can have the benefit. I therefore ask unanimous consent that this report and resolution may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

Mr. C. C. HANSON,
President City Club of Memphis.

SIR: The committee on levees and reclamation respectfully reports as follows:

A resolution adopted by the club on May 18, 1912, directed that this committee publish and distribute the address made to the club by Mr. George H. Maxwell on that date, and ask other commercial bodies in Memphis to indorse the Newlands bill for river regulation. After a more thorough study of the Newlands bill than was possible by the members of the club before they voted on the resolution indorsing it, your committee is led to the conclusion that such unqualified indorsement of this bill by the club will at the outset greatly handicap or practically tie the hands of your committee in the performance of its duties.

The matters that are assigned to the attention of the levee and reclamation committee are necessarily of more vital importance to the prosperity of this city and the surrounding country, to which the City Club is committed, than are any one or several other factors. Further than this, the question of flood protection and reclamation is the most vital question to-day with which the entire lower Mississippi Valley has to deal. The alluvial lands on both sides of the Mississippi must be protected from overflow, or the valley will begin a movement of retrogression or at least cease to advance. The adoption of the Maxwell resolution and the unqualified indorsement of the Newlands bill is to say, "The levee system is a failure; we can not depend upon it, and are ready to grasp any vague hope that is held out to us of something better." It is to say to our Representatives in Congress, "You do not know what you are doing in asking Government appropriations for levees specifically. Help Senator NEWLANDS to pass his bill, and we will be saved."

We ask the club not to handicap this committee and our Representatives in any such way. We recommend that the club, in the light of the careful analysis of the Newlands bill which we present below revoke the Maxwell resolution and adopt as a substitute therefor the one which we herewith present.

The Newlands bill provides that a board of river regulation be created, to be composed of—

The Chief of Engineers, United States Army;
The Director of the United States Geological Survey;
The Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry;
The Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution;
One civil engineer;
One sanitary engineer; and
One hydroelectric engineer.

This board shall cooperate with States, municipalities, counties, districts, corporations, persons, etc., in carrying out the purposes of the act, and pay more than half in such cooperation, to secure the highest development and utilization of the waterways and water resources of the United States.

The appropriation of $50,000,000 per year is to be divided as follows:

For building irrigation systems to aid in the regulation of the flow of source streams or navigable rivers	$10,000,000
For the Forest Service, for guarding against and fighting fires, two items	3,000,000
And	1,000,000
For the protection, enlargement, etc., of water supplies by reforestation	1,000,000
For the Smithsonian Institution for study and dissemination of knowledge	1,000,000
For the Bureau of Plant Industry, to maintain garden schools and instruction in irrigation	2,000,000
For the Geological Survey	3,000,000
For the acquisition of forest lands	5,000,000
For the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, for building and maintaining revetments, dikes, walls, levees, embankments, gates, wasteways, by-passes, flood-water canals, restraining dams, impounding basins, and bank-protection works for river regulation, and, as a means to that end, the building of works for reclamation, drainage, and flood protection, and for building reservoirs and artificial lakes and basins for the storage of flood waters to prevent and protect against floods and overflows, etc	24,000,000

You will note that $10,000,000 go to irrigation, $10,000,000 to forestry, and $6,000,000 to surveys, the museum, and a garden school.

The operation of this bill is Nation wide. How much of the remaining $24,000,000 will go to works which will tend to relieve us of overflows? If it all went to building impounding reservoirs it would take 25 years to have available the $600,000,000 that it is estimated would be required to build enough reservoirs to relieve us from flood waters. If half of it should be expended in the entire Mississippi Valley, one-fourth for reservoirs and one-fourth for levees and revetment, we would possibly in 100 years have an effectual reservoir system if enough suitable sites can be found. Meanwhile, we would get the same sum annually for levees and revetment that the present appropriation carries just passed by the two Houses of Congress.

Since the operation of the Newlands bill appropriation terminates in 10 years, the reservoirs would be one-tenth built. It is probable that the irrigation and forest land interests, with $200,000,000 expended, would be in better shape than this. But under provision of this bill it is contemplated that the Government will only pay one-half the cost of any work. If the $600,000,000 is ever expended in building reservoirs, and if those with partnership interest must volunteer to pay $300,000,000 of it, it is a safe prediction that three-fourths of the $600,000,000 will never be spent.

Those reservoirs that might be built would doubtless be owned partly by water-power companies, who would always have the reservoirs as near full as they could keep them, reducing to a minimum their available capacity to retain flood waters.

The subject which we are most interested in at the present time is the protection from overflows of the valley lands. The circulars and papers distributed hold out the alluring idea that this protection is to be furnished by levees supplemented by a system of comprehensive storage reservoirs in the headwaters of the tributaries of the Mississippi River.

This question of storage of water for the double purpose of preventing floods and assisting navigation was pretty well thrashed out 14 years ago in the investigations carried out by the Senate Committee on Commerce in the year following the disastrous floods of 1897.

Active in the investigation in examining witnesses were NELSON, of Minnesota; Catchings, of Mississippi; Berry, of Arkansas; Maj. Harrod, of New Orleans. Several hundred pages of printed testimony on the subject, with maps, hydrographs, etc., may be found in Senate Report No. 1433, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session.

The principal contributors were Prof. Willis L. Moore, of the United States Weather Bureau; Mr. Ockerson, of St. Louis, for 20 years previously employed on the Mississippi River surveys and studies under the Mississippi River Commission (he is at present a member of that commission); Maj. Dabney, then, as now, chief engineer of the Yazoo-Mississippi (upper) Levee Board; Maj. William Starling; Mr. Pillsbury, of Minneapolis, of flour and lumber fame; and some United States engineers on the upper Mississippi River improvements.

To condense the testimony of these witnesses into short sentences, Mr. Pillsbury claimed that the five reservoirs above St. Paul had helped conditions by improving logging operations and river traffic; but did not attach much importance to the river traffic, as not more than 1 per cent of his flour traffic was water borne.

The engineer estimated that navigation was improved for a short period above Lake Pepin, but that the effect was wholly lost below that point. All available sites had been developed within reasonable cost.

Maj. Dabney estimated that to protect the lower central valley subject to overflow it would be necessary to submerge an area equal to the State of Wisconsin.

Prof. Moore testified that nothing happens west of Fort Smith nor north of Keokuk, Iowa, to affect materially the flood conditions of the Lower Mississippi on account of the extreme lightness of the precipitation. He told how the watersheds, where the damaging rains actually occur, had been literally ransacked for 30 years to locate any suitable place for the storage of flood waters. The only possible location he had to suggest was the upper portion of the St. Francis Basin.

Mr. Ockerson testified that to keep the discharge of the Mississippi River below 1,000,000 cubic feet per second at Cairo, Ill., there would have to be diverted in all of the large floods sufficient water to cover 6,000 square miles to a depth of 10 feet, or 11 cubic miles of water, and he also suggested the St. Francis Basin for this, if it were to be taken up, 175 miles north and south by an average of 30 miles east and west; but since this area slopes or falls 120 feet in the distance, cross divisions would be required to keep the water from all flowing out at the lower end of the basin. The spillways for passing the water down were estimated to need a width of 5 miles, by 5 feet deep, flowing at usual velocity.

Well did the committee close its paragraph on "Reservoirs" in its report thus: "The scheme is regarded by nearly all committees and other experts as wholly impracticable. In short, your committee can discover no just or adequate relief in reservoirs."

In the Pittsburgh plan of reservoir construction, 17 reservoirs proposed for early construction, to afford partial relief to their present conditions, are estimated to contain 59,481,400,000 cubic feet of water, and the estimated cost is $21,672,100.

Now, 59,481,400,000 cubic feet is only 0.4 of 1 cubic mile, and to store 11 cubic miles would require approximately 27 times the capacity of those 17 reservoirs. Unless more favorable sites and cheaper storage capacity can be found, the Maxwell idea points toward an expenditure of about $600,000,000.

Your committee believes that the lesson of the recent high water is that levees properly built according to the best engineering advice and practice are a success, and not a failure. Nearly all breaks occurred in levees that were practically overtopped. These levees had never been built to the adopted standard grade because of lack of money to complete them. Those levees that were built to standard grade and section did not break. Such levees required attention in some places because of sand boils, due to seepage through porous strata underneath.

The first necessity is to build the levee high enough and wide enough. Levee engineers and the highest authorities of the United States Weather Bureau agree that had there been no breaks the 1912 water would not have gone above 48 on the Memphis gauge, or 3 feet higher than it did go.

It is possible to have a greater volume of water to resist, but for any assumption that shall be made as to the highest water that we should provide for, a levee can be built so high and strong as to resist it with perfect success at much less cost than the same water can be provided for in any other way. You can build all levees 2 feet higher and correspondingly wider for within one-tenth the cost of building any other works that will reduce the flood stage 2 feet. If your assumption as to the volume of water to provide for is too small, the reservoirs or other works built to provide for it will fail much more surely than would levees fail if built with the same factor of safety.

That there is a reasonable limit to the necessary height of levees is emphasized by the agreement of authorities above referred to that this year's water would not have gone above 48 at Memphis. To hold this water, the levees generally in this section should be raised an average of 5 or 6 feet.

In 1,720 miles of levee in the lower St. Francis and all districts on both sides of the river below Memphis there were 9 miles of breaks. Of the entire 1,720 miles of levee 99½ per cent stood intact against a stage of water much higher than it was designed to withstand.

Your committee recognizes that after the building of the levees high and strong enough it is of the greater importance to their stability that the seepage underneath shall be prevented or minimized; and while the details as to the best methods of accomplishing this are engineering questions, which they are not prepared to solve conclusively, they belive that in isolated cases that are especially aggravated some form of sheet piling might be advantageously used, and that at other places the principles of increased base width and of sublevees, which have been very successfully used in some of the districts, should be applied.

Your committee justifies its position by a reference to the highest authorities, whom they have studied carefully, to wit:

Humphrey and Abbott's report; Thomas and Watt; Maj. Chittenden; testimony before Senate committee, 1898; report of Board of United States Engineers on deepening channel, 1909; Engineering News, editorials; a careful study of the existing grades in their relation to the standard grades in the several levee districts and of the levee heights and sections at the several breaks.

C. C. PASHBY, Chairman.
A. L. DABNEY.
ELLIOTT LANG.

—

Resolution.

Whereas, on May 18, 1912, this club was addressed by the Hon. George H. Maxwell, executive director of the Pittsburgh flood commission, on matters covered by the Newlands river-regulation bill; and

Whereas a resolution of unqualified indorsement of said bill was passed on that date by this club; and

Whereas the levee and reclamation committee (a special committee appointed by this club and charged with the duty of securing indorsements of this bill from the other civic and business organizations in this city), after careful study of the Newlands bill, the literature placed in the hands of the committee, the speeches by Senator NEWLANDS and others in Congress, the Government reports, and a wide range of technical writings on the subject treated, comes and requests a reconsideration by this club of its former indorsement: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this club thanks Mr. Maxwell for the scholarly presentation of his interpretation of the provisions of the Newlands bill; and be it further

Resolved, That while this bill possesses many admirable features, such as its provisions for irrigation, reforestation, and the drainage of swamp lands capable of being drained and cultivated, as a whole it is Utopian in its character and does not differentiate between public improvements to which the United States Government has already committed itself by many years of substantial assistance and such projects as impounding of waters for the purpose of flood prevention which have been almost universally rejected by the engineering profession, and which alone would require far in excess of the whole funds set apart in the division of the bill where reservoirs are authorized; and be it further

Resolved, That this club does hereby qualify its indorsement of the Newlands bill by requesting its amendment by striking out all provisions for the construction of levees, constructing artificial lakes, basins, or reservoirs for the single purpose of impounding flood waters, constructing by-passes, flood-water canals, waterways, and other devices intended to divert the waters of streams for flood protection; and be it further

Resolved, That this club recognizes in the levee system of the lower Mississippi River a system of flood protection which has become standard practice the world over by reason of centuries of successful application; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the lower Mississippi Valley States are hereby urged to give their first and untiring attention to the passage by Congress of a bill which shall commit the United States Government to cooperate with the States or levee districts to the extent of a definite obligation to bear at least half the cost in each district, of building the levees to an early completion, and to the building of a general system of bank revetment, with an appropriation of $8,000,000 per year for 10 years, one-half to be used for revetment, for which the Government shall bear the entire cost, and one-half for levees to be paid for by the Government and the districts or States jointly; and that the present status of the Mississippi River Commission be left unchanged, and that all commercial bodies in the lower valley be requested through the press to indorse this policy; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted to other civic and business bodies in this city, to all Senators and Representatives in Congress from the lower Mississippi Valley, to the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, and to the press of Memphis.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD].

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, a great campaign is pending, one involving mighty interests to the country and the great body of the people. I desire to place in brief compass my view of the principal candidates for the Presidency and the parties which are contending for the control of this Government for the next four years.

In doing this I desire that what I shall say shall be preceded by an account of the reception that the news of Gov. Wilson's nomination for the Presidency was received in the town of his birth by a speech which was made on that occasion by one of his early friends and schoolfellows. Gov. Wilson was born in Staunton, Va., the Queen City of the beautiful Shenandoah Valley; a land so beautiful that we can imagine God smiled upon it and that smile crystallized on the landscape; a land rich in memories, rich in material resources, and rich in the splendid character of its people.

I now send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the account of the demonstration in Staunton upon the reception of the news of Gov. Wilson's nomination:

The Clerk read as follows:

[The New York Sun, July 7, 1912.]

Nowhere was the nomination of Woodrow Wilson as the Democratic candidate for President of the United States received with greater enthusiasm than at Staunton, Va. Of course, the enthusiasm is accounted for by the fact that Gov. Wilson was born there. People at Staunton remember him as a boy and as a young man. They also recall his father, the Rev. Joseph Ruggles Wilson, who was for a time minister of the Presbyterian Church at Staunton.

The Rev. Dr. A. M. Fraser, who has charge of the church now and who lives in the manse in which Woodrow Wilson was born, was a schoolmate of Wilson's at Davidson College in North Carolina when Wilson was a youth of 16. He describes Wilson as not overstudious, popular with the student body, fond of reading and of outdoor sports, especially of baseball, at which game he was especially expert.

On Tuesday night, when the news of Wilson's nomination by the Democratic convention at Baltimore reached Staunton, a crowd gathered around the Fraser home and called on Dr. Fraser for a speech on Woodrow Wilson. What Dr. Fraser said is of special interest as showing how Gov. Wilson impressed his friends as a young man. Dr. Fraser said, among other things:

"This occasion does not call for a political speech. It is merely a time of rejoicing and mutual congratulation that one who was born in this town and in this house has been set before the world as the chosen standard bearer of a great party. I offer you my congratulations, fellow citizens, upon this notable occasion in our history.

"We do not misunderstand each other. We do not rejoice merely because Woodrow Wilson was born in Staunton nor because he is a Democrat, but we are elated beyond all expression that one who was born in our town and has party affiliation with us has proved himself before all the world to be so eminently capable and worthy to be the Chief Magistrate of this Nation. If he had been chosen to this honor and had been incompetent to be a President we would have hung our heads in mortification at the thought that he was a native of our town. If having received the honor he had been unworthy of it, we would have hidden our faces in shame at the mention of his having been born here. But it is because he is both capable and worthy that we are proud to acclaim him a native of our city.

"We have many good reasons for our admiration for Gov. Wilson. We admire him because of his scholarly mastery of the science of government. We have no sympathy with the snarl at the 'schoolmaster in politics.' Some people seem to think it an intolerable impertinence for a man who knows the subject of government in a thorough and scientific way, knows it in the light of history and in its application to modern economic conditions, to take any part in the practical management of affairs. Our enthusiasm for Gov. Wilson is our protest against that view.

"We admire him also because of his lofty character, his ideals of political honor and the gracious dignity, self-respect, and independence he has shown under the powerful strain that has been upon him. Most of you know that I was associated with him when he was a boy in his teens. I testify now that he was laying the foundation of that sort of character then.

"He was a manly youth, genial and fun-loving, but of decided religious conduct, and pure in his conversation. I do not recall that I ever heard him say anything that he might not have said anywhere. I must express the gratification I feel at the fact that you seem to have caught the influence of the man in your celebration to-night. Your demonstrations have been joyous and wild, and I have gone the full length with you in my feelings, yet I have not observed anything unbecoming or that he would disapprove, and I trust it may be so to the end.

"Again, we admire him for the way he has of getting what he goes after. You have heard the story of Gov. Wilson and Gov. Glenn when they played baseball together at college. Glenn, who was captain of the team, said to Wilson:

"'Wilson, you would make a first rate baseball player if you were not so lazy.'

"You will bear me out in the sentiment that on the political diamond on which Gov. Wilson has been playing of late there is no grass growing. He has made a good batter in political life. He has so far made every base he has run for, and we believe he will make a home run for the White House in November.

"I claim the honor of having made the first speech in the campaign of Gov. Wilson for the Presidency. The first Wilson Club was organized in Staunton. As soon as the organization was effected the club asked me to make some remarks, as I have known the candidate at college. I did make a brief speech. That was the first one I have any knowledge of. And now, up to the present time, I have made also the last speech in the campaign.

"I deeply sympathize with the feeling that has led this great crowd to come and pay its respects to this house in which Woodrow Wilson was born. The room to my right is his birth chamber. It is the place where he drew his first breath of free American air and where he gave his first Democratic yell."

Gov. Wilson was born at Staunton on December 28, 1856. In the early fifties Gov. Wilson's father was pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Staunton, a very old town as age goes in America, but of only a few thousand population before the Civil War. The elder Wilson is only remembered by the eldest inhabitants. In the minute book of Lexington Presbytery he is entered as pastor of the Staunton charge from March, 1855, to October, 1857, at which time he removed with his family to Augusta, Ga.

There were only three children born to the Wilsons, one son, Woodrow, and two daughters, Annie, wife of the late Dr. George Howe, of Columbia, S. C., and Marion, deceased wife of Dr. Ross Kennedy, of Little Rock, Ark.

After the Wilson family moved to Georgia Staunton saw little of any of them until young Wilson's college days at the University of Virginia, when he had grown to young manhood and frequently visited Staunton. The chief attraction that Staunton held then, as now, to the young men of the Virginia schools was the girls' schools, chiefly the Presbyterian Seminary, now the Mary Baldwin Seminary, one of the largest schools for girls in the South. One of the buildings of the present institution formed the church in which young Wilson's father held his services during his pastorate here.

Young Wilson first went to college at Davidson, N. C. Later he changed to the University of Virginia, at Charlottesville, about 40 miles from Staunton. There he studied law.

During his university days he was a frequent visitor to Staunton, his chief object being, as he himself expressed it later in life, to see his "fair cousins" at the Mary Baldwin Seminary. No college man in those days, or in these either for that matter, could pass the portals of the seminary unless he were at least a cousin of the young woman he wished to visit, so strict were the rules in regard to callers.

From the university he returned South and practiced law several years before entering Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore, whence he entered upon his literary and educational career which brought him prominently before the public, made him president of Princeton, governor of New Jersey, and the Democratic nominee for President.

Staunton has seen little of Gov Wilson since those early days, but the town is as proud of his achievements as though he had spent his whole life there. Just as soon as he was elected governor of New Jersey city officials and personal friends wired their congratulations, and the following night the Staunton Woodrow Wilson Club, to boom Wilson for the Democratic Presidential nomination, was formed. The charter membership numbered over a hundred. Peyton Cochran, a graduate of the University of Virginia and of Princeton while Wilson was president of that university, is the president of this club, which is said to be the first and only original Woodrow Wilson club in the United States. Mr. Cochran was one of Wilson's most active supporters in the Virginia delegation at Baltimore.

Staunton has played a rather prominent part in Wilson's campaign for the Presidential nomination. On the occasion of his speech to the Virginia Legislature last spring Staunton sent a band of several hundred men to whoop things up for him. The town also gave him an instructed delegation from city and county to the State convention, fought valiantly but unsuccessfully for an instructed delegation from Virginia, and sent a crowd of Wilson rooters with an enormous orange and black banner to Baltimore. These rooters tried to place their banner on the stage of the convention, and the scrap that followed formed part of the convention.

Following the big demonstration in Staunton the night that Wilson was nominated a Wilson banner was strung across the principal business street of the city. This was many hours before Gov. Thomas R. Marshall, of Indiana, was nominated for second place on the Democratic ticket. Yet the next morning Staunton awoke to the fact that the banner by a curious coincidence united the drug stores of the Messrs. Wilson, on one side of the street, and W. C. Marshall on the other. They now have it "Wilson and Marshall, druggists and Presidents."

Druggist Marshall picked Wilson and Marshall as the winners months ago and sent them each a Virginia fairy stone, which is looked upon as an omen of the best of luck. The story goes that one of these stones has been sent to every President of the United States except Lincoln, Garfield, and McKinley, and including Theodore Roosevelt. Mr. Marshall in writing the Indiana executive called attention especially to the latter's good luck, which was then at its zenith. The governor wrote back that he hoped the stone would "neutralize the mixture in American politics." Staunton hopes it will do that and more.

After leaving Staunton the next period of Gov. Wilson's childhood was passed at Augusta, Ga. There his father established a reputation as a forcible and fearless preacher. The boy was a precocious youngster. His Scotch-Irish strain insured to him a vigorous constitution, and he was always mentally active.

It was not until he was 9 years old, however, that he was taught his alphabet, and then he was sent to school. He was placed in the care of Prof. Joseph T. Derry, who kept a private school, and there he had as a schoolmate Associate Justice of the Supreme Court Joseph R. Lamar.

In the meantime, however, the Civil War had been begun and young Wilson's father had sided with the southern cause. Of these dark days Gov. Wilson has often said he recalls but little. One incident that made such an impression on him that he never forgot it was the meeting of two men in front of his father's house and the startling announcement by one of them that Lincoln had been elected and there would surely be war. He was then a boy of 4.

He has never forgotten the day that Jefferson Davis was taken through Augusta as a prisoner on his way to Fort Monroe. This happened when he was 9.

Young Wilson was popular with his playmates and was known by them as a good fellow. He was full of nervous energy. He learned to ride a horse at an early age and often galloped along the roads of Augusta on the back of an old nag that his father was in the habit of driving when he made his pastoral calls.

As the boy Tommie—he was christened Thomas Woodrow Wilson—Gov. Wilson was recognized as a chum of his father. They were together much of the time, especially after the church service on Sunday afternoons, which they almost invariably spent together. The clergyman frequently took his boy on trips through the city, visiting manufacturing plants, and the youth was always extremely interested in his father's explanation of things that are not always gleaned from books.

Dr. Wilson had a faculty of describing things as he saw them that made an impression on his son's mind, and many of the allusions which Gov. Wilson has made in his campaign speeches to the operators of great industrial plants and the men who make the wheels go around are first-hand impressions obtained on these trips with his father in his boyhood days.

At the age of 14 Wilson moved with his parents to Columbia, S. C., and buckled down to preparing himself to enter college.

In the fall of 1873—he was then 17—Wilson was admitted to the Presbyterian College at Davidson, N. C. He became ill before finishing the first year's course and returned to his home at Wilmington, N. C., where his father had been called to the Presbyterian Church.

His liking for ships and things of the sea, which developed when he was a small boy, made the port of Wilmington very fascinating, and he spent many hours a week idling along the water front and listening to the tales of sailor folk. It was here for the first time in his life that Wilson manifested a liking for social events.

For a year he dreamed and brushed up on Latin and Greek, and in the fall of 1875 he went to Princeton. He didn't hide his light under a bushel, and it wasn't long before he became a conspicuous figure in his class, but not, however, as a student. At his graduation he was the forty-first man in his class.

The members of the class of '79 recall Wilson as a young man with a liking for political science and a great interest in things political, who gave up as much of his time as he could spare from his studies in fitting himself for the thing that he seemed to like the best.

While at college Wilson learned shorthand, and had the advantage over some of his classmates whom he engaged in debate by making stenographic notes of points made by them.

Gov. Wilson was married in 1885 to Miss Helen Louise Axson, of Savannah, Ga. Mrs. Wilson is intensely interested in her husband's career and is said to know as much about inside politics as many of the cleverest politicians in the country. She doesn't like publicity.

The governor has three daughters—Margaret, Jessie, and Eleanor—each of whom has her own particular hobby. Miss Margaret Wilson is 26, and bears a strong resemblance to her father. She is a musician. Miss Jessie Wilson is 25 and is devoted to settlement and religious work. Miss Eleanor Wilson, who is 21, inherited her mother's liking for things artistic, and is a student at the Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia.

Gov. Wilson retained Princeton as his home town after giving up the presidency of Princeton University to become governor of New Jersey. He moved from the president's house to a fine residence in Cleveland Lane. The home life of the Wilsons is ideal, and the governor has often said he is never happier than when he is permitted to escape from the affairs of state to enjoy the society of his family.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. There can be no doubt that Gov. Woodrow Wilson will be the next President of the United States. There can be no doubt that the people of this country prefer him to the swashbuckling Ananias who is leading the Progressive Party or the ponderous and inefficient candidate of the Republican Party. There can be no doubt that the people of this country prefer the conservative progressiveness of the Democratic Party to the reactionary policies of the Republican Party or the extreme radical declarations of the "Bull Moose" Party.

Broadly speaking, the three parties present the following programs:

(1) The Republican Party promises that its historical policies, methods, and alliances shall remain unchanged.

(2) The Roosevelt party engages to destroy government as now established and to create a new system operated by direct popular control and based upon socialistic and communistic principles.

(3) The Democratic Party pledges a restoration of popular rule, not by the destruction of representative government, but by a reformation of those agencies and methods by the use of which the Republican Party has wrested representative government from its true functions and made it subject to secret influences and the servant of special interests.

The maxim that we shall have a government of law instead of men is true in the sense that the popular will as expressed in laws and institutions should prevail rather than the uncontrolled discretion of individuals. But in another sense government, in its practical results, takes its color and form from the men who control it—the men who make laws, interpret laws, and administer laws. No wisdom in framing institutions can safeguard the future against the corruption or inefficiency of those who actually govern. The value of the human element in government is the greatest factor in the equation. As Gov. Wilson has pointed out, inasmuch as our Government consists of three great functions, balanced against each other, and subject to no common, affirmative control, there must be some organization outside the Government to give coherence and direction to the action of political forces. This organization is a political party which by the pressure of its discipline and because of its control of the personnel of the branches of government draws the great functions into agreement and system. In this country some party must actually govern, and in the degree that the dominant party is responsive to popular will and popular needs, to that degree exactly we will have popular government. For many years the Republican Party has been in fact the National Government. From its extraconstitutional, but none the less its real seat of power, it has through its agents dictated laws, administered them, and in effect performed all the functions of government. What has been written in the statute books, they have written; what has been done, they have done; what has been omitted, they have failed to do.

So far as any government can be responsible for present conditions, they are responsible. Have they governed for the common good or with common counsel? Have they not made secret and sinister alliances with those who desired to exploit public law for private gain? Have they not so used this large power that our Government is now notoriously out of adjustment with the needs of the people, and has been used to create conditions that are hostile to the well-being of the masses? Have they not brought the Government of our fathers to such a pass that many honest men actually think that the Government itself must be changed in its most fundamental conceptions?

This campaign presents a choice of parties and a choice of candidates who in an unusual degree personify their party.

President Taft, by conviction and temperament, stands for the old Republican régime. What Bourbon ever lolled on the thrones of France or Spain who learned less or forgot less than has Taft since he began his political career? To him the furtive and profitable alliance between big business and big politics is natural and commendable. He believes that the people's affairs are best administered by trustees who are permitted by law to filch the estates of their wards.

Ex-President Roosevelt offers the candidacy of a man who, with the Republican Party for seven years, was in complete control of the National Government. According to his own confession he steered the ship of state upon the shoals, and now says that the fault was not with him, but the ship itself—that the ship must be torn to pieces and rebuilt upon fundamentally different plans and then put under his permanent command.

The nomination of Gov. Wilson has given confidence to his party and hope to the country. His wide vision, his extraordinary acquirement, and his acute insight into the heart of economic and political problems, makes him the foremost interpreter of the eager and insistent popular desire for better conditions. In the administration of government the country will not only have the benefit of his supreme ability, but holding up his hands and carrying into effect his program of reform will stand the Democratic Party, now restored to its ancient significance and performing its historic functions.

Methods and policies of government can not be changed without the defeat of the now dominant party. No reform can be accomplished as long as the Republican Party is in power, because even if Taft was not himself hopelessly entangled in all the abuses which are so gross and have lasted so long that many people have lost confidence in the very principle of representative government, he could work no good thing with the Republican Party as his instrument, because its personnel is composed of the innumerable filaments of privilege, which bind it irrevocably to the service of special interests. Taft might harangue the worshipers, but the oracle would always be worked by the Aldriches and the Penroses. It is not possible that the Nation can at this time find any serviceable instrument of reform except the Democratic Party under the leadership of Gov. Wilson.

Among the constituents of the Democratic Party there are few whose privileges will be taken away by measures of reform. It does not owe anything to the sinister influences which, for their own purposes, have so long administered government in the name of the Republican Party.

The thing that most concerns the electorate is the spirit and purpose with which the Democratic Party, under its great leader, now seeks power and responsibility.

It is their purpose, as Gov. Wilson has set forth, to apply the rule of right, to take common counsel with all the people, to discard all that is furtive and indirect.

In such spirit and purpose all of our problems can be solved and the threads of true democracy woven into the Government of our complex civilization. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON] is recognized for eight minutes.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, I have not to a great extent imposed my views on this House during my service here. I am very much gratified at the legislation that has been passed by this House. I have aided in my feeble way in the passage of many bills that I believe will be of great benefit to the masses of the people.

When the Lever bill was first caled to my attention, the suggestion was that it would increase the amount of money to be appropriated by the Federal Government for the extension of agricultural educationnl work throughout the country, and I said I was in favor of the bill. But, after examining its provisions, I have reached the deliberate conclusion that there are many dangerous features in it—that is, if we are in favor of the present methods of farm demonstration work. It can not be questioned that the cooperative demonstration work, as carried on by the Department of Agriculture, has been of great value and will be of lasting benefit to the people.

Now, this bill proposes to change the present methods. That is all there is to it. I propose to offer amendments to section 2 of the bill. I challenge any Member on the floor of this House and the author of the bill, if he now favors the present method of farm demonstration work, to oppose these amendments. If he does, he proposes to strike down our present methods. I will offer these amendments and ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment will be reported. The gentleman from South Carolina reserves the point of order on the amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. BLACKMON. I propose to offer two amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Let the Clerk read them.

Mr. BLACKMON. I would not like to have that time taken out of my allo.ment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They should be read; otherwise the amendments can not be pending.

Mr. BLACKMON. Then I will have them read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendments offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, section 2, lines 14 and 15, by striking out the word "communities" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "counties of such State."

Amend, section 2, line 18, by striking out the period after the word "otherwise" and adding the following: "Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed or held to in any wise interfere with the demonstration work now being conducted by the Department of Agriculture of the United States of America and known as the 'Farmers' cooperative demonstration work.'"

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order on those amendments.

Mr. BLACKMON. Now, Mr. Speaker, during the service I have had here I have seen gentlemen make great protestations and air their views and express their deep love for the farmers. I have never done that myself. I was reared on the farm, and I am proud of it. But I find that gentlemen who make such great professions of devotion to the farmers offer, when it comes down to brass tacks, new schemes of doubtful value. Our present work is admitted to be of value. The State from which I come and from which comes the distinguished leader of the majority [Mr. UNDERWOOD] in the last year produced a yield of corn amounting to twenty million-odd bushels over any previous annual yield, and this proportion applies to all other crops. Now we propose to change the present methods of instruction. We propose to turn it over to the colleges. I am not a college man myself, but I appreciate the advantages to be obtained from a college education. But if you destroy this work, I do not believe that that great institution in Alabama—Auburn, one of the great institutions of the country—can improve on this work that is being carried on by the farmers themselves through our present methods. I have not the slightest objection to this bill if you will incorporate an amendment providing that it shall not interfere with the work that is now being carried on.

I am glad to see the agricultural schools get an additional appropriation, and it will no doubt be well spent; but I do oppose and shall always oppose a provision to take from the farmers, who know what they are about, anything that they now have. I have very little respect for a newspaper farmer; I have very little respect for a man who sits in his office or sits in the shade and undertakes to tell me when I am out in the field how to do my work. I do not believe he can do it. So this is the proposition. I make the prediction now that if this bill is enacted into law in four years farm demonstration work as it is now conducted will be a thing of the past. A professor of a college might write a splendid bulletin. He might deliver a splendid lecture on the best and most improved methods of farming, but I say that the method that we now have, where a man goes out into the field with the farmer and stays there in the hot sun and goes through the work with him, that this is a better method than to have a man sit in his office and write a letter or a bulletin telling how to do it.

I propose in the amendment that I shall offer to section 2 that the provisions of this bill shall in no way interfere with our present system, and I say to the author of the bill and I say to gentlemen on the floor that unless you are in favor of cutting down and destroying our present method, then you will support the amendment. [Applause.]

Of course, in eight minutes it is impossible to discuss an important matter of this kind. For that reason I opposed this bill being brought up at this time.

I would have liked very much to point out in my feeble way other serious objections that I have to this bill, but my limited time will not permit me to do so.

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

[Mr. FINLEY addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BOWMAN. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the pending bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss].

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, if there is any one thing connected with my life that I am proud of beyond another, it is the fact that I was not only born upon a farm, but that I have lived upon that farm all of my life. The place of my birth is my present home. Whatever education I received above that of the common school was received in our State agricultural college. Hence by environment and by study the question of agricultural education has been ever an active factor in my life, and I believe that agricultural education is the greatest question before this Nation. More than that, Mr. Speaker, I am willing to declare my belief that the acquirement of an agricultural education is a most abstruse and complex labor. In agricultural education you have to do not only with the forces of nature, but you are dealing with the germs of life, both vegetable and animal life. No man has ever fully comprehended the mystery which we call life; nor has fully understood the law of its nutrition, but I am not going to discuss that question on the floor to-night. I wish to deal more particularly with the subject in hand—the consideration of the Lever bill.

Mr. Speaker, it is the fashion of the hour in the discussion of economic questions to assert that the ingenuity of man has solved the problem of the creation of wealth, and that our trouble is that we have failed in devising any method whereby society is assured of an equitable distribution of the wealth which the labor of man has produced. So deeply is this assumption rooted and grounded in popular belief that political parties have been formed with this assumption as the basic plank in their confession of faith. The men who make this profession belong to that class who worship manufacturing as a national idol, and who can see in the strength of a steam engine the energy to create national wealth. What is a workshop except a place where the life energy of men is expended in changing one form of wealth which has been produced by man's labor into different forms of the same material? There is no machine yet invented which can create something out of nothing, and thus truly add to the total sum of our national wealth. To find such a manufacturing enterprise you must seek the farm, the great laboratory where the eternal energy of the Creator is at work as busily in this age as in the first six days of the beginning. The mine and quarry are but sources where we may find a limited store of hidden wealth, but when the supply is once exhausted there can be no further additions to man's comfort from these industries, but in the soil we find an unlimited source of national wealth—the one place in all the earth where Christ still feeds the multitude by miracle. The heat of the sun, the moisture of the clouds, and the nitrogen of the air are not more eternal than is the productivity of the soil. The fields which fed the Roman soldiers in their long marches around the world are to-day yielding to the needs of their owners more liberally than they did centuries ago, and so far as the human mind can foretell will continue to feed the multitude for unnumbered ages yet to come. The great primary needs of man—food, clothing, and shelter—are products of the soil, and the goodness of God to His children is strikingly shown in His decrees that their production shall be unlimited and inexhaustible, so that it is man's crime if a single human being shall go hungry, ill clad, or poorly housed.

Asserting, then, with confidence, Mr. Speaker, that the soil is the true source of national wealth, it naturally follows that no nation can master the production of wealth until that people shall have been able to obtain the maximum yield from the soil of its domain; nor can a plenitude of the necessities of life be assured to any people except that they increase the productivity of the soil in due proportion to the increase of the prime needs of their population. These truths are so elementary, Mr. Speaker, that a mere statement of them establishes their verity. It remains only to show that we are not meeting these requirements as a Nation to establish a cause for the uneasiness and unrest which is so plainly manifest among our people and to make it our imperative duty to enact this pending measure into law.

As a nation we have made rapid advances in every calling except that of farming, and have demonstrated the efficiency of American endeavor in every industry except that of agriculture. The national averages of England and Germany in agriculture are more than double that of our Nation, and yet their fields were under cultivation for centuries before the ship was builded which landed Columbus on our shores. Corn is our great national grain crop, and so perfectly is our soil and climate adapted to the growth of this giant grass that we produce 75 per cent of the world's crop of this great cereal. We have statistics for a period of only 40 years as to our production of this crop, but within that time our average has fallen from 26.2 bushels per acre to 25.4 bushels. We have apparently about reached the maximum acreage which can be devoted to corn growing, as the acreage in 1909 was but 3.7 per cent greater than it was in 1899, while the total production was actually less. This decline in yield of corn—0.8 bushel per acre—if computed at current prices, means a net annual loss to the Nation of $50,000,000, while if our average yield had been regularly increased one-fourth of 1 per cent per year, or 10 per cent in the 40 years, our national wealth would have been increased last year in the vast sum of $170,000,000. In 30 years Belgium by a national campaign of education has added 14 bushels to her national average yield of wheat; in 40 years, under our educational methods, we have added 1.8 bushels to our national yield. If we had advanced as rapidly in 40 years in wheat culture as Belgium did in 30, our national income would have been increased in the sum of $600,000,000 last year. If some method of extracting a billion of dollars annually from the rocks of our hills could be invented, it would usher in a golden era in the life of our Nation, yet a truly progressive system of national agriculture would add more than a billion dollars per year to our national income.

It is time that plain words be spoken about this subject. Our orators speak eloquently about the great results which flow from our present system of agricultural education. I call for the proofs. The record from our national census proves that our yields are stationary or are declining per acre in all standard crops. The census year of 1909 shows a lower yield per acre in corn, oats, and barley than the census year of 1899, while wheat, rye, and buckwheat give increases—but the year of 1899 was an abnormally low yield in both wheat and rye. Thus compared with normal yields, there would be an increase in buckwheat alone during a period of 10 years in the life of our Nation.

During this 10-year period, while our total population increased 21 per cent, the farm population decreased. No further back than 1880 we were a nation of farmers; now we are a nation of city dwellers. In 1880, 70.5 per cent of our population was rural; 7 out of 10 lived on farms and in the country; in 1910 but 53.7 per cent of our people lived in country homes. The result of these changes is that while our total population increased 21 per cent between 1900 and 1910, our acreage of all cereal crops increased but 3.5 per cent, and the actual yield in 1909 was but 1.6 per cent greater than it was 10 years before, in 1899. If we make this calculation per capita, it means that our national production in cereals has fallen in 10 years from 58.4 bushels per capita to 49.1 bushels per capita.

This reduction in our production per capita is a most important fact, yet it is coupled with an increased consumption per capita, so that the candle is burning at both ends. In 1880 our per capita production of wheat was 9.2 bushels and our consumption was 3.59 bushels, leaving a free surplus of 5.61 bushels. In 1910 our production of wheat had fallen to 7.4

bushels per capita while our consumption had risen to 6.48 bushels per capita, leaving a free surplus of only 0.92 bushel per capita. The statistics as to corn tell a similar story. In 1880 we produced 34.9 bushels per capita and our consumption was 17.9 bushels, leaving a free surplus of 17 bushels per capita. In 1910 our production had fallen to 27.7 bushels per capita while our consumption had risen to 27.3 bushels per capita, leaving a free surplus of 0.4 bushel per capita. In proof of the accuracy of these remarkable figures, I submit the exports of both wheat and corn for the year 1910 as given me by the Bureau of Statistics. Exports of wheat (combining flour in terms of bushels of wheat), 87,364,214 bushels; corn, 36,802,374 bushels. These figures almost exactly agree with the sums of the free surpluses of these two great crops as given in the above calculations.

During this census period in the State of Indiana we lost population in 56 counties out of a total of 92. There was a loss in population in every strictly agricultural county in the State. Benton County is conceded to be the first agricultural county in our State. The average price of land in this county is given in the Federal census as being over $100 per acre. If there is one spot above another in Indiana where the agricultural population should be well satisfied it would be in this great agricultural county. When I was a student in Purdue University this county was principally an unreclaimed swamp; now it is thoroughly drained and improved; yet the loss in farm population in this modern Garden of Eden was 3.3 per cent for the last census period. The same story is repeated in every other prime agricultural county in the State.

Since the days of Abraham every agricultural nation has estimated its wealth by taking a census of its cattle. During the last census period our cattle decreased 6,500,000 head, so that while our population increased 21 per cent out cattle decreased in number 4.7 per cent. This creates a practical crisis in the affairs of our Nation, because we can not permanently sustain a rapidly growing population with a steadily declining cattle supply. In Indiana the situation is even worse than in the Nation, for, accepting either State or Federal census returns, for every 100 head of cattle which we had in 1900 we have but 90 head in 1910—a loss of 10 per cent or an average loss of 1 per cent per year. The Federal census returns give the total number of calves in the United States in 1900 as being 15,000,000; 10 years later the number had fallen to 7,000,000; in the State of Indiana the number had fallen from 428,000 to 184,000. Yearling steers had decreased in numbers 50 per cent, and all other classes of steers showed a like heavy reduction in numbers. The steady advance in price of cattle in all markets of our country during this period attest the substantial accuracy of these estimates, and we must admit that our Nation is facing an acute shortage in beef cattle. Yet some statesmen are seriously proposing an investigation of the Beef Trust as a remedy for this most serious condition of the agricultural life of our Nation.

The final evidence as to our condition as an agricultural nation is an examination of the mortgage indebtedness. We have seen that agricultural production has remained practically stationary; it could easily be shown that land values have risen very rapidly—in fact, they have nearly doubled within 10 years; taxes have increased; fertilizer bills have increased 40 per cent on the average; labor and all other cost items have increased—yet the ordinary impression has gone forth that this is the millennium for the farmers, and that every other class of citizenship is bearing a burden of tribute to the farmers as a class. The one positive barometer to measure the financial condition of the farmer is the mortgage record in the courthouse. In the Nation farm mortgages have steadily risen, both in number and in total amount, during the last census period. If our national yield of grain had increased at the same rate that our farm mortgages have increased the result would have enriched the Nation and have reduced the cost of living to the world. In 1900 only 31.1 per cent of our farms which are operated by their owners were mortgaged; in 1910 this percentage had risen to 33.6 per cent. In Indiana 70 per cent of the farms are operated by their owners; in 1880 76.3 per cent were operated by their owners, so that we have had a progressive increase in tenant farmers—the figures for owners being: 1880, 76.3 per cent; 1890, 74.6 per cent; 1900, 71.4 per cent; and in 1910, 70 per cent. In 1900 the average mortgage debt on the mortgaged farm in Indiana was $972; in 1910 this sum had risen to $1,443 per farm, while the percentage of mortgaged farms had risen from 36.5 per cent to 38.8 per cent. We have thus shown that agricultural production is stationary per acre, that our free surplus of cereals is rapidly approaching the vanishing point, that tenant farming is increasing, that rural population is decreasing, and that farm indebtedness is increasing.

I assert with confidence that no other set of facts are of equal importance to the people of our Nation or of the world. The food supply is one of prime importance to any people; and as the United States have been the principal exporters of foodstuffs to feed the world, our local conditions are reflected in the markets of the world.

This is not a political question except that political government is instituted among men to promote the general welfare. It is primarily a question of education. In the beginning God wrote the law that controls the production of the earth and no man nor legislature has ever been given the power to modify or to amend it. While it is true that the maintenance and productivity of the soil has been a subject of study and concern from the earliest historic times, but little progress was made in our knowledge of the soil and its relation to crops or of methods of management until the modern science of agricultural chemistry was established by Liebig about 1840. At that date we had slave labor in the United States and it was a crime in certain States to teach the farm laborer, if he were a slave, to read and to write. The great Civil War was fought only 50 years ago. At that date we had but few schools, and only those who were intended to follow the so-called professions were given any but the most limited schooling. In fact, it is but recently that our most progressive States have adopted the policy to teach every child to read and to write, and in some States of the Union, if all citizens are considered, perhaps 40 per cent of the total number can not read and write. The resolution that every citizen shall be educated is the greatest advance in government which has been made since the Declaration of Independence was written, and when fully accomplished will work greater changes in our life as a people than any other event since Christ gave His life to advance the interests of mankind.

The educational leaders of our great cities are urging the establishment of vocational schools, so as to assist the boy and girl to discover themselves and thereby more truly prepare for their proper calling in industrial life. The work of training the children for industrial life is so appalling in its magnitude that not a single city in the United States can report any considerable progress; yet this is a pigmy's task compared to educating the agricultural workers of America, but if we are to give our children the heritage we derived from our fathers—if we are to bequeath to succeeding generations an opportunity in life equal to that we received from our parents—then that task must be successfully accomplished. This is true conservation; this is true progressive government; this is the only method by which wealth can be created in perpetuity, so as to give to every citizen sufficient to meet his daily needs as imposed by the law of his nature.

Man by divine decree was ordered to work in order to create wealth; he was endowed with a mind fashioned after the divine intelligence, so that he might interpret the law of the universe, and it is the highest duty of the State and Nation alike to aid this great educational movement. For this reason I am for this bill. I would support any bill which would forward agricultural education among the masses of our population, but I am for the Lever bill because it comprehends the very best method to augment this extension work at the present stage of the movement. I am proud to say that I helped to frame and to adopt the first statute in Indiana which appropriated public money from our State treasury to organize agricultural extension work. We were fortunate in our methods and placed the leadership of this work in the control of our State Agricultural College. As a result, we have the best corps of educational workers of any State in the Union. It would not be possible to organize another as efficient teaching force in our State on this subject. Our legislature has most wisely increased the fund available for this purpose from time to time, until now we are spending more than $150,000 annually for this purpose. This bill most wisely proposes to recognize this splendid organization and similar organizations in every other State where it has been created and to add the funds of the Nation to those of the State under one common leadership. This is the strength of this great measure. It is practical; it is effective; it unifies State and national aid and effort in this field.

No student of this great question believes that this legislation is the last word on this subject. It is a splendid measure to meet the most pressing needs, but other legislation must be enacted, both by States and by Congress. More money must be appropriated from both Treasuries, but I gladly support this measure because it is a timely and practical recognition that the question of better agricultural education is the most vital and important question before the American people and is the best method to insure a square meal and a full dinner pail to every American citizen in the future cycles of our national life. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understand the conference report on the Indian bill will be in here in a few minutes to be presented for printing in the RECORD.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the conference report is not quite completed, but I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to print the conference report on the Indian bill in the RECORD under the rule after the House adjourns. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire if anyone knows anything about the conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill?

Mr. FINLEY. My understanding is, Mr. Speaker, that the conference report is nearly, if not quite, ready.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that it will not be ready until about 11 o'clock.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that it be printed in the RECORD under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill may be printed in the RECORD, notwithstanding the rule. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Stuart, one its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6781. An act in reference to the issuance of patents and copies of surveys of private-land claims.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 6781. An act in reference to the issuance of patents and copies of surveys of private-land claims; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 6384. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers or sailors.

SPEECH OF HON. W. C. REDFIELD.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech of Hon. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD before the Flatbush Democratic Club on September 20, 1911.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The speech is as follows:

WAS THE PRESIDENT RIGHT?

[Speech of Hon. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD before the Flatbush Democratic Club Sept. 20, 1911.]

"In discussing the address which President Taft delivered at Hamilton, Mass., on the 26th of August last, I wish to avoid anything that approaches political prejudice or passion, and to treat it as a serious public utterance of our Chief Magistrate in a calm and thoughtful spirit. The dignity of the presidential office demands this, as does the personal character of Mr. Taft. The substance of the President's address is a defense of his vetoes of the several bills reducing the tariff passed at the recent extra session of Congress, or what are popularly known as the wool, the free list, and the cotton bills. The President attempts to justify his vetoes on the broad grounds that these bills were based upon insufficient knowledge, were defective in form as the result of haste, or were the result of purely partisan motives, being intended to embarrass the Executive rather than to effect any actual bettering of conditions. In general, he alleges that the work of Congress was based upon insufficient knowledge and upon a somewhat reckless desire to carry out a party policy without due consideration of its results upon our industries.

"One can not dismiss the statements of the President with a laugh or a word as idle or incorrect. If he is wrong, it should be shown, for in so far as he may be right the truth will ultimately appear, and the Democratic Party has no desire to fight against the truth even if stated by a Republican President, nor does the Democratic Party wish to work in the dark when light can be had.

"Inasmuch, however, as the President's speech is a summing up from his point of view of a whole situation, let us clear the air by defining clearly that situation out of which his speech arose.

"Mr. Taft was elected President in 1908 after a campaign in which a leading issue, and one which he accepted and approved, was the revision of the tariff. It was the clear public understanding about which there is not the faintest doubt that this revision of the tariff was to be a downward revision. True, certain of the so-called 'standpatters' now allege that this was not explicitly stated to be the fact, and it is true that the word 'downward' is itself not a part of the platform of the Republican Party. None the less, the whole spirit of the Republican campaign and the whole public point of view was saturated with the idea of a reduction of the tariff, and no voice was lifted—and this is significant—in that campaign to say even that the tariff should be maintained on the basis where it then stood; much less was it hinted that it should be in any respect raised. Mr. Taft himself when a candidate said, September 24, 1908, there should be 'a substantial revision downward.' He received the support of many independent Democrats who believed him committed to a reasonable reduction of the tariff, and who confided in his judicial temperament and training and in his personal character. Had it been then supposed that Mr. Taft was the man who would sign the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, he would have lacked much support, quite apart from any other considerations. I think candid men will concur in the above statements. The Political Science Quarterly for March, 1910 (edited by Columbia University), says in an article on page 39:

"It seems very clear that so far as Mr. Taft was concerned tariff revision meant downward revision, and it is difficult to ignore the fact that a very respectable number of voters so understood him.

"But the Payne-Aldrich tariff law came into being with Mr. Taft's approval, and he indorsed it as the best tariff law the country had ever had, although he also stated that the wool schedule was indefensible, and that a combination of woolgrowers and wool manufacturers had been in substance too strong for Congress and the Executive then to overcome.

"It is history that at the first opportunity and after full discussion, namely, in the elections of 1910, the people of the country resented this, and showed it by turning out the Republican House of Representatives and substituting for it a Democratic House with a majority of 65 Members. It is also history that the Democratic Members of this House of Representatives elected in 1910 were so elected under the most explicit and clear pledges to reduce the tariff, and not only so, but expressly to do it on those items which were of widest popular use, to wit, clothing, food, and other similar articles of widespread and general consumption. Were I standing before you to say that for any cause I had in any degree taken any action which in the most indirect way looked toward maintaining the existing duties upon food, clothing, and the like, you would know that I had been false to my pledges, for you also know that the campaign was made upon the basis that the tariff upon these things must be reduced. What was true of myself was generally true throughout the country. When Mr. Taft summoned the Sixty-second Congress in special session, he knew, for he was plainly told so, that he was summoning a House of Representatives pledged to reduce as speedily as possible the duties upon clothing and upon food, and a House, furthermore, which would have been dishonorable and derelict had it failed to do so. For the President to argue, therefore, that the House of Representatives should have waited for any board by whomsoever created or of whatever nature in the face of this express, clear, and definite public mandate is to suggest something unworthy of serious thought. The House of Representatives which Mr. Taft summoned in extra session was created for the purpose of taking off the duties on clothing, food, and the like. That was the cause of its being. The mandate which ordered it to do this superseded the mandate on which Mr. Taft was himself elected, but even this latter, as I have above pointed out, was itself a mandate looking toward the reduction of the tariff.

"But the President himself afforded in his reciprocity campaign the first opportunity to assault the tariff wall. In so far as this reciprocity bill looked toward a reduction in the excessive taxes upon food and clothing and the like, it was good Democratic doctrine, and the Democratic House would have failed to keep its pledges had it failed to approve it by whomsoever suggested. What the Democratic House therefore did in passing the reciprocity bill it did because it believed that bill to be true Democratic doctrine, and because it believed then and believes now that in substantial principle it does not differ from the wool bill, the cotton bill, and the free-list bill which the President later vetoed.

"The President frankly acknowledged his indebtedness to the Democratic Party for passing the reciprocity bill. He might well do so, for without the Democratic votes the bill would have failed, and it is to be noted here that so long as the Democratic House agreed with the President's point of view, the latter thought the House was patriotic, but when following precisely the same principle on which it approved the reciprocity bill it passed the wool bill, then the Democratic House became ill advised, ignorant, and guilty of political trickery. This brings the situation up to the time when the wool bill came under consideration.

"In view of the President's attack upon this bill, it is pertinent to think who the men are that had it in charge, and how it was treated prior to its passage. The Democratic majority of the Ways and Means Committee was composed of men, most of whom had been members of that committee throughout the discussion in the previous Congress on the Payne-Aldrich bill. They were and are familiar with that discussion. They took an active part in it. They had before them all the facts out of which the Payne-Aldrich bill grew, and they had in their hands the report of the Republican Ways and Means Committee that created the Payne-Aldrich tariff. Whatever information the authors of the Payne-Aldrich law had—and this law the President said was the best tariff law we ever had—was available to the Democratic Ways and Means Committee when it began work on the wool schedule. They had before them fully and in detail all the facts upon which the bill was based, which the President signed. Furthermore, they were familiar with the combination between the woolgrowers of the West and the woolen manufacturers of the East to which the President objected, to which he admits the Republican Congress yielded, but which the Democratic Congress resisted.

"This is history, and is not denied. The Democratic Ways and Means Committee took the President at his word, and his word coincided with their instructions from their constituents, namely, that the tariff on clothing, which in its present form the President stated was indefensible, and against which in its present form the carded wool manufacturers have been loud in protest, should be promptly reduced But not only was the Democratic Ways and Means Committee actuated by the mandate of the people behind them, by the criticism of many woolen manufacturers themselves, and by the President's own criticism of the measure with which they had to deal, and not only were they in possession of all the information that the President had when he signed the tariff act, and that the Ways and Means Committee had when they created the act, and not only did they consider facts submitted by the carded woolen manufacturers who protested against the continuance of the act in its present form, but they had further and special information and equipment for their work. There was in the House of Representatives one of the largest woolgrowers in the country, Mr. KENT, of California, a Republican who voted for the bill and in favor of passing it over this veto. There was in the Democratic majority one man who had had the experience of building, equipping, and operating a textile mill in Asia with Chinese labor, Mr. DIFENDERFER, of Pennsylvania. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee himself is in direct and immediate touch with manufacturing practice and theory, and I presume it was largely because I had myself spent one-fourth of a century in active manufacturing life that I was deemed worthy to represent you there. They had before them also the facts laid by the late Senator Dolliver before the Senate in the debate on the Payne-Aldrich bill. Neither that able and lamented man nor those who had the benefit of his studies can properly be accused of ignorance on the subject so fully presented by him. More time was put by the Ways and Means Committee under these conditions upon the woolen schedule than was ever in the history of the country devoted to the consideration of a single schedule. This is not denied. Mr. PAYNE said, indeed, that prior to the passage of the Payne-Aldrich law they had been considering the whole tariff two years. This is perhaps true, but it is also true that the very men who were during those two years upon the Ways and Means Committee are on the Ways and Means Committee now; and that whatever that two years' study may have meant, its results were familiar to the Democratic majority on the present committee. Among these results were 16 volumes of Tariff Hearings, 950 pages of Notes on Tariff Revision, and 4,000 pages of a Report on Wood, Pulp, and Paper. Apart from this, however, three months' hard work were spent by well-equipped and experienced men upon this single schedule; and no such amount of time was ever given in the past to a single schedule by any Ways and Means Committee.

"The bill was submitted to the Treasury Department and received its approval as to its form and language, and from this it passed into the hands of the Democratic caucus. Anyone who thinks that it received there a perfunctory approval is singularly misinformed. I was present throughout. The debate lasted 10 hours. It was outspoken and unrestrained. Men from all over the country spoke their minds without let or hindrance. If ever a measure received a grilling at the hands of the men who had to become responsible for it, this was it. It was a splendid example of the keenest kind of self-criticism. For any man to say of a measure that passed through that fire that it was either ill-considered or hasty, is absurd. In the end the Democratic Members agreed in their approval of the measure.

"After several weeks of open debate in Committee of the Whole, the bill passed by a majority nearly double that which the Democrats had in the House. It was by this simple fact immediately lifted out of the realm of mere party measures. Substantially one-half of the majority for the bill were men from the great Republican States of the Central West. The bill passed through subsequent stages in the Senate, of which the President speaks. Whatever modifications were there made were in the direction of making it less radical. I do not believe it was radical when it first passed the House, but it was less radical when it passed with the Senate amendments. It was more of a protective measure and less of a purely revenue measure when it passed the Senate than it was as first created, but if this was as the President states—and truly—a compromise, it was a compromise in the direction of moderation. If experienced men had made a safe measure before which had stood the fire of criticism, the compromise made it safer if, indeed, there were any risk at all. And the Democratic majority, frankly preferring its own bill, yet pledged to any reasonable course in reducing the burdens of taxation and the cost of living, in candor and fairness of spirit and with an open mind, accepted the amended measure as a step in the path they were commanded to tread. It was not so long a step as they wished to take, but a good long step, all the same.

"I believe this to be a truthful and impartial statement of the facts. The President descending from the dignity of his high office may, as a partisan speaker, say if he will that this is a "tariff for politics only," yet he knows—and so does every Republican leader—that the Democratic House would have been dishonored had it acted in any substantial way other than as it did.

"The President vetoed the bill. For this act he must account, and the accounting will be given in the open and subject to the judgment of men who will be made to know the whole truth. For myself, I do not see on what grounds the President justifies the continuance longer of the combination between the woolgrowers of the West and the woolen manufacturers of the East, which he said was too strong for the last Republican Congress and with which he has now aligned himself.

"But there are two points of justification which the President uses with which we must briefly deal.

"Although the House of Representatives is charged by law with the duty of originating revenue measures, and although its Ways and Means Committee, composed of experienced and thoughtful men, acted in the light of full information and after mature thought in preparing carefully the wool bill, which the President vetoed, none the less Mr. Taft insists that the House should not exercise such lawful duties at all or perform the function for which it was expressly elected until after another body, unknown to the Constitution, and not authorized by law for the particular purpose for which it is now to be used, shall have reported. You will look in vain in the Constitution and in the precedents that have arisen in our national history for any case in which the right or the duty of the House of Representatives to originate financial legislation is questioned until another board shall have informed it how to proceed. I venture to think the President has introduced a novel and a dangerous element into our constitutional life, and one the present use of which can only be justified, if it can be justified at all, by the existence of two conditions simultaneously. These are that Congress was so ignorant that it could not fitly exercise the functions for which it was elected, and that the Tariff Board is so well informed on the very matters upon which Congress is ignorant that the latter must be arrested in its work until it has the advice and counsel of the former. In other words, Congress did not know how to do its work, though charged by law to do it, and the Tariff Board did know how to do it, though not charged by law so to do. Therefore, Congress, elected for a certain duty, must not do it till it is told how. I do not think this is a strained or unfair statement of the situation. We have already seen that it is not true that Congress failed in knowledge or experience in respect of the wool schedule. It can not be successfully denied that if any former Congress was competent to deal with the wool schedule, then the present Congress was more so. If the President admits by inference that the last Congress in creating the Payne-Aldrich law was ignorant and ill advised, I agree, but without in the least admitting that the present Congress was at all its fellow in these respects.

"But if Congress is not ignorant, is the Tariff Board well informed? I have in an address upon the cotton schedule before the House of Representatives already touched upon the difficult, and to my thought the impossible, task placed upon the Tariff Board. I have no doubt they will submit a report excellent in form and attractive in substance. Their sincerity, their ability is not questioned, but I doubt the possibility of their giving to Congress or to the country any information of special value for the purpose of basing taxation thereon. This arises from the very nature of the problem with which they have to deal.

"Figures showing the relative cost of production are worthless by themselves. The facts behind the figures which cause those costs are the essential things. They have gone, for example, for costs in one case I know to a certain mill. The figures derived from that mill are worthless until it appears as an explanation of them that the mill is an ancient, wooden one with a high fire risk, that it is located miles from a railway and with insufficient and variable water power. You and I do not purpose to be taxed to make good the deficiencies in this mill. In another case, they have gone to a mill well equipped indeed, but keeping no accurate and continuing thorough scientific costs. I do not care to be taxed, nor do you, upon the basis of an estimated cost. Further, these costs change constantly. They are not now what they were when the year began. They will not be when the Tariff Board report comes in what they are to-day. The whole effort to base taxes upon the changing and fluctuating elements in cost is absurd.

"We have an example of the Tariff Board work in their report upon the wood-pulp and print-paper industry. This report I have analyzed before the House of Representatives. Speaking thoughtfully as a business man, and after reading the report with some care, I can not find in it one fact that would make it possible to base a tariff upon anything it shows. There is in it the frank admission that cost is variable. There is in it the plain statement that the cost of a single article in a single respect may vary from 98 cents per ton to $5.90 a ton. There is in it the clearest evidence of the fluctuating nature of costs. There is nothing in it that is helpful for the purposes of taxation. Yet with this report before him and with an amusing ignorance of manufacturing costs the President solemnly says that Congress shall not act until another such report has furnished it the information it needs.

"An illustration is worth many arguments. In a factory in Brooklyn, well managed and prosperous, it became necessary to change the superintendence. A young man of energy and brains, with a good knowledge of the business, but without any special factory experience, seemed to be the person available. He was put in charge. The opportunity to him was an inspiration. In two years the product of that shop was doubled without adding a man or a machine. In those two years the costs of production went down so that every six months nullified the costs of the previous like period. Suppose just before this man took charge the Tariff Board had come along for a statement of costs; then before the report was printed those costs were ancient history. Suppose that at the date of the report they had been revised, then before Congress could have acted they would have needed revision again, and by the time a law based on them had come into effect the result of a tariff based upon the costs then existing would have been the payment of a great bonus on the basis of new costs which had meanwhile come into being.

"My own business has factories in Detroit and Troy. In making similar goods the costs are not alike; on which will you base the tariff? A week ago I sat at lunch with two gentlemen connected with one of our largest industries. They have six factories. The costs are not alike in them, and a man who can make them so can not be had. Which of their shops is to be made the basis?

"It may be said by the uninformed that while theoretically changes in cost exist, yet practically in old industries they are established. Nothing could be farther from the truth. By hunting up what have passed till now as trifles, the supervisor of locomotive operation on one division of the Erie Railroad saved in the first three months of this year over $28,000 in fuel alone while performing the same work as in a like time in 1910. The brickmaking industry is thousands of years old. A friend is now operating an apparatus developed within two years that cuts the cost of brickmaking in half as compared with ordinary methods. There is no limit to cost reduction save the capacity of the human mind.

"I have said enough to show you the folly of making the changeable costs the basis of a fixed tax, and I only add these words taken from a quarter of a century experience as a manufacturer—any statement of costs made by the Tariff Board will be to me useless as a means of basing taxation thereon, for I shall know beyond all shadow of doubt that those costs may have been so radically altered since they were obtained by the Tariff Board that nothing whatever can be predicated upon them, and, further, that a mere historical cost is of small value. It is the possible costs that count.

"But, finally, there is one thing in the President's veto message which, to my mind, shows the fundamental difference between the Republican and the Democratic outlook upon these tariff matters. It is a trifling thing, doubtless the President and some editors would say, but to me it seems one of those revealing lapses which, like a small light, may cause one to see large things. The President says there is 'no exigency' in public affairs which requires prompt action. I deal only with cold, plain truths in asking of what conditions arose the cry of 1908 for a reduction of the tariff? Was it not an exigency caused by the high cost of living? Out of what arose the public mandate which the present Congress has obeyed, and which destroyed the Republican majority in the House of Representatives? Was it not the severer pressure of that same exigency arising from the high cost of living? What do you find at home now unless it be the continued exigency of the high cost of living? True, this particular exigency does not affect the leaders of our industries. The margin of safety is broader for the mill owner than for the mill worker, and conceding the former all he claims to have suffered from unfavorable business conditions, his suffering has been relative rather than actual, the loss of profits rather than poverty. But what about the men in his mill and the worker on the daily wage and the working woman and the clerks and the men at small salaries? Did these men feel the pressure of the high cost of living in 1908? If so, did they not feel it more in 1910? Is it released to-day, or are they still under pressure? What do the 60,000 textile operatives in New England who were laid off during August think of this? We shall not go, you and I, in this thoughtful meeting into convulsions or spasms of oratory about this, because the results in the homes of many of our people arising from this high cost of living are too serious, but looking at all the facts calmly and quietly is it not true that it was an exigency of serious importance out of which arose the orders to the present Congress to reduce taxation, and is it not the fact that that exigency stands to-day as a real, daily pressing matter in the homes of the average man and woman? As I look back it seems to me the Democratic majority in the House of Representatives saw always before them this exigency. They were pledged and commanded to meet it, and they did so; but, upon the other side, the minority in the House and the President in the White House could not see that exigency. They looked at the picture from a different angle. They saw and the President states the point of view of the mill owner. Doubtless they did it sincerely, but the division between the parties comes plainly into view just here that the Democrats see from the consumers' end and the workers' end and the Republicans see from the owners' end, each looking at different sides of the shield. And it is perhaps an incidental evidence of this outlook that you did not find the suggestion that the Tariff Board shall include in their report any statements from the consumers and from the mill workers. It is admitted that the manufacturers are providing them with information. It is not suggested that the workers shall do so, and I confess that a statement of costs that does not include facts as to how they bear upon the mill worker and how they bear upon the consumer of the mill products does not interest me greatly.

"Despite 90 per cent protection under Schedule K, wages in the woolen mills compare unfavorably with those in other industries less highly protected. Woolen manufacturers complain that their labor is inefficient. Other manufacturers less favored by duties do not so complain. And I get hints that there is not unanimity among our woolen people, that some woolen manufacturers say they do not care what is done with the tariff so long as it is settled. Will the Tariff Board inform us on these factors?

"This principle we may safely lay down: Manufacturers must go to the limit of self-help before they can ask the public to tax itself to keep them. No tariff can righteously cover costs arising from mistakes in management, errors in location, bad equipment, faulty methods, or neglect to adopt the most modern system of cost keeping and supervision.

"Meanwhile we await with interest the report in which the Tariff Board will tell us what many manufacturers do not themselves know—the cost of the goods they make—and we give them this final hint. The actual or historical costs do not greatly concern the public. The possible costs are the greater thing, and these, so far as we know, are not to be a part of their report."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HUGHES] who is ill, be granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the agricultural-extension bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD (at 7 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, August 23, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 7409) to constitute a commission to investigate the purchase of American-grown tobacco by the governments of foreign countries, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1228), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SULZER, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 705) requesting the President to furnish information regarding the alleged killing of James W. Rodgers by British soldiers in Africa, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1236), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 108) authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington of a joint memorial to Maj. Archibald W. Butt and Francis Davis Millet, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1237), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LAFFERTY: A bill (H. R. 26383) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act supplementing the joint resolution of Congress approved April 30, 1908, entitled 'Joint resolution instructing the Attorney General to institute certain suits,' etc.," approved August 21, 1912; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. LOBECK: A bill (H. R. 26384) for the recognition of the military services of officers and enlisted men of certain State and military organizations; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STANLEY: Concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 63) authorizing the printing of 25,000 copies of the majority and minority reports of the committee to investigate violations of the antitrust act of 1890 and other acts; to the Committee on Printing.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 26385) for the relief of the estate of Ferdinand E. Kuhn; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 26386) for the relief of James A. Griffith and Hannibal I. Griffith; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DOREMUS: A bill (H. R. 26387) granting a pension to Mary A. O'Donnell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 26388) granting an increase of pension to Jacob J. Brake; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OLMSTED: A bill (H. R. 26389) granting an increase of pension to Susan Billet; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: A bill (H. R. 26390) granting an increase of pension to William P. Wells; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PEPPER: A bill (H. R. 26391) for the relief of Michael H. Morrin; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. AUSTIN: A bill (H. R. 26392) for the relief of the family of Railway Mail Clerk Bruce Hodge; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CALDER: Petition of Henry C. Maine, of Rochester, N. Y., against passage of Senate bill 4043, the Kenyon interstate liquor bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the American Embassy Association, of New York City, favoring passage of House bill 22589, relative to embassy, etc., buildings; to the Committee no Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of the Regular Colored Democratic Association, of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring passage of Senate bill 180, relative to celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the freeing of the negro; to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

Also, petition of the International Association of Machinists, favoring passage of House bill 25305, against the stop watch for Government employees; to the Committee on Labor.

Also, petition of the State Council of Pennsylvania, Order of Independent Americans, favoring passage of bills restricting immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, memorial of the New York Produce Exchange, favoring passage of House bill 25572, to amend the laws relating to the judiciary; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the B. V. D. Co., of New York City, against passage of the Oldfield bill (H. R. 23417), proposing change in patent law; to the Committee on Patents.

Also, petition of A. G. Marshuelz & Co., of New York, against passage of the Kenyon interstate liquor bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of the National Association of Talking Machine Jobbers, of Pittsburgh, Pa., against passage of the Oldfield bill, proposing change in the patent law; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. SULZER: Petition of openers and packers of the United States appraisers' stores, port of New York, relative to raise in salaries; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. UTTER: Petition of citizens of the State of Rhode Island, favoring passage of bills restricting immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, August 23, 1912.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. GALLINGER took the chair as President pro tempore under the previous order of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CULLOM and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I present a paper for reading and consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a unanimous-consent agreement that immediately following the reading of the Journal the Senate will take up for consideration the report of the committee of conference on the Army appropriation bill. The paper will be received if there is no objection.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is a privileged matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON MANUFACTURES,
Washington, D. C., August 23, 1912.

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE UNITED STATES SENATE.

Mr. PRESIDENT: I hereby resign as a member of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, the resignation to take effect at once.

Very truly, yours,

W. B. HEYBURN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Idaho? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report on the Army appropriation bill will now be taken up for consideration.

Mr. PENROSE. There is a resolution offered by me yesterday that went over on objection. Perhaps the discussion is exhausted and that resolution may be passed, although I do not want to interfere with the conference report on the Army appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the Chair will lay the resolution before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. We want to go on with the conference report, but perhaps the resolution is not going to lead to any further discussion.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understood the Chair to announce that there was a unanimous-consent agreement. I beg to invite the attention of the Chair to the language. It is merely a notice that a motion would be made after the Journal had been read to consider the conference report.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. If the calendar shows that, it is erroneous, because there was a unanimous-consent agreement to take up the conference report on the Army appropriation bill at this time.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have not looked at the RECORD, but the notice printed on the calendar does not state that there was a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. PENROSE. It is merely a misprint on the calendar, and it is not the first time recently that consent agreements have been misprinted on the calendar.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, there can be no possible question but that there was a unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The RECORD shows that the Senator from Wyoming asked unanimous consent, and the President pro tempore asked if there was objection, and declared there was no objection and that it was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. In view of that unanimous-consent agreement, I will withdraw my request for the consideration of the resolution until after the agreement has been carried out.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 25531) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Culberson	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Bacon	Cullom	Massey	Smith, Md.
Bailey	Cummins	Nelson	Smoot
Bankhead	Curtis	Oliver	Stone
Borah	Dillingham	Overman	Sutherland
Bourne	Fletcher	Page	Thornton
Brandegee	Gallinger	Penrose	Tillman
Briggs	Heyburn	Perkins	Townsend
Bristow	Johnston, Ala.	Poindexter	Warren
Bryan	Jones	Pomerene	Watson
Burnham	La Follette	Root	Wetmore
Catron	Lippitt	Sanders	Works
Chamberlain	McCumber	Shively
Clapp	McLean	Simmons
Crane	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is absent from the Senate on important business. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I desire this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was requested to state, on behalf of the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], that he is necessarily absent.

I wish to make the same statement for the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD], by his request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I very much regret the necessity of having to say anything to the Senate at this time. I would really very much prefer not to do so. I would not do so, but I regard this as a matter of very grave importance, and whatever may be the result I am unwilling that this legislation should go upon the statute books with any apparent acquiescence on my part. So far from that, I am unwilling for it to go upon the statute books without the expression of my very decided and positive dissent from and objection to it.

The proposition boiled down is simply this: It is an effort to have a part of those who are really a part of the citizenry of the country, engaged in civil pursuits, mingling in common with their fellow citizens, so enrolled that they at the same time shall constitute a part of the Army of the United States. To that I am unalterably opposed.

In my opinion, Mr. President, it is an absolute violation of the spirit and intent of the Constitution, however it may fail to be a violation of the letter of the Constitution; and while it may be within the technical power and right of the Federal Government to enact this legislation, it does not relieve us of the responsibility to so legislate as to carry out the purpose and intent of the Constitution. I think it is the plain purpose and intent of the Constitution that the Army of the United States shall be a distinct organization, and that the military power of the United States, speaking of it as the power exerted over individuals who may be incorporated into the Army, shall not extend to persons in civil life and citizens of States and residents in States.

The provisions in the Constitution with reference to the organization of the Army and the militia are found on the same page in the same article, and are two in number—two clauses in the same section enumerating the powers of Congress. One of them is:

> To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years.

The other provision, several clauses below that, enumerating these powers of Congress, is:

> To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

Mr. President, those two provisions plainly contemplated the condition that it being manifestly not desirable that we should have a great standing Army, and that at the same time it being equally manifestly desirable that we should have available, when required, a great military force, keeping in view our dual system of government, intended that the States should have their jurisdiction over their citizens, and that that jurisdiction should not be transferred to the Federal Government to the enlistment and organization of citizens in private life in such a way as to give the Government military control over their persons while remaining in civil life.

Mr. President, the power of the Federal Government was intended to reach just as far as it was necessary to make that reserve force which was left within the States available and efficient. Therefore, the provision, it will be noticed, gives to Congress the power to organize the militia, for arming the militia, for disciplining the militia, and, when called into active service, "governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress."

Mr. President, ever since the Spanish War there has been an effort to do away with the provision of the Constitution which I have just read, and to destroy the power of the State over its citizens, who should be desired thereafter for soldiers when emergency arose, and to extend the power of the Federal Government over them; in other words, there has been for the last 12 years, at various times and in various ways, the effort made to extend the power of the Federal Government beyond the control simply of active military organizations and to make it embrace those who are engaged in civil life and residents in States. The accomplishment of that purpose is, in my opinion, an absolute violation of the spirit and intent of the Constitution.

This came before Congress, Mr. President, 10 years ago in another shape. The same power, it is true with some difference in detail, was endeavored to be ingrafted upon a militia bill just 10 years ago. That bill was introduced in Congress, passed the House of Representatives, and came to the Senate. It was at a time when the present senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] was Secretary of War, and the provision was then section 24 of the general militia bill. I am going to read that, Mr. President, for the purpose of showing that, while it differs in detail, yet it involves the same principle. The fight then made in the Senate was the same fight that we have got to make now. The main difference was this: It was debated in the other House, though I do not recall that that particular provision was debated there; but it was debated here at great length.

In this instance, Mr. President, if this had been a piece of general legislation put upon an Army appropriation bill, there would have been the general objection which is made to ingrafting upon an appropriation bill general legislation. But here, Mr. President, this most important and, as I think, vital matter is absolutely originated and brought here on a conference report, at a time when there is no opportunity for its proper discussion, when we have no opportunity for amendment, and when, I presume, the conditions are such that it is known, in view of the fact that the session is about drawing to a close, that Senators will vote for the report, even though they object to what may be in it, because of the fact that it is now too late in the close of the session to do otherwise.

I think, Mr. President, that it is absolutely indefensible that this measure should have been put upon this conference report. If this kind of thing is to go on, Mr. President, we must have some change of rules about conference reports, and we shall have to have some change of rules as to the membership and constitution of conference committees if they are to be the chief legislators. That is what it amounts to—the conferees are the chief legislators and put the Senate in bonds, manacle them, and compel legislation to which they have had no opportunity to give proper consideration and where there is no opportunity to have either discussion or amendment, and when conditions are such that legislation can be forced upon us just the same as if we were bound and gagged. Mr. President, that condition of affairs can not last always. There must be some way—I hope the Senator from Wyoming will hear me, because I am talking about a matter now in which I think he is interested.

Mr. WARREN. I am hearing every word the Senator is saying.

Mr. BACON. The Senator can not talk to somebody else and listen to me at the same time.

Mr. WARREN. To show the Senator that I am hearing what he says, I want to say to him again what I have said before——

Mr. BACON. I withdraw my suggestion if the Senator will not pursue that.

Mr. WARREN. I wanted to correct the Senator, but I will let that matter go and correct it later.

Mr. BACON. I was saying, Mr. President, that if we are to have these efforts made to force legislation at such a time and in such a way, it is going to be necessary that there should be some reformation as to the question of what shall be the powers of conferees and as to the power of the Senate to deal with original items on conference reports, so that we shall not have matters rammed down our throats at a time when it is impossible to give proper consideration to them or to offer any amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not think I ought to let that accusation go without stating the facts, and I hope I may not have to state the facts again. I desire the facts to go into the RECORD.

I have served many times on conference committees, but we have never had a year or a Congress where we have had such strenuous times in connection with conference committees as we have had this session. This particular matter, however, in my judgment, with whatever experience I have had and whatever has gone before, was entirely within the rights of the managers of the conference, because, in the first place, the bill came from the House asking us to extend the enlistment period from three to five years under the colors in the regular service. In the Senate committee there was added a reserve proposition, which provided that after discharge from the regular service the soldier should serve the remaining period of enlistment in the reserve, subject to call and without pay unless called into active service, and if called the pay was to be at the rate of a certain number of dollars the first year and a certain number the second year, but in no case to exceed $300 up to time called into service, and when called into service the pay to be at regular rates of service pay. That provision went through the Senate. It has been through the Senate twice, once on the bill which was vetoed and again on the present bill.

Mr. BACON. That is a very different thing from this.

Mr. WARREN. As the bill comes from conference the provision in regard to the $300 is the same as it was when the bill passed the Senate. The matter of the enlistment is a compromise between five years and three years. Under the present proposition before us, a private must serve four years under the colors if required to——

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator——

Mr. WARREN. Allow me to finish, if you please.

Mr. BACON. Well, if the Senator wants to answer my argument, I prefer that he do so in his own time.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not propose to submit to being called to book by a Senator who asks my attention and then refuses me an opportunity to correct an error he is making. I submit that either I be allowed to explain what I am talking about or that the Senator refrain from alluding to me in his remarks.

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator desires, I will wait until the Senator gets through.

Mr. WARREN. If I may finish, I shall do so. Now, I want to say that under this bill the soldier enlists for four years of active service, subject to three years in the reserve; but on his request, submitted to the Secretary of War, if approved, he serves but three years, as before, in the regular service and four years in the reserve.

The only possible issue that can be raised as to whether or not the managers have exceeded their powers is the fact that seven years is the limit of the reserve. There was no limit before; it might have been 10 years.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I repeat what I was saying, or, rather, I will resume the thread of it. If such legislation as this is to be brought in here on a conference report—which I think revolutionizes the conditions which have heretofore existed, involving the differences between the Regular Army and the control and power of the Federal Government over citizens engaged in their ordinary civil pursuits within the State—if a measure of this far-reaching nature, which has heretofore been before the Senate and which was defeated, can be brought in here as an original matter on a conference report, where we have no opportunity to amend it, where the opportunity for discussion is limited, and where the possibility of having it properly considered by Senators is remote; that on the last day, or the next to the last day of a session, when everybody knows that Senators will vote for a measure, even though they may not approve of it, rather than prolong the session—I say, Mr. President, if that condition of affairs in the introduction of new matter is to exist that the time has come for some specific reform by law or by rule by which the powers of conferees shall not be extended to any such limit, and by which they shall be curbed in the exercise of any such power.

I say, furthermore, Mr. President, that there will have to be some arrangement made if we have got to be subjected to things of this kind, by which in some way different items in a conference report can be passed upon by the Senate and where we will not be compelled to accept a whole report, including every item, or reject a report in its entirety.

I think, Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, another thing will have to be looked after, and that is this: I think the distribution of appointments of those who shall be conferees ought to be more general in the Senate than it is. It is a tremendous power the conferees have. Bills go out to them and they are considered by them in their secret meetings. Matters of great volume and detail are involved, and the reports involving matters upon which the conferees have agreed come back here and are read from the desk without anybody knowing anything that is contained in them. It is really a fact that the conferees, practically two men in the Senate and two men in the House—because two of each set of conferees control—do some of the most important legislation that is had. If they would confine themselves properly to the differences between the two Houses it would not be so bad, although it would still be bad enough, because nine times out of ten the conference reports are agreed to without knowledge of their contents by the Senate.

For illustration, last night here was the great sundry civil bill brought into this Chamber. I do not know how many millions it carries. Possibly the Senator from Wyoming can inform me.

Mr. WARREN. The conference report was brought in yesterday morning. The amount involved is something like $116,000,000.

Mr. BACON. Very well. There was that bill carrying $116,000,000. A conference report was brought in here yesterday morning, laid on the desk, and not read by a Senator. I want to ask not only any Senator in this Chamber, but anyone who may be brought into the Chamber on the call of the roll, to get up and say he knows what the conferees did. Who will get up here and say he is advised as to a single item upon the report of the conference committee—the bill carrying $116,000,000, the report read in three minutes at the desk, the amendments designated simply by number, without specifying any of the different details, and the report agreed to? I again challenge any Senator to rise in his place and say he knew about a single item or a single change in that bill upon which the conferees had agreed. [A pause.]

I knew I could make the challenge with absolute safety, because I knew no one would rise.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. WARREN. I did not rise, and many others did not rise, who know all about the bill.

Mr. BACON. Of course, the Senator knew.

Mr. WARREN. That challenge, not being answered, signifies nothing. The committee knew, and it had been known for two or three days, that it had been concluded by those who are charged with the responsibility; that is, the members of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. BACON. Of course, the Senator knows, because he is on all the conference committees as to these great bills.

Mr. WARREN. No.

Mr. BACON. Speaking generally, and especially on the larger appropriation bills.

Mr. WARREN. I am not a conferee on the Post Office appropriation bill, the naval bill, and a number of others. I am very glad I do not have to serve on the others.

Mr. BACON. I think we expect too much of the Senator. I think when a Senator is on a conference committee on one great supply bill he might very well be relieved of the burden of attending to others.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia what more can be expected of Senators in that regard, when all these great appropriation bills are brought into the Senate at the very close of the session?

Mr. BACON. That is true. I am not criticizing Senators, but I am speaking of the importance of some change in the law or the rule by which when a conference report is brought in here the Senate will be able to deal with it intelligently.

Mr. WORKS. I did not intend to criticize the Senator from Georgia, and I did not understand that he was criticizing other Senators, but the fault lies back of that—that these large appropriation bills are neglected and reported just at the close and no opportunity is given for that consideration of them which their importance deserves.

Mr. BACON. That is very largely true, but it emphasizes the importance of what I am saying, that their importance is such that the opportunity for dealing intelligently with them in spite of the difficulties ought to be given.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia if the rule in that respect has been changed during his long and distinguished career in this body?

Mr. BACON. They have not been changed since I have been here.

Mr. ROOT. May I suggest that Senators refrain from inaudible conversation?

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to me?

Mr. ROOT. I should like to hear what is said. We are very much interested in this matter.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I asked the Senator from Georgia whether during his long and distinguished service in this body, aggregating some 18 years, the rules have been different?

Mr. BACON. I advised the Senator that they have not been.

Mr. ROOT. Has not the change which has caused the special stress and hindrance this year arisen from a change in the rules of the House, a change under which upon substantially all of our appropriation bills a great mass of substantive legislation has been placed, so that under the stress of being required to provide for the support of government our conference committees have been required to deal with a great number of laws precisely as the Senator from Georgia has said? That is the difference it seems to me.

Mr. BACON. That is undoubtedly true.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. Pardon me a moment. That is undoubtedly true, but that makes it all the more important, with the disadvantage flowing from the fact just mentioned by the Senator from New York of a lot of general legislation being put upon appropriation bills, that conferees should not go outside of that and bring in a lot of other and new legislation in addition thereto.

It is true that the placing of general legislation upon appropriation bills presents very great difficulties, but even though those items are put upon appropriation bills, they are matters with which we are capable of dealing. We have ample opportunity for discussion and we have full opportunity for amendment, but when a conference report puts upon a great appropriation bill a piece of new legislation we have no opportunity to discuss it, we have no opportunity to examine it, and we have no opportunity to amend or to offer to amend it, and, worse than that, no opportunity to decide upon it independently and by itself, but it must be taken in connection with a hundred other things mixed up in the bill, and either all must be accepted or all rejected on account of it.

Now I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, is it not a fact that the appropriation bills this year came in earlier than usual and that they were discussed longer and more vigorously on the floor of the Senate than has been known in the history of the Senator's service here?

Mr. BACON. I think that is true.

Mr. OVERMAN. The legislative bill was discussed for 10 days here on this floor. It was in conference for a month. That was so of the Army appropriation bill. It is so as to all other appropriation bills. But this deficiency bill that is brought in here necessarily has come in during the last days of the session, and while I do not object to certain provisions on a general appropriation bill when there is a chance for discussion, I do object to the conferees bringing in new legislation upon the deficiency bill which necessarily has to be brought in here at the last of the session.

The Senator is right in complaining about that. As to all the other bills, they came in earlier than ever before. They have been discussed more than ever before, because the sundry civil bill, you will remember, and the legislative bill were brought in here and passed through the Senate heretofore when there was no chance to discuss them in committee; they were considered at the last session within 10 days of the close, and there was no discussion on the floor. On the other hand, these bills have been brought in here and discussed and discussed at length—the general legislation and every item upon the bill. Five hundred and fifteen disagreements were reported upon one bill. It was discussed here day after day. Who ever knew that to happen before in the Senate?

But as to this bill, this being the last one to be passed, at the last moment——

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from North Carolina is mistaken. The Army bill is under discussion now. He thinks it is the deficiency bill. This is the Army bill.

With reference to the other bill, it was under discussion 11 days instead of 10, and the other large bill 12 days. The Army bill has been through here twice with the reserve proposition.

This proposition has been fully discussed. This is one of the first bills that came here.

Mr. OVERMAN. I thank the Senator from Wyoming for the correction. But while the Army bill was discussed here for days, this matter was not discussed. It went to the President, and he vetoed it, and it was not on; and when it comes back the conferees add matters that were not in disagreement here, right in the closing days of the session. When they took it back, after the veto, it does seem to me they ought to have tried to get on the bill only those matters which were discussed here and taken out those matters which the President objected to, and reported the bill just like it passed the Senate, and not inserted matter which we can not discuss.

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish to take the time of the Senate, but there ought to be read into the RECORD right here the reserve portions which passed twice. It is not a new matter. I deny it.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator refer to the first paragraph?

Mr. WARREN. I refer to the whole matter taken together.

Mr. BACON. I am going to read the whole of it if that is what the Senator refers to. I did not know——

Mr. WARREN. It is on page 9 of the bill.

Mr. BACON. I understand. Does the Senator refer to what is in italics, beginning on page 7, section 2?

Mr. WARREN. We have to take into consideration the matter in italics and also the part stricken out.

Mr. BACON. I am asking for information when I ask the Senator that. What part of it does the Senator say was passed on by the Senate?

Mr. WARREN. Take the amendment commencing on line 2, page 9.

Mr. BACON. I must have a different print from the one the Senator has.

Mr. WARREN. Possibly.

Mr. BACON. Is it to the page of the bill or the report that the Senator has reference?

Mr. WARREN. I have a copy of the bill here.

Mr. BACON. We have wandered somewhat from the direct point. I did not intend, at this particular stage of it, to discuss the question about conferees. But I think it will have to be discussed a good deal more hereafter than we can possibly do to-day. Something undoubtedly must be done. The conferees must be limited strictly to the recommendation of matters of difference between the two Houses.

Mr. WARREN. I agree with the Senator from Georgia entirely, but unfortunately we can not control either the rules or the action of the House, and the bill comes before us with this proposed legislation from time to time which we must eradicate, agree to, or change, or modify in some manner by a new proposition.

Mr. BACON. What was the provision which the Senator said passed the Senate?

Mr. WARREN. I will find it in a moment. There are two or three provisions. In one place there is the five-year enlistment, and in the other there is the reserve.

Mr. BACON. I understand that this House report contains, on page 7—I hope the Senator has that before him—the provision proposed by the committee of conference. It begins on page 7, the words being in italics, beginning section 2.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will look on page 9 he will find in italics the part that passed the Senate, which conforms in the first part of it almost entirely to the conference report.

Mr. BACON. I am not unfamiliar with that. I thought the Senator had something else to show me. I stand by the proposition that that provision which passed the Senate is no authority whatever for the conferees to ingraft upon it such a provision as they have ingrafted here. It is absolutely new and original matter.

What are we to do when conferees bring in here matters of legislation which are beyond their powers? What is our remedy when they bring such matters in here within the last day or two of the session and put us in the position of either accepting that which they have illegally and unwarrantably put upon a bill or of defeating the whole bill? If I can not demonstrate that this is an excess of their powers, it is because I have not the faculty of properly expressing myself, or else my ideas are all wrong on it.

I ask, What are we to do? Are we just tamely to submit to the conferees going out and bringing in legislation here and putting it upon a bill—a bill that we are obliged to pass before the Congress can adjourn—and trust to the future that we may undo the wrong? Because that is about the position in which these gentlemen have placed us.

Now, Mr. President, I am going back to what I said, that this is legislation which in one shape or another has been attempted for the past 10 or 12 years, and when they could not accomplish the legislation by direct methods, by bills introduced or by amendments offered to bills while pending in either House, they now have presumed to accomplish it by putting upon a conference report a new and original provision that it is known the Senate can not reject, because at this late hour the Army bill must be passed even if it does contain objectionable matter.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator whom he means by "they"?

Mr. BACON. I am speaking about either House.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator says "they have tried heretofore." Whom does the Senator mean?

Mr. BACON. Those who favor this legislation.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator kindly go further and say whom he means?

Mr. BACON. I will. The War Department, for one.

Mr. WARREN. Who else?

Mr. BACON. Senators who favor it, possibly the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I have never passed upon it before in any form.

Mr. BACON. I did not want to be specific, but the Senator insisted on it. I am speaking generally of those who favor this legislation. I say it originates with the War Department, and I say the War Department for the past 12 years has been studiously endeavoring and industriously endeavoring to so arrange matters that they could get what was needed for the use of the Army when the time of war came, without having to rely upon the constitutional provision that they should go to the militia of the States for it, and that they have sought on more occasions than one to so arrange it that when there was need for troops they would not have to call for volunteer organizations, or the National Guard, as they call them, or for any other of the organizations which come under the general head of militia, but that they could directly get these men as a part of the Army; and the device by which it is sought to be accomplished is to create organizations of men in civil life who should remain in civil employment, apparently subject to the laws of the State, and at the same time be enrolled under Federal law in such a way that they would not, in many important particulars, be subject to the laws of the State.

Of course, we all know the fact that when a man is enrolled as a soldier he is no longer subject to the civil jurisdiction of the State, except that he is liable like any other man for an infraction of law. He can not be called upon to perform any civil duty. He can not be called on to serve as a juror. He can not be called upon to answer the summons of an officer to make one of a posse comitatus. He can not be required to do any of those ordinary duties that a citizen is required to perform. He can not be called upon to serve as a juror. The effect of this is to put in each State a lot of men going about like other citizens, dressing like everybody else, engaged in ordinary avocations as everybody else, and yet a class of men set apart with peculiar privileges and exemptions and peculiar rights, under an enrollment as enlisted men in the Army, when the Constitution says they shall do it in a certain way and contemplates they shall do it in a certain way, by calling upon those who constitute the great body of the citizen soldiery of the country. These men can thus be drawn directly to the Army without compliance with any of the restrictions which the Constitution puts upon the manner in which the militia shall be brought into service. And when I speak of militia I speak of all State military organizations, such as the National Guard.

Now, the thing at the bottom of the whole of it is this: It is the thing that the War Department resents, the thing that the War Department tries to get rid of, and this is one of the devices for getting rid of it. The Constitution prescribes that these men called for from the States shall be officered by the States. That they do not wish to submit to. They do not wish to do that; and if they are called in the ordinary way contemplated by the Constitution, of course that will have to be done. They want to get rid of that.

Senators say this is a small matter. In the first place, I say it is a violation of a great principle, which principle is that the private citizen living in a State, either as a citizen or a resident of the State, shall occupy the relation of a citizen to that State in common with all others occupying the same position that he does, and that he shall not be set apart and differentiated from the others as an enrolled enlisted man of the United States Army.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. REED. I wish to ask the Senator from Georgia whether it is not in fact an enormous increase of the Regular Army?

Mr. BACON. I think it is a large increase of those enrolled. I am coming to that before I get through. I am speaking of the alleged small matter to start with. I say in principle it is wrong, because the Constitution clearly drew the distinction. It did not contemplate any Regular Army, except a Regular Army on active duty. In the very same sentence in which it gave authority to raise armies it says that the appropriation for that purpose shall not last longer than two years. It never contemplated anything of this kind. It never contemplated an Army of enrolled men who should be scattered throughout the United States, without organization or subjection to the control of officers.

This thing of having a reserve, of course, Mr. President, we all know is copied from Germany. It has come from the visitations our Army officers have been making every year to be entertained by the German Emperor. I see that one of them, a distinguished one, is about to depart soon upon a similar mission. They come back here and try to engraft the militarism of Germany upon the United States.

It is one thing for a great military power like Germany, situated in Europe, where they have to stand at arms, not knowing at night but what the drum call may beat before morning, and where the whole Empire is in a measure a camp, where it is made up of an army of half a million men actually under arms, and where there are these various organizations of reserves which may be called to the colors; that is one thing; but, Mr. President, that is not in accord with our system. We have a dual system of government, and the Constitution contemplates but two classes of military organization, the Regular Army of the United States on the one hand and the militia of the States upon the other.

I want to say that everything which can be done for the purpose of aiding the militia to be made the most efficient of military corps possible, giving them the best of equipment, giving them the best of instruction, giving them the best of experience in camps, and everything else, and giving them all the money that is needed to make them efficient—all that I am in favor of, and I will go as far as any man to accomplish this for the National Guard.

I think that is the great need. But when it comes to saying that the great purpose of the Constitution shall be negatived, and that the citizenry of the country, instead of belonging to the militia of the States, to be availed of by the General Government in the way in which the Constitution provides, shall themselves be set apart and be reached by the direct enrollment of the Federal Government of those in civil life and while they remain in civil avocations is to my mind a violation of the Constitution and is not to be approved.

Senators say that in point of numbers to be enrolled it is a small thing. In the first place, I think that matter is very much underestimated, even as to this bill. This bill prescribes that soldiers enlisted for seven years shall at the expiration of four years be furloughed, and that they shall continue to be in the service but shall live in the States as furloughed soldiers, without pay, subject to be called back to the Army when they are needed. I repeat that those are men in nowise subject to the ordinary duties of citizenship while they are in that position. They are not subject to the call of the governor for any purpose. They are not subject to the call of any peace officer for any purpose. They are not subject to the call of the courts for any purpose except as witnesses. That, of course, can not be refused by anybody.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], speaking of this, said that there were only about 13,000 discharges in the Army each year, if I recollect aright. Am I correct as to his statement?

Mr. WARREN. I did not hear the statement, but that is approximately true.

Mr. BACON. That was the statement of the Senator from Delaware yesterday, if I remember rightly.

Mr. WARREN. It is approximately that.

Mr. BACON. But that does not make it the number by any means of the men who would be put in this position, being in each State in the ordinary avocations of life, occupied as other men are, and yet not be subject to the jurisdiction of the States in the ordinary duties of citizenship. If the State should have a law which required a man to do military service, he could not be called out for it, because he is enrolled in the Army of the United States.

He would have the exemption, as I previously stated, from jury duty. He could not be called upon and compelled to act as a member of the posse comitatus or to perform any duty of that kind. In other words, he is set apart; he is separated from other citizens of the State.

To that 13,000 a great many are to be added. The ordinary discharges from the Army, as I understand from the Senator from Delaware, are about 13,000 a year; but, according to this provision, a soldier now will be enlisted for seven years, and the entire number of that enlistment will at the expiration of four years be put upon this reserve. That will certainly very largely exceed the 13,000. But it does not stop there. Every year the numbers would accumulate and increase.

There is a further provision here which will enable every soldier of the United States who has heretofore been discharged, who is in good physical condition and under 45 years of age and is honorably discharged, to come and be enrolled in this service. So it vastly exceeds the number which the Senator speaks of. In a few years it would or could run up to 100,000 men.

But, Mr. President, what guaranty have we that it is to stop here? If it be true that the purpose is to provide the supply of soldiers which will be needed upon a case of emergency, what is the limit to it except the estimate as to how many will be needed? It is not necessary that the soldier should have gone through four years of his enlisted service in order to be available for that if the law can be changed to meet the requirement in some other way. It is entirely possible for Congress to pass a law which shall say that the soldier shall be enlisted for a month and then furloughed for seven years. They can provide by a law to enlist them for a day, and then to furlough them for the balance of the seven years.

Of course, those are extreme cases, but if the policy is to be pursued, if we are to enter upon this policy of the Federal Government having in reserve men who are to be called in sufficient numbers to meet the emergency, instead of calling the troops from the States, as has heretofore been done, why will they not go to the extent of making a provision which will provide all that are necessary for that purpose? It is manifest and indisputable that if this legislation is constitutional and is good policy to best secure the efficiency of the Army, then the system can be so extended by the necessary legislation as to secure in this way all the men needed for military service and utterly destroy the National Guard.

Mr. President, I think it is a fundamental proposition that every citizen of a State capable of bearing arms and not in the active military service of the United States is, by every principle of our Government, subject to the order of the governor when required to enfore the law or maintain authority.

It is a violation of this fundamental principle to enact a law by the Federal Government which will set apart a certain class of citizens of the State and say that they shall be subject only to the call of the President and to the military duty prescribed by Congress; that they shall not be subject to the call of the governor for any military duty that may be laid upon them by the legislatures of their States. It is equally true that the citizen not only owes the duty of bearing arms upon the call of the governor, but he owes all this other public service of which I have spoken and which it is improper that the State should be deprived of—all the duties of maintaining order, responding to the command of a peace officer, or serving on a posse comitatus, serving on juries, or doing anything else in the way of ordinary duty that is required of a citizen. This, Mr. President, absolutely prevents that. If a State should by law require all able-bodied men to be enrolled and organized militia—as has been frequently done—these men although mingling as ordinary citizens would be exempt from such duty.

My purpose in presenting these views is to put myself on the record and register my protest against this legislaton, for I am satisfied that as time passes the evil will be seen and realized.

I said that for 10 years past there had been an effort on this line. I am going to read now from a bill which was introduced here 10 years ago. At that time it was most vigorously opposed by the then Senator from Virginia, Mr. Daniel, and the then Senator from Alabama, Mr. Pettus, and I contributed what little I could on the same line, and it was then defeated because it was in a bill where it could be discussed and where Senators could consider it. Senators are not now considering this amendment reported by the conferees. We all know that fact. I did not expect when I started that they would consider it, because they take it as a foregone conclusion that having been put upon an appropriation bill in these last hours of the session it is obliged to be enacted, as they can not get it out of the report. They are not considering it. They have had no opportunity to consider it. They will have an opportunity hereafter, I think.

Here is the act which was introduced 10 years ago. It was then sought to accomplish practically the same thing by engrafting it upon a militia bill, through the twenty-fourth section of that militia bill, which is in these words. Senators will see that while there is a difference in detail, there is a marked resemblance in the effort to accomplish exactly the same thing.

Section 24, a section which I said was finally taken out of the bill, is as follows:

SEC. 24. That for the purpose of providing a reserve force of trained men which shall be ready for immediate service whenever called for and organized under authority of Congress, the Secretary of War is authorized to apportion among the several States and Territories and to enroll not exceeding 100,000 men who shall have served in the Regular or Volunteer Armies of the United States or in the Organized Militia. Such reserve force shall be designated as the national volunteer reserve, and when called forth by the President shall serve wherever ordered, within or without the territory of the United States. Such enrollment shall, in each case, continue for a period of five years, but in the event they shall be called into the service of the United States, other than for the purpose of drill, inspection, and instruction, they shall be entitled to be discharged at the close of the war or after nine months' service. The persons so enrolled shall report for drill, inspection, and instruction at such times and places to be specified and under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, and each person so reporting shall, during the time of such service, be subject, as far as practicable, to the regulations and discipline governing the military establishment, and shall be entitled to the same pay and allowances as are or may be provided by law for the Army of the United States, to be paid out of the appropriation for the pay of the Army, but in time of peace, except in case of threatened invasion, said national volunteer reserve shall not be required to perform military duty to exceed 10 days in any one year. Whenever a volunteer force shall be called for by authority of Congress, and the members of any companies, troops, batteries, battalions, or regiments of the Organized Militia shall enlist in the Volunteer Army in bodies, such companies, troops, batteries, battalions, or regiments shall be received as the first organizations of such volunteer force. Whenever a volunteer force shall be called for by authority of Congress exceeding in number the companies, troops, batteries, battalions, and regiments of the Organized Militia, which shall enlist in bodies pursuant to the provisions of section 6 of the act entitled "An act to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes," approved April 22, 1898, the persons so enrolled as a reserve force of trained men, or so many thereof as shall be required, shall be organized in the manner provided for the organization of the volunteer force by section 12 of the act entitled "An act for increasing the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1899: Provided, That the President of the United States, in time of peace, may, by order, fix the minimum number of enlisted men in each company, troop, battery, signal corps, engineer corps, and hospital corps: Provided further, That no person shall belong to both organizations at the same time.

In discussing that bill on that occasion I said:

"This bill in so far as it provides for the organization and arming and discipline of the militia is substantially all right and meets my approval. But section 24 violates this provision of the Constitution as well as others. It takes out a part of the citizen soldiery of a State, provides for their being officered by the United States, and takes them away from the authority and training of the State in which they live and puts them, so far as military duty is concerned, under the exclusive authority of the President and of Congress. The President of the United States can call on these citizens for military duty, but the governor of the State can not, although riot and insurrection may be at their doors. These men, thus enrolled and set apart, are to be still citizens and civilians in a State, but the governor can not call on them for any military duty whatever, nor can the State by any law impose any military duty upon them. They are to be subject to the orders of the President in military matters, but not to the orders of the governor.

"The governor of a State is the military head of the State in the same way that the President is the military head of the United States. The duty to preserve order, to put down insurrection, to maintain law, devolves upon the governor in a State in the same manner and even in greater degree than it devolves upon the President in the United States. Every citizen of the State capable of bearing arms and not in the active military service of the United States is, by every principle of our Government, subject to the order of the governor when required to enforce law and maintain authority. It is a violation of this fundamental principle to enact a law by the Federal Government which shall set apart a certain class of the citizens of the State and say that they shall be subject only to the call of the President and to the military duty prescribed by Congress; that they shall not be subject to the call of the governor or to any military duty which may be laid upon them by the legislature of their State."

That section 24 was offered as a section to a general militia bill, but the purpose was the same. It was to affect the great organization of citizens in the military service of the United States, men engaged in civil vocations, men living at their homes, men in every respect, so far as outward appearance and occupation are concerned, just like all other citizens of the same community, and yet that they should be enrolled, and be a part of the Army of the United States and that they should not be subject to the same duties and liabilities to the State that other citizens are. When such a man is summoned as a juror, he would say "No, I will not serve as a juror; I am enrolled in the Army." If he were summoned by a sheriff on a posse comitatus, he would answer, "No, I will not go with you; I belong to the United States Army." If he is summoned for any public duty that can be conceived of he can respond, "No, I am not subject to your law, and I will not obey your command. I am subject only to the law and the command of those who are in authority in the Army."

Mr. President, I repeat, it may seem like a small thing when there are a few men who are thus set apart, but if it is wrong in principle it ought not to be countenanced even as to the few men, and if it is a proper policy to pursue, it should not be limited to a few men, but it can be as easily extended to a million men as it can be to 25,000 or 50,000 men.

Right in that connection I am going to read, in order that it may appear in juxtaposition, the provision of law which is proposed by these conferees:

SEC. 2. That, for the purpose of utilizing as an auxiliary to the Army reserve hereafter provided for the services of men who have had experience and training in the Regular Army, in time of war or when war is imminent, and after the President shall, by proclamation, have called upon honorably discharged soldiers of the Regular Army to present themselves for reenlistment therein within a specified period, subject to such conditions as may be prescribed in said proclamation, any person who shall have been discharged honorably from said Army, with character reported as at least good, and who having been found physically qualified for the duties of a soldier, if not over 45 years of age, shall reenlist in the line of said Army or in the Signal or Hospital Corps thereof within the period that shall be specified in said proclamation, shall receive on so reenlisting a bounty which shall be computed at the rate of $8 for each month for the first year of the period that shall have elapsed since his last discharge from the Regular Army and the date of reenlistment therein under the terms of said proclamation; at the rate of $6 per month for the second year of such period; at the rate of $4 per month for the third year of such period; and at the rate of $2 per month for any subsequent year of such period, but no bounty in excess of $300 shall be paid to any person under the terms of this act.

Mr. President, the provision which I have just read is not subject to any criticism which I have made at all because that does not enroll the discharged soldier; it simply provides that any discharged soldier who is of the proper age and physically qualified, if he will reenlist when called for by the President, shall have these amounts of money paid to him; and while it might be questioned as to whether or not that was a proper expenditure, there is nothing in the principle to be objected to in that. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming if it is not the provision practically that was in the bill as it passed the Senate? Am I correct in that?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Georgia refers to the provision as to what? I do not know whether I caught it clearly.

Mr. BACON. The provision that I have just read, which contemplates the enlistment of the discharged soldiers and that they be paid certain amounts according to the length of time they have been out of service.

Mr. WARREN. That is, if brought into the service?

Mr. BACON. Yes; if brought into the service. That is what passed the Senate, is it not?

Mr. WARREN. That was a part of it.

Mr. BACON. Well, the subsequent part about soldiers who would remain who are furloughed was not in the Senate part of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. May I suggest to the Senator from Georgia, since he has asked the question, that he must remember that we had to merge two differences into that.

Mr. BACON. I understand that, but that fact does not make legal or proper the action of the conferees in introducing and reporting this provision for a reserve composed of furloughed men. That is absolutely new and beyond their power.

Mr. WARREN. And that required the assembling of the two, as both sides had to be considered.

Mr. BACON. I am going to read this through. I am coming back to that discussion. I am going to read it through, because I wish in the RECORD to appear the bill which was acted upon 10 years ago and this provision in reasonable juxtaposition; and when I get through that I am coming back then to discuss the question whether that provision which I have just read authorizes the subsequent provision which has been engrafted on the bill. I will read the remainder of it. Here comes a part of it:

And that on and after November 1, 1912, all enlistments in the Regular Army shall be for the term of seven years, the first four years in the service with the organizations of which those enlisting shall form a part, and, except as otherwise provided herein, the last three years on furlough and attached to the Army reserve hereinafter provided for: Provided, That at the expiration of four years' continuous service with such organizations, either under a first or any subsequent enlistment, any soldier may be reenlisted for another period of seven years, as above provided for, in which event he shall receive his final discharge from his prior enlistment: Provided further, That any enlisted man, at the expiration of three years' continuous service with such organizations, either under a first or any subsequent enlistment, upon his written application, may be furloughed and transferred to the Army reserve, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, in which event he shall not be entitled to reenlist in the service until the expiration of his term of seven years—

I pause here just long enough to call attention to the fact that this furlough term is not limited to three years; but instead of serving out his four years and then being furloughed for three years he may, at the expiration of three years, be furloughed for four years and then occupy this distinguished and exceptional position in the community in which he lives as a furloughed soldier. This would increase the number of these reserves (practically civilians) by 33 per cent—

Provided further, That for all enlistments hereafter accomplished under the provisions of this act four years shall be counted as an enlistment period in computing continuous-service pay: Provided further, That hereafter the Army reserve shall consist of all enlisted men who, after having served not less than four years with the organizations of which they form a part, shall receive furloughs without pay or allowances until the expiration of their terms of enlistment, together with transportation in kind and subsistence as provided for by this act in the case of discharged soldiers, but when any soldier is furloughed to the reserve his accounts shall be closed and he shall be paid in full to the date such furlough becomes effective: Provided further, That any enlisted man, subject to good conduct and physical fitness for duty, upon his written application to that effect, shall have the right of remaining with the organization to which he belongs until the completion of his whole enlistment, without passing into the reserve: Provided further, That except upon reenlistment after four years' service or as now otherwise provided for by law, no enlisted man shall receive a final discharge until the expiration of his seven-year term of enlistment, including his term of service in the Army reserve, but any such enlisted man may be reenlisted for a further term of seven years under the same conditions in the Army at large, or, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, for a term of three years in the Army reserve; and any person who may have been discharged honorably from the Regular Army, with character reported as at least good, and who has been found physically qualified for the duties of a soldier, if not over 45 years of age, may be enlisted in the Army reserve for a similar term of three years: And provided further, That in the event of actual or threatened hostilities the President, when so authorized by Congress, may summon all furloughed soldiers who belong to the Army reserve to rejoin their respective organizations, and during the continuance of their service with such organizations they shall receive the pay and allowances authorized by law for soldiers serving therein, and any enlisted man who shall have reenlisted in the Army reserve shall receive during such service the additional pay now provided by law for the soldiers of his arm of the service in their second enlistment period. Upon reporting for duty, and being found physically fit for service, they shall receive a sum equal to $5 per month for each month during which they shall have belonged to the reserve, as well as the actual cost of transportation and subsistence from their homes to the places at which they may be ordered to report for duty under such summons.

Now, Mr. President, I return to the first paragraph and the question as to whether or not that or anything else in this bill authorized the conferees to engraft upon this bill the provision for a furloughed force, which should constitute the Army reserve. In the first paragraph which passed the Senate, and to which I had no objection, there was simply a provision that any discharged soldier who, when called upon by the President, should reenlist, should be paid a certain amount of money as a bounty; that is all. There is not a line or a letter about any outside force in civil life that should exist as a furloughed force. It contemplated simply those who should have been discharged, and says that any soldier who has heretofore or who may hereafter be discharged and who shall respond to the call of the President to reenlist shall be paid a certain bounty; and that is the entire thing.

Outside of that, the only other point of difference upon which this committee relies as a justification for this radical and new measure is that the House had provided for an enlistment of seven years and the Senate had provided for an enlistment of three or four years; I have forgotten which. That certainly has nothing to do with the question of the organization of a large force of men which shall be scattered throughout the country as a reserve force enrolled in the Army and standing nominally on furlough. Of course, anybody can see that this furlough provision is only a device. The object is to, in fact, set apart a body of men in civil life in the States who shall be subject to the orders of the military authority of the United States and who shall not be subject to the orders of their State in the performance of either civil or military duties.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. HEYBURN. Could one of these furloughed soldiers be made amenable to military trial or punishment for publishing an attack upon a superior officer in the command to which he belonged?

Mr. BACON. I do not know to what extent in detail the Army regulations would apply to him; but certainly, if he is on furlough, he is a soldier; and it would seem to me that he would be subject to the Army regulations, as any other soldier would be who is on furlough for a day.

Mr. HEYBURN. Any soldier on furlough under existing law and regulations is liable to punishment by the military authorities. Whether the furlough be for 1 day or 10 years would make no difference. He might wear his uniform. Might he vote?

Mr. BACON. Soldiers vote, except where they are prohibited in certain States.

Mr. HEYBURN. He might take part in political campaigns and make speeches.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. And exercise the influence of citizenship; but he would not pay the poll tax.

Mr. BACON. And he could not be made to serve on a jury.

Mr. HEYBURN. No.

Mr. BACON. Nor could he be made to serve on a posse comitatus or do military service to the State.

Mr. HEYBURN. A soldier, under the laws of many of the States, is not liable for jury duty.

Mr. ROOT. That is, by the laws of the States?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. I am familiar with the laws of some of the States, and I doubt if any State allows a soldier—and, of course, a man being on furlough is a soldier—to perform jury duty. I think the bill is insufficient in its provisions. It does not sufficiently define the status of a furloughed soldier of this peculiar class. The bill should in express terms define the status of a furloughed soldier under the circumstances presented by this measure. I have no particular objection to the establishment of a reserved force, but I think it should be done so guardedly as to avoid embarrassing situations. When you turn twenty-five or thirty thousand people loose among a community whose rights are defined and limited in their relations to each other and to the Government, they should all be uniform in those rights and those duties. I do not like a class of military citizenship in the open body of the citizenship of the country. The bill should be so framed as to define their status and avoid any obnoxious features that might arise. I merely make these suggestions in order that it may not seem hereafter that we passed them over without giving them at least some consideration.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, what the Senator says illustrates the absolute impropriety, if I may use so strong an expression as that, in bringing this provision in here on a conference report, where we can not perfect it. I am very free to say to the Senator that, while I think the provision is fundamentally objectionable, it could be made in detail very much less objectionable.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have grown so accustomed to that course of procedure in about 10 years of service here that I suppose my political conscience is somewhat calloused. There are a good many important features of legislation that are now laws which were brought in in that way, so that I do not feel impelled to raise that objection.

Mr. President, as I have said, this is but a beginning. Are we to establish it as a policy? If it is a policy, and a correct policy, then the only limitation is the securing of enough men upon this volunteer reserve force to answer the needs of the Government in times of emergency. And to that there is the objection that it is the utter annihilation of the provision in the Constitution which looks to our militia in the various States, of which the National Guard is the important part, as the great reserve to be drawn on for an army. I repeat that is the feature to which the War Department to-day should turn its attention—to make that an efficient force; to make it a strong force, so that the National Guard should be effective and everything in harmony between the National Government and the States. I think it should be very much larger than it is and that there should be very much more attention paid to making it efficient.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from Georgia has had long and honorable service in this body. He has very earnestly expressed his condemnation of the practice of engrafting general legislation upon appropriation bills. I suppose every Member of this body recognizes that practice as being wrong.

I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia what he thinks is the remedy for that evil.

Mr. BACON. I will reply to that with pleasure. In this case it is not the engrafting of general legislation upon an appropriation bill, but it is the engrafting of it by a conference report.

Mr. WORKS. But the principal is the same.

Mr. BACON. It is, I think, vastly different in practical operation, for this reason. When a supply bill comes over from the other House with a piece of general legislation engrafted upon it, we have full opportunity for the discussion of it, at a time when Senators will give it their proper consideration. We have full opportunity to amend it or to attempt to amend it and we have full opportunity to reject it without at the same time rejecting the whole bill. In the case of a provision put upon a bill by the conference committee we do not have full opportunity for discussion, because these reports, especially upon the supply bills, come in during the closing hours of a session. We do not have any opportunity for amendment, and we can not reject a part of the report as to one item without rejecting the whole of it.

Mr. WORKS. But notwithstanding that, when it comes to the final vote, Senators are frequently forced to vote for a part of a bill in which they do not believe simply because it is on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BACON. That is true, and as a rule, I think that practice ought to be condemned.

I recognize the fact, however, and the Senator from California, as a student of history, must recognize it, that there are occasions when it is necessary to secure legislation and the legislation may be of paramount importance. It is a fact that many of the most important provisions of our present law, the benefits of which we enjoy, were secured only by being engrafted upon supply bills and which could not have been secured otherwise.

Mr. WORKS. At all events, there is only one certain way to break up that practice, and that is for Senators to follow the dictates of their judgment and cease to indulge in the practice.

Mr. BACON. I think it should be condemned. I say, without the limitation that I put upon that particular response, that it not only should be condemned as a general practice, but it should be universally condemned whenever it is sought to engraft new matter upon a bill through the recommendation of a conference committee.

In this particular instance, I repeat that, so far as I am able to judge of the correctness or incorrectness of the action of the conference committee, it is absolutely and utterly without warrant. There was nothing in the bill providing the manner in which discharged soldiers could reenlist which in any manner relates to or justifies the incorporation of a provision that after four years' service, through the fiction of a pretended furlough, soldiers should in fact be returned to civil life and yet remain on the rolls of the Army and exempt from all the duties which citizens ordinarily owe to their State—set apart as a set of men peculiar to themselves under an authority from the Federal Government which must in no manner be trenched upon or violated by the State in demanding of that citizen of the State the services which ordinarily are due to it.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words in regard to this provision of the bill. I happen to be one of the conferees who agreed to it, and I think it is an excellent provision. Whether it was prepared or recommended by the Secretary of War or not is not a material matter. The question is, whether it is good legislation.

You know, Mr. President, that in time of peace the companies are reduced to about half their number, and this bill simply provides a means by which the companies can be filled in time of war or when war is threatened to the necessary number of trained soldiers.

I have had some little experience in war, and I know something about the necessity for trained soldiers. I became a trained soldier myself, but it took me nearly a year so to become.

Now, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] speaks of the vast number of men who will be withdrawn from the duties of civil life. According to the best information I can obtain the whole number who would probably be in this reserve corps would not exceed 30,000, not as many as 700 to the average State, to be withdrawn from jury and other civil duties.

Now, there is no provision in the bill by which the Secretary of War has any authority whatever over these reserve soldiers. They get no pay, and they can only be called in after Congress has authorized the President of the United States to call them; and I hardly think that Congress or the President would call them except upon grave occasion, and when that arose we should be most delighted to have them come.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Alabama will allow me, my objection is not so much to what they shall do when they are called back to service as it is during the time when they are not so called.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. They are merely citizens of the State. They can go on and pursue the usual vocations without any restraint from the War Department, and so far as concerns this provision they can go along; they draw no pay and are subject to the law of the State, to keep the peace and in every way. They could become members of volunteer companies. They could become members of the organizations—Organized Militia—and they would be a valuable accession to it. So I think this is an excellent provision and one that should be adopted.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I wish rather to put into the RECORD the statement of what I conceive to be the true basis for this legislation than to occupy the time of the Senate by any extended discussion.

I have the highest respect for the opinions of the Senator from Georgia. Whatever he says upon a question arising out of the Constitution of the United States I regard as entitled to most serious and respectful consideration. But I think, and I have thought for many years, during all the long history the Senator from Georgia has referred to—the history of the attempt to secure something which may be called a reserve force for the Army of the United States—that the Senator from Georgia builds up his opinion, regarding a reserve force, upon an essentially false basis.

The Senator has said that the spirit of the Constitution forbids the creation of a reserve force other than the militia. I am not endeavoring to give his words accurately, but that is the substance, and the Senator now indicates his assent.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from New York is entirely accurate in that statement if he will include in it "other than the regular active force of the Army."

Mr. ROOT. Yes; I mean to indicate that distinction, by including the word "reserve" in my statement.

Now, sir, the Senator has referred to the two provisions in the Constitution contained in the first article, which sets out the powers of the legislative branch as the basis for the assertion that the creation of any reserve force for the Army of the United States is in violation of the spirit of the Constitution. He does not say that it is in violation of the letter of the Constitution, but of the spirit. Those two provisions are, first, that Congress shall have power—to raise and support Armies.

And, second—

That Congress shall have power to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

And then there is the further provision—for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions.

Mr. President, there are here two independent and different fields of action indicated. The one is to raise and support armies, with no limitation upon the scope of action of the armies so raised and supported. The other is to provide for organizing the Army and for disciplining the militia, with a limitation upon the use to which the militia can be put. For the power of Congress over the militia is to call it forth to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions, and that I take it to be unquestioned, is the enumeration of the things to be done within the territory of the United States—whatever has to be done within our territory—the execution of the laws of the Union that are to be executed within our jurisdiction; the suppression of insurrections, which must be within our jurisdiction; the repelling of invasions, which must be invasions in our own jurisdiction. For these things the militia must be used. But for all that field of warlike operations which go beyond the frontier of the United States the militia may not be used, and for all offensive defense the Army of the United States is the sole military power under the control of the Nation.

Now, sir, we have during our entire military history experienced upon each recurring occasion of war the necessity of immediately and greatly, and under stress of imminent need for action, increasing the Army of the United States. That is to say, whenever war comes we are obliged to increase the Army, which is not subject to the restrictions resting upon the use of the militia. We have always done it. An effort was made in the War of 1812 to get armed militia and then to get armed volunteer companies, officered by appointment by the governors of the States, and it was a dismal and humiliating failure. In the act of January 29, 1813, passed at the instance of James Madison, the President was authorized to increase the Army of the United States, to increase that military force which was not subject to the limitations resting upon the militia, by raising a force of 50,000 volunteers, to be officered by the appointment of the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, volunteers who became a part of the military establishment of the United States. In the Mexican War——

Mr. BACON. I should like to interrupt the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. ROOT. I do.

Mr. BACON. I do not want the Senator to understand me as taking a position in conflict with that action.

Mr. ROOT. I will answer the Senator in a few minutes if he will pardon me, for not breaking in on the line of remarks which I am now making. In the Mexican War we endeavored to get on by the use of the small Regular Army, which at the beginning of the war was only between six and seven thousand, and militia, illegally sending the militia across the boundary into Mexico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York will suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from New York will proceed.

Mr. ROOT. I say illegally sending the militia across the border at a time when it was universally agreed that they had a right to refuse to go. We were unable to carry on the war in that way, and were compelled to have recourse to a statute providing that the President of the United States might call for and accept the services of volunteers, not exceeding 50,000 in number.

In the Civil War, immediately upon the breaking out of hostilities we had recourse to the raising of a volunteer force, and that great conflict was fought by volunteers and not by militia.

In the War with Spain the first thing we did was to call for volunteers; that is to say, an increase of the military establishment of the United States as distinguished from militia, and that war was fought by such a force and not by militia.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not wish to unduly interrupt him.

Mr. ROOT. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. BACON. But the Senator and I can not misunderstand each other on that point. When I speak of militia I include in that term all military organizations of a State, including those whom the Senator calls volunteers, the National Guard, or anything of that kind. I think that general term embraces all that class of soldiery, and of course all the soldiers on both sides in the Civil War were in that sense militia. But I am not splitting hairs on the subject of the term militia, except so far as to say that I understand it to mean all State military organizations.

Mr. ROOT. I am not going to discuss the meaning of militia. I mean the militia of the States; and I am drawing a distinction between those forces which are a part of the military establishment of the United States and the militia of the States.

When we came to suppress the insurrection in the Philippines Congress provided for the raising of a force of 35,000 volunteers, the officers to be appointed and commissioned by the President of the United States, and that war was fought by those volunteers in addition to the Regular Army.

The militia, including all the organizations which the Senator from Georgia describes, is insufficient in number to answer to the demands of the country in any considerable war. The purposes for which its members are enlisted are not the purposes that have to be attained in any considerable war. The constitutional authority of the Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States over them, the constitutional authority of Congress over them, are inevitable to the carrying on of any considerable war by the use of them.

The only way in which we can prepare for any war which would really exhibit danger to our country is to make adequate preparation in time for the increase of the military establishment of the United States. I say that all our history shows that inevitably immediately when the stress comes we turn to the increase of that military establishment.

Now, sir, the object of this legislation is to take one not very great step, but a step dictated by ordinary common sense, suggested by the experience of all countries in the world, suggested by our own experience, toward having the preparation for that necessary process made beforehand. Statesmanship consists in foreseeing the necessities of the future. When war comes action must be swift, decisive, and effective. There is no time to consider and discuss the details of organization and the machinery necessary to progress. In time of peace, when men can consider deliberately the methods by which the military establishment may be quickly and effectively increased, is the time to discuss and adopt provisions for the machinery, instead of waiting until everybody is in excitement and judgments are swayed by feeling and impulse and then hurriedly adopting a jury-writ system which is sure to be defective and inefficient.

We have long had upon our statute books a provision recognizing that, and which provides for a maximum and minimum of the Regular Army, the idea being that in time of peace the Regular Army need not be kept up to its war standard so that they are obliged to maintain an unnecessary number of soldiers. We fix the number of regiments of Infantry, of Cavalry, and of Artillery, and the numbers of the different corps. We fix the maximum number, the war strength, and we fix the minimum, and we allow the President, according to the exigencies which appear to him, to let the numbers run down to the minimum. I am not certain what it is just now, but when that system was established in the statutes it made a maximum of about 100,000 and a minimum of about 60,000; that is to say, a difference of about 40,000 between the amount of the Army at war strength and the amount of the Army on a peace basis. Whenever the President under that system sees the war cloud rising he can without any display, any discussion in Congress, or any of those pronunciamentos or educations which tend to increase the danger of war, quietly enlist up to the war strength.

That is our system, a system adopted upon mature consideration and great discussion, in order that there might be in existence the machinery ready to move quietly and effectively to put our Regular Army on a war footing, and so that in the meantime during peace we would not be obliged to support the 40,000 men who would be called in for purposes of war.

Mr. President, this is a provision to accomplish the plain, common-sense purpose of enabling the military authorities to keep track of the trained soldiers whom they can call in in order to bring the Army up to its war footing. It is carefully framed so as to be adjusted to the existing statutes. That is the substance of what it is. It is to enable the President to execute the existing law effectively, to enable him to bring the Army up to its war strength, as he is now authorized to do, not by getting into it the raw men who offer themselves first, but by sending out and getting the experienced men who have had service, and who coming back to the colors will give it instantly an effective first line of defense. That is all there is to it.

The Senator from Georgia speaks about these people not being subject to the duties of citizenship. What is to hinder their being subject to the duties of citizenship? Where is the law that interferes with it?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. That is just what I intended to ask the Senator, whether he thought this provision would relieve the reserve force from all civil obligations.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, not at all. If that is a question of the statutes of the United States and the statutes of the States, I should like to be shown any law which prevents a man from being required to perform his duties toward his State, unless that performance interferes with his performance of duties to the United States.

If a man is furloughed for three years and goes to his home and goes to working his farm or plying his trade or practicing his profession, there is no interference at all with his duties to the United States by his being made subject to the requirements of his State law to perform his duties as a citizen. It is true that many States do grant to men who enlist in the militia, members of the National Guard, exemptions from jury duty as an inducement to get them to enlist, but that is entirely voluntary with the State. The State may exempt its furloughed soldiers from jury duty if they wish to, or it may not exempt them if they wish to.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator think that a soldier at Fort Myer could be summoned to jury duty in that county?

Mr. ROOT. I do not think that a soldier at Fort Myer could be summoned to jury duty, because it would be inconsistent with the performance of his duties as a soldier, serving under the colors and in his military organization, but I think if one of those men was given a leave of absence for three years and should go back home and become a part of the community in which he lived he could be summoned for jury duty; and he certainly can be unless you can point to some statute of the United States which prevents it. There may be such a statute, but I do not know of it.

Mr. BACON. Suppose he is furloughed for a week, does the Senator think that he could be summoned for jury duty?

Mr. ROOT. It is a question of interference. I will not go with the Senator into the question whether if he is furloughed for a day, a week, a month, or a year, or three years it would constitute an interference.

Mr. BACON. It is the principle which must control, and the principle is the same in one case as in the other.

Mr. ROOT. The principle that controls I have already stated, I think, correctly. It is that there can not be any demand made upon him which interferes with the performance of his duty to the Nation.

Mr. BACON. Who would be the judge of that?

Mr. ROOT. That depends upon how the demand is made. If the soldier is called upon to perform a civil duty and he objects to it, I suppose the judge, in the first instance, would be, whatever authority is entitled to hold him to the performance of that duty, and punish him for not performing it; and if he is threatened with punishment for not performing his duty he doubtless, under the existing statute, could remove his case into the Federal court and have the question determined by the Federal authority.

Mr. BACON. But if he were not an enlisted soldier he could not do that.

Mr. ROOT. If he were not?

Mr. BACON. No.

Mr. ROOT. The Senator is talking about men who are enlisted soldiers.

Mr. BACON. I am trying to show the Senator that an enlisted soldier on furlough would occupy a different relation to the State government from what the citizen who is not an enlisted soldier would occupy. In one case, if he is summoned to jury duty and refuses, the judgment of the judge as to whether he has been in contempt of court and is liable to jury duty would be final, and in the other case it would go to the United States court; and if the judge of the State court should find him in contempt and send him to jail the Federal judge would release him, while he would not release the ordinary citizen.

Mr. ROOT. That is to say, the difficulty arises from the fact that the measure of one man's obligation to perform a duty under the State authority would be decided by one tribunal, and that of another man by another tribunal.

Mr. BACON. No; it is to say that the relation and obligation in the one case is not the same as the relation and the obligation in the other.

Mr. ROOT. The relation is the same, the obligation is the same. If the citizen of a State alleges a public duty to the United States then he is entitled to have his claim passed upon by the authorities of the United States, but the obligation is the same and the relation is the same.

Now, this is attenuated, it is unsubstantial, it is impracticable, it is of no practical consequence compared with the efficiency of our law for the maintenance of a military establishment.

The Senator from Georgia differs from the War Department now and the War Department 10 years ago, because he has never felt the stress of the obligation to create an efficient military establishment.

Mr. BACON. Why does the Senator say that?

Mr. ROOT. I say that because the Senator never has been put where that responsibility was upon him.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is mistaken. I was a Member of Congress before the Spanish War; I was a Member of Congress during the Spanish War; I was here when the act was passed to which the Senator has alluded. If the Senator should take pains to look back he would find there was a very considerable debate upon that subject and that I was standing right where I stand now, that while I was opposed to the acquisition of the Philippine Islands and would set them free if I could do so, yet under my responsibility as a Senator I believed that I should contribute my aid to the raising of that Army. So I did have in part the responsibility.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I said that the Senator did not feel the stress of responsibility to make an effective provision for the military establishment of the United States, and I refer to the Senator's own argument to-day and to the record of the argument he made 10 years ago in support or that assertion. I say that this provision is a small and simple step toward making it possible to produce an efficient military establishment whenever war comes. It is a step along the line——

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. ROOT. In one moment. It is a step along the line that has been followed by every civilized nation which undertakes to maintain any army at all, so far as I know. It simply provides a means by which the Executive, whom we have already authorized to raise the Army from a minimum to a maximum, when war threatens, may be able to raise it by bringing in trained and efficient men instead of bringing in raw and incompetent men who do not know how to shoot or how to live out of doors, and whose inclusion in the military organizations would decrease the efficiency of those organizations when their efficiency is most urgently needed. Now, I yield to the Senator, and I yield the floor.

Mr. BACON. I wished to ask the Senator before he resumed his seat what he alluded to when he said he referred to the argument which I made 10 years ago? Did he mean in regard to section 24?

Mr. ROOT. I do; I refer to that.

Mr. BACON. I thought the Senator was referring really——

Mr. ROOT. I referred to that, and I think if the Senator from Georgia had ever had upon him the pressure which goes upon an officer who is charged with making an efficient army he never would have made the argument he made 10 years ago or the argument he has made here to-day.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is entirely mistaken about that. As I have said, I have stood here in a position of responsibility and to the best of my ability I met that responsibility. The Senator referred to my argument of 10 years ago. I thought he was referring to that, as I had myself alluded to the question of raising the army for the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, there is a large part—in fact, I may say the larger part—of the argument of the Senator with which I not only take no issue but with which I entirely agree. The only criticism I would have to make upon it is the application which he attempted to make of it to my position now. I am not in favor of putting any impediment in the way of all legitimate measures for the making of an efficient Army and for securing the services of the most efficient men. I am simply objecting to this particular method because I think it has in it a fatal vice and a very great objection. For illustration, in this same bill and in this same provision reported from the conference committee there is a provision under which all soldiers who have served in the Army and who are now under 45 years of age and in good physical condition, will have an inducement offered to them to reenlist whenever their services are required, and a bounty to an extent not exceeding $300 is provided for the purpose of accomplishing that end.

Mr. President, I am in thorough sympathy with that. While possibly, as I said, I am not prepared to pass on the question as to whether the amount of bounty is too great or not, I certainly would make no issue in regard to that. I approve that method and I approve other methods, and there are many of them which can be resorted to for the purpose of securing the services of the best men, best from the point either of experience or condition at that time. The act under which the army was raised for the Philippine service is still on the statute books and in force, if I am correct in my recollection. Of course I would yield to the Senator's superior familiarity with matters connected with the Army from the fact that he served as Secretary of War, but unless I am very much mistaken there is now upon the statute book a law which makes provision for the raising of troops in the same manner as the troops were raised for the Philippine war. I think it is the same law, and the matter which has called it to my recent recollection is that there is a bill now pending in the Senate, introduced by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], if I recollect aright, referring to that law and proposing to amend it, although I may be in error about that. I can not be misunderstood on that question.

I am in favor of everything which is necessary for the effective reenforcement of the Army. There is no question about the fact, and I stated it myself in my remarks this morning, that the power to raise armies on the part of the United States is one without limitation. It is only within the judgment of Congress as to what the size of the Army shall be. It is within the constitutional limitations on the particular methods adopted for the purpose of raising the Army. My objection is to constituting a part of the citizenry of the country in each State as a reserve instead of permitting them to be as the Constitution intended they should be, a part of the citizenry of the State, their services to be secured either by calling for them through the channel provided by the Constitution, through the State authorities, or by the Government itself making provision of law, as they did in 1898 and 1899, by the creation of the army which went to the Philippine service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to say one word with regard to that question. I realize, of course, as I said in the beginning, that the Senate is not now really a free agency. It is under bonds; it is obliged to pass this bill; and Senators who would disapprove of it would feel under obligation to support it. But my sole purpose was to put upon record my opposition to it and my reasons therefor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DETROIT, MICH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an item of appropriation for remodeling driveway and mailing platform at the post office and courthouse at Detroit, Mich., $8,000, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16611) setting apart a certain tract of land for a public highway, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24458) authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to deliver to certain cities and towns condemned bronze or brass cannon, with their carriages and outfit of cannon balls, etc.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 13016. An act for the relief of the West Kentucky Coal Co.;

H. R. 24322. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 24602. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 24996. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 25166. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 25713. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 26371. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes;

S. 6384. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 6851. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. J. Res. 349. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion, to be held at Ada, Okla., in September, 1912.

RELIEF FOR NATIVES OF ALASKA.

Mr. PAGE presented a petition of members of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Brattleboro, Vt., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide medical and sanitary relief for the natives of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

SAN JUAN, P. R., BRIDGE.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 26114) to authorize the Government of Porto Rico to construct a bridge across the Cano de Martin Pena, an estuary of the harbor of San Juan, P. R., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1065) thereon.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON THE LIBRARY.

Mr. WETMORE. I ask the Senate to take from the calendar and put on its passage Senate resolution 365, submitted by me and reported favorably from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS].

There being no objection, the resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time as may be necessary to report such hearings as may be had on bills or other matters pending before said committee during the Sixty-second Congress, and to have the same printed for its use; and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 7495) to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquor to minors and Indians within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 7496) granting an increase of pension to Ephraim Benedict Murphy (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WORKS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 137) requesting from the President of the United States information concerning the exemption of American importers of manila hemp from payment of the export tax thereon; to the Committee on Finance.

NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME, SANTA MONICA, CAL.

On motion of Mr. WORKS, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying Senate resolution No. 160, Sixty-second Congress, "providing for an investigation of the management of the branch National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, Santa Monica, Cal.," be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, there having been no adverse report thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—GEORGE KILLEEN.

On motion of Mr. BANKHEAD, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying Senate bill 4828, Fifty-eighth Congress, "for the relief of George Killeen," be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, there having been no adverse report thereon.

RECALL OF JUDGES (S. DOC. NO. 941).

Mr. CLAPP. I have a copy of an address by James Manahan, of Minneapolis, delivered before the Minnesota State Bar Association at Duluth, Minn., July 19, 1912, on the recall of judges. I ask that the address be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On August 23, 1912:

S. 4301. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to lease to the Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Railway Co. a tract of land in the Fort Keogh Military Reservation in the State of Montana, and for a right of way thereto for the removal of gravel and ballast material;

S. 4679. An act to amend section 95 of the "Act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911;

S. 5882. An act to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Yankton, S. Dak., by the Winnipeg, Yankton & Gulf Railroad Co.;

S. 6688. An act to repeal section 13 of the act approved March 2, 1907, entitled "An act amending an act entitled 'An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes'";

S. 6763. An act to authorize the cities of Bangor and Brewer, Me., to construct or reconstruct, wholly or in part, and maintain and operate a bridge across the Penobscot River between said cities without a draw;

S. 7424. An act to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled "An act to authorize Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River"; and

S. 4050. An act for the relief of Catherine Ratchford.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I now ask unanimous consent for the consideration of House bill 25970, being the general deficiency appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 25970) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1912 and for prior years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object to limiting the reading to committee amendments. As the bill is read, I insist that any amendment which any Senator desires to submit should be presented as well as committee amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming modify his request?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am only making the request for the convenience of the Senate. If Senators will notice, as we go through the bill, what it already contains they will, I think, be better informed at what point they desire to offer amendments.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think it is practicable to read the bill merely for committee amendments, without giving the same opportunity to Senators to offer amendments.

Mr. WARREN. Then I withdraw the request. We can have the formal reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wyoming must have misunderstood me. I will enter no objection to the reading of the bill for amendment, but I insist that any Senator who desires to present an amendment should have the privilege of doing so when a clause is read at the same time the committee amendments are considered. We pursued that course in the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill, with the approval of the chairman of that committee, and we found that it very greatly facilitated our work.

Mr. WARREN. I prefer that the rule should prevail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill having been concluded, the first amendment proposed by the committee will be stated.

Mr. WARREN. I think it would be well to take up the bill for amendments, such as may be offered by Senators and such as the committee has reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be done.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Department of State," on page 2, after line 22, to insert:

Eradication of the opium evil: To enable the Government to conclude its efforts to mitigate our national opium evil and, with the cooperation of the other nations of the world, to mitigate, if not entirely stamp out, the abuses connected with the international traffic in opium and other habit-forming drugs through a second international conference, to be held at The Hague, and otherwise by further investigation and proceedings, to continue available during the fiscal year 1913, $25,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 8, to insert:

Exemption from requirements of section 8 of District of Columbia act for fiscal year 1913: The provisions of section 8 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," approved June 26, 1912, shall not be applicable to any appropriation made under the control of the Department of State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 18, to insert:

Payment to Malambo fire claimants: To pay the allowances made to the Malambo fire claimants under article 6 of the treaty of November 18, 1903, between the United States and Panama, as recommended by the President in his special message to Congress of December 13, 1911, in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary of War, $53,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 2, to insert:

Payment of sums contributed for the release of Miss Ellen M. Stone: To enable the Secretary of State to return to such contributors as may file their claims, duly proved and authenticated, within two years from the passage of this act, the money raised to pay the ransom for the release of Miss Ellen M. Stone, an American missionary to Turkey, who was abducted by brigands on September 3, 1901, $66,000.

Mr. WARREN. I send to the desk an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 5, after the word "contributors," insert "or their legal representatives."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to know something about that before it is passed.

Mr. WARREN. I think the honorable Senator from Georgia will remember that this lady some years ago was made a captive by brigands, who seemed to be betwixt and between the Governments, and after long imprisonment there was, on the part of the generous people of this country, a fund raised to ransom her. It was raised among many contributors. Many of them were very poor people. In fact, to raise that amount 2,264 persons contributed. The circumstances were such that the foreign governments could not or were not held responsible. I will ask to have read from the desk, if I may, two extracts of a letter from the honorable Secretary of State, and perhaps the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] will give us further information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

It seems imperative that the amount (of the ransom) should be raised or pledged so as to be available by your treasurer at Constantinople in season to save Miss Stone. Statutory prohibitions make it impossible for this Government to advance the money or guarantee its payment. If paid by Miss Stone's friends, every effort will be made to obtain reimbursement from whichever Government may be found responsible under international law and precedent. In the event of its proving impossible to hold any foreign government responsible for the capture and to secure the repayment of the money, this Government is willing in the last resort to urge upon Congress as strongly as possible to appropriate money to repay the contributors.

* * * * * * *

After careful consideration of all the facts my predecessor, Mr. Hay, decided on January 19, 1905, that it was not advisable to attempt to hold the Turkish Government responsible for the capture and to secure the repayment of the money. Upon the subsequent application for reconsideration of this decision Mr. Hay again, on April 11, 1905, reaffirmed the judgment which he had originally expressed. Upon a further review of the same subject I have come to the conclusion that it is not advisable to reverse or change the conclusion which Mr. Hay reached.

It would seem, therefore, that the executive department is bound to make good its promise to recommend to Congress that money be appropriated to repay the ransom money, a promise which was probably relied upon by many of those who contributed of their private means to save the life of an American citizen believed to be in the gravest peril.

Accordingly I have the honor to advise that Congress be recommended to appropriate an amount sufficient to repay the contributors.

Respectfully submitted.

ELIHU ROOT.

Mr. WARREN. The matter of this repayment has also received the sanction of the Senate on two different occasions. But at those times the House did not seem to be sufficiently advised to take it up. However, since then the House has, in two Congresses, reported the matter favorably, and I understand it now stands upon its calendar favorably reported.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I do not suppose I can add anything to the letter from which extracts have just been read. There is no doubt that the people who contributed the fund to rescue this lady from her captivity did so in reliance upon the good faith of the Government of the United States, in compliance with the recommendation which the Secretary of State, Mr. Hay, agreed to make.

Of course, there is no legal obligation. Mr. Hay could not bind the Government of the United States, and he said he could not, but he said he would urge a recognition of the moral obligation on the part of Congress, and undoubtedly these people did make the contribution on the faith of that. I hope the Senate will concur in the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator how long has it been since the department heard anything from the original contributors? I ask the question, because I wish to know whether we can feel sure there has been no effort recently to gather together these various subscriptions, by purchase or assignment, so that the money will go to some assignee instead of the original subscriber.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I can not answer the Senator directly as to how long it has been since the department has heard, but I can say this, that down to the beginning of the year 1909 there were no indications whatever of the familiar process to which the Senator refers—of the collection of claims. All the communications which were received down to that time impressed me as coming from original contributors or from Miss Stone herself, who felt under great obligation to press a repayment to the people of the money they had spent in order to rescue her.

I observe that that matter, down to the present time, appears to have been chiefly in the hands of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. Miss Stone is, I believe, a constituent of his, and I think the contributors were largely from that section, and the only person I have observed to have any interest in it whatever is the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who has received communications from his constituents upon the subject.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from New York permit me for a moment?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I think I ought to say that in all the applications that have been made since I have been approached, I have never heard of any attorney or collection agency. All I have ever heard has been from one or two private citizens in New England whom I happened to know, who desired to represent how many of their neighbors had subscribed, and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and other Senators who knew a large number of these contributors.

I think it is entirely free from what the Senator from Georgia fears and what I should want to fear with him. If it was a matter of some attorney having gotten together these claims, who was going to profit largely by their payment, I should not feel like wanting to vote to appropriate the money; but I think it will go directly to the contributors, of whom there are over 2,000 and widely scattered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have no objection to the money going to the original subscribers, but I should object seriously if at this late day any assignments were to be recognized and the money should go to somebody who might have gathered up the assignments.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to make some inquiries in regard to this matter. Why should not some foreign Government be responsible to the American Government for this sum? Suppose an American citizen should be kidnaped in Mexico by a revolutionist there and held for a ransom and some of his friends should pay some bandit there $25,000 to let him loose, would the United States Government reimburse that man?

Mr. ROOT. All I can say about that is: Mr. Hay considered the subject, I know, very carefully and came to the conclusion that we could not maintain the claim against the Government of Turkey. Just why, I do not now remember. I think there had been notices given that there was danger, and the capture was a capture by brigands, or persons supposed to be brigands, from the mountains, who acknowledge no allegiance to government. It was doubtful just who they were and where they were from, except that they came down from the hills.

This lady was a missionary. I think quite likely the dictates of prudence would have kept her away from the place to which she went. On the whole, I am rather disposed to admire missionaries who are not too prudent. She probably went where strict observance of the rules and the notices by the Government regarding the safety of travelers would not have justified her in going. On the whole, Mr. Hay came to the conclusion that we could not maintain the claim.

Mr. BRISTOW. Are there any precedents for this kind of legislation?

Mr. WARREN. I will say, if the Senator addresses his question to me, that I do not know of any of that nature.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Kansas will permit me, I desire to say that I have been very familiar with this case from its inception to the present time, knowing Miss Stone and knowing some of the contributors to her ransom fund, many of whom are in my own State. Miss Stone is a citizen of Massachusetts. As a missionary she was in Turkey discharging her duties. She is a very superior woman, and is devoted to religious matters. She was captured by brigands in Turkey in 1901. The brigands made a demand for a large amount of money as a ransom. I have forgotten how much, but it was a very large amount, considerably over $100,000. It was impossible to raise that sum, but upon the suggestion by the State Department, in a telegram to Rev. Judson Smith, of Boston, that unless some foreign government could be held responsible it would be recommended that our Government should pay this ransom money, some twenty-two hundred and sixty-odd people contributed. Many of them were poor people, some of them clergymen. Most of them are alive; not all of them. Some of them contributed 50 cents. Kidder, Peabody & Co., bankers in Boston, who had charge of the fund, personally contributed a thousand dollars, and in one or two instances parties gathered together and contributed as much as $5,000. That was done by churches in Massachusetts. The list of contributors has been kept intact, and it has seemed to me all along that our Government was morally bound to repay these contributors. The Senate has since passed a bill appropriating the full amount of the ransom money.

When we stop to think of the appropriations we make here day after day for almost every conceivable purpose, it occurs to me that when we come to a moral obligation of the Government to pay an obligation such as this we ought not to hesitate a moment. This matter was taken up in the House of Representatives on two occasions and very thoroughly investigated. On one occasion Mr. PRINCE of Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Claims, favorably reported it, but it was then, I think, somewhat late in the session and the matter was not acted upon. Again, Mr. Fowler of New Jersey investigated it and made a very strong report, and upon inquiry I find that there was no objection in either case to the report, which recommended the payment of the claim.

Mr. President, I quite agree that this is not a legal claim, but there is certainly a very strong moral obligation under which the Government rests to these people, and I have personally been talked to by a good many of the contributors, who wonder why our Government, having given them reason to believe the money would be repaid, has not kept its implied promise.

I sincerely trust that as this matter has received the approval of the Senate twice and the approval of two committees of the House the amendment will be agreed to. Not only has the Senate passed the bill twice, but I think the Senate on two or three occasions has put this amendment on a deficiency appropriation bill, but it has been lost in conference. The Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate has twice favorably reported an amendment offered by me. I sincerely hope that it may be allowed to go to conference again, because I am very hopeful, in view of the fact that the House committees having reported favorably on it, the House conferees will agree to it and allow it to remain in the bill. This great Nation can not afford to be niggardly when its honor is at stake.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, the reason I made the inquiry is that it is not a very pleasing thought to an American citizen that his Government has to pay ransom to bandits anywhere to secure to American citizens their rights.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just one word here. I have always felt that it was an unfortunate circumstance that our Government did not hold the Government of Turkey responsible for this ransom money, but wiser men than I examined the matter and thought it was not advisable, and for some reason, undoubtedly for some good reason, no demand was made upon Turkey. I think if Great Britain had been involved, she would have made demands—that is my impression—and I think the Turkish Government would have been held responsible.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am inclined to agree with the Senator from New Hampshire on that, and I think we are entirely too good-natured in dealing with bandits in other countries than our own, whether they are or are not regarded as enemies to the Government in whose territory they operate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming whether he would consent to the following addition to his proposed amendment, in this language:

Provided, however, That no payment shall be made to any assignee of any contributor.

Mr. WARREN. Suppose it were a brother or sister

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. He or she would not be an assignee. Then it would be given to the legal representative.

Mr. WARREN. I am in sympathy with what the Senator wants. Perhaps we might lay aside the amendment, and I will ask him to re-form his amendment so that it shall not cut out——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Your language is "or to their legal representatives."

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to add—

Provided, however, That no payment shall be made to any assignee of any contributor.

The legal representative or representatives can receive it. But if the claim has been sold, I do not believe the obligation of the Government should extend to the assignee.

Mr. WARREN. Very well. We shall accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] as modified to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ROOT. I offer an amendment, to be inserted immediately after the amendment just adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York offers an amendment, which will be read:

The SECRETARY. On page 4, after line 10, insert:

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON UNIFORM LETTERS OF EXCHANGE.

For preparation, translation, and publication of the report of the American delegate to the adjourned meeting of the International Conference on Uniform Letters of Exchange, held at The Hague, to continue available during the fiscal year 1913, $2,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I have an amendment, to immediately follow the last one adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming submits an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just agreed to insert:

Arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between United States and Great Britain: For the expenses of the arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain, in accordance with the special agreement concluded for that purpose August 18, 1910, and the schedule of claims thereunder, including office rent in the District of Columbia, and the compensation of arbitrator, umpire, agent, counsel, clerical and other assistants, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, the balance unexpended July 1, 1912, of the appropriation made for all the foregoing purposes for the fiscal year 1912 is hereby reappropriated and made available for expenditure for said purposes during the fiscal year 1913, to be disbursed under direction of the Secretary of State.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not understand from the reading of this proposed amendment what amount it carries.

Mr. WARREN. Let me say that it is whatever amount we have appropriated heretofore to be made available. The arbitration was provided for by two appropriations, one of $25,000 and the other, if I remember correctly, of $50,000. One was in the bill of a year ago and the other was in the urgent deficiency bill early in the session.

One of those appropriations becomes covered into the Treasury the 1st of July unless it is reappropriated. This same provision has already passed the Senate in the sundry civil bill, but in conference, through a misunderstanding, it went out. It went out on the supposition that the one fund not exhausted would be sufficient to last until the next session. Since then we were advised, from the department it seems, that it is liable to need both, and hence I wish to put it in the bill and let it again go to conference, and we shall then have the newer information before us. It makes no appropriation of money that has not already been appropriated.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It does not make an appropriation of an additional sum.

Mr. WARREN. No.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it not an additional appropriation on the line of the former appropriation?

Mr. WARREN. Not at all. The estimate covered the two appropriations and the amount was appropriated accordingly. This is merely to take care of that which has lapsed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator state whether it was considered by the committee?

Mr. WARREN. The committee considered it fully on the sundry civil appropriation bill, and the House conferees demanded that it should go out, thinking, with the information we then had, that the remaining portion would be sufficient. Just now, since I have been in charge of the bill, without any opportunity to refer it to any members of the committee except the two who happen to be near me, the matter is brought to my attention, and as it is necessary I put it in, subject to further consideration. If the Senator from Georgia has any objection, of course it will go out.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I do not make any objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Treasury Department," on page 4, after line 14, to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury may employ such number of expert money assorters, feeders, and other employees, and expend such sums for contingent and miscellaneous items and for the purchase or construction and installation of paper-money laundering machines as may be necessary, in his judgment, to install, maintain, and operate such laundering machines in the Treasury at Washington and at the subtreasuries: Provided, That the money required to pay for such purpose shall not exceed $60,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, the same to continue available during the fiscal year 1913: Provided further, That estimates hereunder shall be submitted in detail for the fiscal year 1914, and annually thereafter.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee if he knows why the money that has been laundered or repaired should be sent to the Middle and Far West for use, as it is stated in the newspapers. Why is it not distributed or placed in circulation in the East as well as in the West?

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator I understand there were only some few lots, and they were distributed and sent East and West to see how transmission and handling in the express or mails would affect the money. I understand that those receiving it did not know the difference between the new and the laundered.

Mr. HEYBURN. They want to see whether or not it would stand transportation and hold together until it reached the West?

Mr. WARREN. I do not think they "tried it on the dog," to use that phrase. I think it was a genuine wish to ascertain whether it would be acceptable in different parts of the country.

Mr. HEYBURN. Was it understood that the West would be willing to accept this responsibility of testing the laundered money and the East would not?

Mr. WARREN. No.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is a rather curious situation.

Mr. WARREN. The West was willing to take it and wanted more.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "public buildings," on page 6, after line 15, to insert:

Boston, Mass., customhouse: For expenses incident to the temporary removal of the force employed in the customhouse during the enlargement, remodeling, or extension, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, $96,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 20, to insert:

Charlotte, N. C., post office and courthouse: Section 7 of the omnibus public building act, approved June 25, 1910, authorizing the enlargement, extension, remodeling or improvement of the United States post office and courthouse at Charlotte, N. C., at a limit of cost not to exceed $250,000, is hereby amended so as to authorize, in lieu thereof, the demolition of the present building and the construction of a new building for the use and accommodation of the post office, United States courts, and other governmental offices at Charlotte, N. C., including fireproof vaults and heating and ventilating apparatus and approaches, complete, within said limit of cost hereby fixed of not to exceed $250,000; the materials of which the old building is composed to be utilized, so far as they may be found suitable, in the construction of the new building, and all appropriations heretofore made for the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of the post office and courthouse at Charlotte, N. C., or which may be contained in appropriation acts now pending for said purposes, be, and the same are hereby, reappropriated and made available for the construction of the new post office and courthouse in said city hereby authorized. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the construction of said building within the said limit of cost hereinbefore fixed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 20, to insert:

Charlotte, N. C.; rent of buildings: For rent of temporary quarters for the accommodation of Government officials, and moving expenses incident thereto, to be available until expended, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. After the amendment just adopted, I move to insert what I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just adopted, at the foot of page 7, insert:

That the limit of cost heretofore fixed for the erection of a public building at Olympia, Wash., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $150,000.

Mr. WARREN. I will make a point of order against the amendment that it raises the limit. Does it not?

Mr. JONES. It raises the limit; but before the Senator makes the point of order I should like to say a word.

Mr. WARREN. I will withhold the point of order for that purpose.

Mr. JONES. It increases the limit of cost of this building by $30,000. Olympia is the capital of the State. A contract has already been let for a public building at that place, but the amount available was not sufficient to provide for a fireproof building. The Senate has already passed this bill. The House committee has also reported it favorably. I desire to read a few words from the report of the House committee. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to it.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, I do not wish to cut off the Senator, but what he may read will not change the point of order.

Mr. JONES. This is what the House committee said:

The sum heretofore authorized does not permit the construction of a fireproof building, and the Treasury Department, in a letter of July 6, 1912, which is herewith appended and made a part of this report, states that, in order to make the building fireproof and to provide for gutters, drains, and other alternates that are named in said letter, legislation must be enacted at this session of Congress or work must be suspended pending further legislation. As the contract has already been let, the committee is of the opinion that it would not be right to suspend the work until Congress could act at some subsequent session, and therefore believes that this is an emergency case and that the bill should be passed at this session.

I think that ought to convince the chairman that this item ought to go in the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I am perfectly convinced that they ought to have the money, but we are between the upper and the lower stone. Authorizations for public buildings are contained in legislation that is especially provided from time to time and if we permit the limit to be raised upon other succeeding general appropriation bills control of the subject is lost. It never has been done, and it seems to me that it is pretty late now to undertake it. For instance, in the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill there were more than 40 applications of this nature. As a special instance, in the city of Denver, the building is standing there without inside finish and it requires $400,000 more. They are paying large rents and they can not do anything until next year. But the committee could not see its way to raise that limit. As I think of it, I believe we had between 50 and 60 applications of that nature. In this bill we can not interfere with what belongs to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and when we have legislation that makes the limits we must stay within them until the proper committee authorizes the raising of the limit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On what ground does the Senator from Wyoming make the point of order?

Mr. WARREN. Because it is not estimated for and has not been presented to the committee.

Mr. JONES. It has been reported from a committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 12, to insert:

Authority is granted the Secretary of the Treasury to pay from the appropriation for "General expenses of public buildings, 1912," the claims amounting to $47.32 arising in connection with the public-building service, as set forth in House Document No. 826 of the present session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Collecting internal revenue," on page 9, after line 2, to insert:

Payment of judgments against internal-revenue officers: To pay the Central Trust Co. of New York the amount of a judgment obtained in the United States Circuit Court, Southern District of New York, against the collector of internal revenue for the second district of New York, as settled by the Auditor for the Treasury Department by his certificate No. 17097, of August 15, 1912, $93,477.17.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service," on page 9, after line 18, to insert:

For pay, allowance, and commutation of quarters for commissioned medical officers and pharmacists, to continue available during the fiscal year 1913, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 15, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to provide for increased quarantine facilities at the port of Portland, Me., $43,880.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous, Treasury," on page 11, after line 2, to insert:

Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes: To supply a deficiency in the appropriation "Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes," fiscal year 1912, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 6, to insert:

Payment to Emma Morris: To pay Emma Morris, widow of Frank H. Morris, late Auditor of the Treasury for the War Department, $4,000, the same being equivalent to one year's salary of the said Frank H. Morris.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to understand why that is proposed.

Mr. WARREN. Frank H. Morris was the Auditor of the Treasury for the War Department, and I may say parenthetically that I think the department never had a more competent one. I say it without having any interest in the man, and only a slight acquaintance, except as the dispatch of his business acquainted me with his work.

In the operations of his office it became necessary to demote a clerk, and while at his office, before all the other clerks and the people who were there doing business, he was shot down by this demoted clerk. It is a case that perhaps would never happen again. He left his family unprovided for. He was shot because of his defense of the Government's interests, and therefore I think we ought to make the allowance.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why should that be put in a deficiency bill? Why should it not come up in the regular way, as any other claim? If it is a claim against the Government, it ought to be presented and considered as a claim.

Mr. WARREN. I am glad the Senator asked that question, because in my long service upon the Committee on Claims I know how often personal claims come up, and they seem to belong there; but this is not a claim. It is like the case we passed on a few moments ago. It is a gratuity. Whether we pass it or not, it is not a case, perhaps, that requires the legal investigation which is naturally necessary in claims. It is a matter I wanted to bring before the Senate. There is the whole story. It takes only a few moments to tell it. As I said, the man was shot dead because of the work he did in the department.

Mr. BRISTOW. To what precedent does the Senator refer? He said we passed one a few months ago.

Mr. WARREN. No; I said a few moments ago.

Mr. CULLOM. The Stone case.

Mr. WARREN. The Stone case, the payment of which would be a gratuity rather than payment of a claim.

Mr. BRISTOW. It seems to me it is a rather dangerous precedent to set. However, in view of what the Senator has said, I do not like to object to it.

Mr. WARREN. I think it is such a case as will not occur again in the Senator's lifetime and mine. There never will be another such case, I hope.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 10, to insert:

Reimbursement of board of regents, University of Idaho: To reimburse the State board of regents of the University of Idaho for the premium paid on an indemnity bond on account of the loss of a United States draft for $25,000 in transit between the United States Treasury and the State treasury of Idaho, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 16, to insert:

Payment to Benjamin S. Hanchett: To pay Benjamin S. Hanchett, of Grand Rapids, Mich., to reimburse him for money expended for necessary expenses while attending the meetings of the Assay Commission in March, 1905, held at Philadelphia, Pa., $77.68.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 22, to insert:

Payment to Alfred Harrison, H. E. Ticknor, and F. W. Oakley: The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to adjust the accounts of the clerks of the United States courts for the western district of Wisconsin and pay to said clerks, respectively, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amounts as may be found due them as fees earned between January 1, 1912, and January 26, 1912, the same as though they had been clerks regularly reappointed on January 1, 1912, the amounts of said accounts being as follows: Alfred Harrison, at La Crosse, Wis., $88.20; H. E. Ticknor, at Superior, Wis., $57.90; F. W. Oakley, at Madison, Wis., $194.78; in all, $340.88.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 12, to insert:

Credit in the account of Hobart J. Shanley: The Auditor for the State and Other Departments is hereby authorized and instructed to give a credit of $1,501.75 to Hobart J. Shanley, special disbursing officer of the Department of State, for certain credits claimed and suspended for lack of itemization, etc., in the settlement of his account of disbursements for "Expenses of Commission, Centennial Republic of Mexico," under appropriation made in deficiency act of June 25, 1910, to carry out the provisions of joint resolution of June 24, 1910 (Public resolution No. 39), creating a commission to represent the United States at the celebration of the first centennial of the Republic of Mexico.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 2, to insert:

Payment to the State of Virginia: For payment to the treasurer of the Mount Vernon Avenue Association, of Virginia, assignee of the State of Virginia under act of the General Assembly of Virginia approved March 5, 1888, $120,000, to be used by the said Mount Vernon Avenue Association toward the construction of a boulevard from Mount Vernon to Washington, being the principal of the sum, without interest, advanced by the State of Virginia to the United States by act of its general assembly December 27, 1790, toward erecting public buildings in the District of Columbia for the use of the Federal Government; said sum of $120,000 to be in full compensation for all debts, claims, or demands on the part of the State of Virginia, or of her assignee aforesaid, arising out of the aforesaid act of the general assembly of date December 27, 1790; and to the State of Maryland $72,000, being the sum advanced by the said State of Maryland in 1791 to the United States to be used toward erecting public buildings in the District of Columbia for the use of the Federal Government.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to amend line 3 by adding after the words "Payment to the State of Virginia" the words "and Maryland" and change "State" to "States."

The SECRETARY. Amend the side head so as to read:

Payment to the States of Virginia and Maryland.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, it seems to me this is a strange deficiency. This claim is about 100 years old, is it not?

Mr. WARREN. More than that.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why should it be put in a deficiency bill? It has been before the Committee on Claims 15 or 20 years, has it not?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Committee on Claims instructed me to report it as an amendment to this appropriation bill, and, if I am not very much mistaken, the Senator from Kansas was present and concurred in the direction that was given.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from Virginia is very much mistaken. The Senator from Kansas was not present and did not concur in any such proposition.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I know the committee authorized its report as an amendment, and that was my impression.

Mr. BRISTOW. Some year or two ago such a bill was reported from the Committee on Claims to the Senate upon certain conditions. Now, why is the State of Maryland given $72,000, the same to be used in the erection of public buildings in the District of Columbia?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It was advanced by Maryland to the General Government to be used by the General Government in the construction of public buildings.

Mr. BRISTOW. When was that?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. In 1791, I think.

Mr. BRISTOW. I thought so. I want to make a point of order against this amendment that it is general legislation.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is certainly not general legislation; it is a specific appropriation to pay a particular claim.

It is not in any sense general, and it is not legislation; it is an appropriation.

Mr. BRISTOW. Then, I inquire if it has been estimated for? Is it in the Book of Estimates?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It does not require an estimate. It is shown on the books of the Treasury Department and it has been reported. I do not know that I made the formal report, but I know that I was authorized to report it. I did not even think it necessary, as the Committee on Appropriations adopted it, but I was instructed by the Committee on Claims to report it as an amendment to the deficiency bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. What authority has the Committee on Claims to offer an amendment to the general deficiency bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It has the authority under one of the rules of the Senate to report to the Senate amendments to an appropriation bill, and it does that constantly.

Mr. BRISTOW. I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will remind the Senator that if I am not very much mistaken this claim has been very much discussed in the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BRISTOW. I know it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think the Senator from Kansas has approved it. Perhaps he did make a condition that it had to go for a road. It is generously donated by the State of Virginia to the construction of a boulevard from Washington to Mount Vernon.

Mr. BRISTOW. I remember stating once to the Senator from Virginia that I would be willing to favor an appropriation of the amount that Virginia claims to have paid at one time, some century or so ago, for some purpose for which she had not been properly reimbursed, provided Virginia would devote the money to aid in the construction of a highway from here to Alexandria——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is exactly what is done here.

Mr. BRISTOW. Or from here to Mount Vernon, but I never have consented that the State of Maryland should be given $72,000, and I do not believe there has been any bill presented to the Committee on Claims since I have been a member of it that justifies any such appropriation. I do not think that the State of Virginia is entitled to this appropriation. If it is made, it ought to be made for the purpose of constructing a highway between the home of Washington and the National Capital.

I do not think an appropriation like this ought to be incorporated into a deficiency bill the last day of a session of Congress, and I insist upon the point of order that it is general legislation, that it is not estimated for, and can not be properly incorporated in this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, this is as much an honest debt to the State of Virginia against the United States Government as is any outstanding bond of this Government in the hands of an honest holder. The books of the Treasury Department show that this amount was advanced under an act of the General Assembly of Virginia for the purpose of constructing public buildings. I will read to the Senator what a distinguished Senator from New York said in reference to it a good many years ago.

This claim has been knocking at the door of the National Congress for a very long time. It has been reported favorably perhaps a score of times. It has passed the Senate time and again. It has passed as an independent bill; it has passed as an amendment in an appropriation bill; it has passed in the general deficiency bill once I know, and it failed in conference. There is no more doubt about its existence as an honest debt against the National Government than there is a doubt about the existence of any other obligation against the Government. The books of the Treasury Department show that the National Government got the money and that it has not been paid back.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I will read what Mr. Seward, of New York, said many years ago, when Virginia was here demanding the payment of this money. He said:

> Mr. President, the State of Virginia, beyond all doubt, contributed to the erection of this Capitol and of these public edifices which we now use for the Government of the United States the sum here specified. She either advanced that money as a loan, to be repaid at some future time, or she gave it to the Government of the United States. If this money was advanced as a loan, the advance created a debt which it is now the duty of the Government to discharge. If, however, the money was contributed by way of gift or donation to the Government of the United States, I do not see that it materially alters the case. In the one case there would be an obligation already existing, a debt already to be paid, for money which has been borrowed. In the other case there is an advance, which is the basis of a moral obligation, which the Government may at any time recognize and assume, and that creates the debt. * * * This moral obligation strikes me as peculiarly appealing to the sense of honor of the Government of the United States. We are here occupying an edifice which was in part built for us by the State of Virginia. She is comparatively poor; we are only too rich. I think it does not comport with the pride and dignity of the United States that Congress and the executive departments should occupy halls for which they are indebted in whole or in part to the generosity of the States. * * * I am for discharging this obligation and securing to ourselves the right to feel that this Government owes nothing but gratitude to these States.

I could read here lengthy extracts from speeches of other Senators who took the broad and honorable and worthy position that it was for the State of Virginia to say whether she meant it as a loan or a gift. The Government of the United States got it and used it, and Virginia claims that it was a loan. It is demonstrable that it was a loan. I will briefly advert to the reason why I say it is demonstrable that it was a loan and not a gift.

In the original act introduced in the Legislature of Virginia the language was used that the State of Virginia granted to the United States $120,000, to be used in the construction of public buildings at Washington. John Marshall, afterwards Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, then a member of the Legislature of the State of Virginia, moved that the word "grant" be stricken out and that the word "advance" be inserted.

There is not a lawyer in the hearing of my voice but knows that the word "advance" imports a return of the money, and that the word "grant" does not import the return of the money. There is not a man in the United States who does not know that if the meaning and import of legal terms be known to anyone, they were known to John Marshall, and he deliberately struck from the bill the word "grant" and substituted for it the word "advance." Under that resolution, which provided that the State of Virginia should advance $120,000 to the National Government to be used in the construction of public buildings at Washington, the United States got that $120,000 and used it to build this Capitol, which we are now occupying. I say, Virginia has been knocking at the door of the Nation for a century asking that this money be returned.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think, if the Senator will look at the record, he will find that it is not quite a century. I think it was 60 years before Virginia ever made any claim in this matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It was a long time, and if I had time to read the history of it, the reason for that long time—not so much as 60 years, however—was that the United States continued up to, including, and after the War of 1812, to be very impecunious, and Virginia did not press the demand while the Government was in need of funds, and Virginia had ample funds for her own purposes; but, Mr. President, it was incumbent upon the National Government, unimportuned and unsolicited, to take the initiative and return to the Commonwealth of Virginia the money which she had borrowed from Virginia; and it does not become the Nation, after having denied justice for, as the Senator says, 60 years, now to rely upon her delinquency and her neglect of her obligation as an excuse why she should not pay it when it is called for.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, it has been some time since this bill was discussed in the Committee on Claims when I was present, and I have been present at all the meetings, except a few recent ones when I was engaged on other committee meetings on the same day on which the Committee on Claims met, and could not be in two places at the same time; but, as I remember, this alleged claim—and it is a very hazy one—is based upon some consideration or contribution which the States of Virginia and Maryland made before the Capital was established here at Washington. I believe it was proposed by some interest up in Pennsylvania to give a tract of land for the location of the National Capital there, and a controversy grew up as to whether the Capital should be located here on the Potomac or on the Delaware. It was in the nature of a political controversy. Finally, in the course of time, the Capital was established here.

These alleged claims were never presented; they were never claimed. I think I am safe in saying that for half a century nobody ever believed that the Federal Government was under any obligation to pay this money that may have been contributed by some people at that time or by the States of Virginia and Maryland at that time.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator will excuse me right at that point to correct his information on the subject, which is not at all due to lack of evidence, I will say that in 1793, I think it was, immediately or very soon after this money was advanced to the Federal Government, George Washington wrote a letter to the District authorities in which he ordered that an account should be kept showing the use of this money advanced by the State of Virginia and the State of Maryland with a view to a settlement with the States of Maryland and Virginia. It seems that George Washington in 1793 took a different view from what the Senator from Kansas says everybody took.

Mr. BRISTOW. The State of Virginia never presented her claim to the Federal Government for approximately 60 years.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think it was 1840 before a bill was introduced in Congress. How much effort Virginia had been making to get the money without a bill in Congress I do not know; but certain it is that——

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I would say to the Senator that the State of Maryland made a demand for this claim in 1842. So far as the claim that is being asked for now is concerned, it seems to me, as a matter of honor, the Government ought not only to pay the claim, but to pay the interest on it from the date of the demand. We, however, are only asking the amount of the claim itself.

Mr. BRISTOW. I want to submit to the Senate if on a general deficiency appropriation bill, which is presumably to make appropriations for the maintenance of the Government, it is proper to incorporate claims that have been disputed here for more than a century.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is a deficiency, Mr. President.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senators want to present a bill and let the Senate decide the bill upon its merits as to whether it is a just claim or not, and let it be gone into and let the Senate pass upon it, nobody could have any objection to that; but I think it is improper here in a deficiency appropriation bill for the purpose of providing money to maintain the Government for a few months until Congress meets again to run in an old claim for $200,000 that I do not believe has the slightest basis of justification, and I think it can be demonstrated to the Senate that it has not if time is given to do so. I insist upon my point of order, Mr. President.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the claim is not so old but that honor requires it to be paid. There is not a scintilla of doubt about its existence. The books of the Treasury Department show that the Government got the money and owes it. As to investigation, I will say that since I have been in the Senate the claim has been investigated a dozen times. The Committee on Claims—the Senator from Kansas has been present when it has been discussed up and down all around—have always reported favorably on the claim. It has been investigated until investigation is stale and senseless and useless. The Senator from Kansas knows this claim, and that all the facts about it are those that I have stated. There is nothing to investigate; there is nothing else to find out. Everybody who has given five minutes' thought to the matter knows that the Government owes this claim.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am rather glad that this amendment has been reported by the committee. It will accomplish two good purposes. It will get rid of the question as to whether the Government owes this money, and it will, I hope, result in the building of a road over which one may travel between Washington and Mount Vernon. I would be willing to resort to almost any resource for the purpose of building that road, and I would be willing to waive a lot of sentiment if we could have a road over which one might go in comfort to Mount Vernon. We have none now.

I am not going to animadvert upon the patriotism of Virginia, only to express surprise that a State which is endowed with such memories as cluster around Mount Vernon should not have provided a road by which that sacred spot could be reached in comfort. I have made the effort on more than one occasion by ordinary methods of travel, but have not been able to do so on account of the condition of the roads.

I do not believe that it would be wise at this time—perhaps it would be wise at no time—to enter into a striking of the balance of accounts between what Virginia has contributed to the Government and what she has cost the Government. I will not enter upon the consideration of that question. I would support this amendment for the reasons I have given, and I hope that it will accomplish both purposes expressed upon the face of it, that of forever getting rid of this claim and that of building a respectable boulevard or road between here and Mount Vernon.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Idaho for his kind support of this measure, but there is no need of resorting to any resource in this matter other than the resource of fair dealing and honesty. This money is due, and it ought to be paid, but the resource of patriotism is also available, because it goes to the patriotic purpose of building a boulevard to Mount Vernon. The Senator, in chiding Virginia for not earlier undertaking that patriotic duty, may at least find some extenuation in the fact that Virginia, many years ago, commenced that work, and dedicated to that purpose this money which she now asks the National Government to provide, and to pay a debt at the same time.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in my judgment—and I do not stand alone—the portion of the road between Washington and Alexandria is in the District of Columbia, and Congress long since should have taken up that question and settled it by authorizing the building of an avenue up to the best standard of construction between this part of the District of Columbia and that part of the District of Columbia. Some conservative and wise generation will take into account some day the obligation resting upon the Government of the United States to undo the mistake that was attempted by the recession of a part of the District of Columbia to the State of Virginia. What did the State of Virginia pay for that recession? What consideration passed to the Government of the United States for that recession? I have no intention of bringing on a discussion——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I hope the Senator will not expect me to go into a discussion of the validity of the act of retrocession.

Mr. HEYBURN. But I want Senators to understand that there are back in my mind many questions that enter into the consideration of this matter that I have taken into consideration in arriving at the conclusion that these old scores had better be settled up and that the new boulevard had better be built.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the point of order, submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], an examination of the bill discloses the fact that this language is used:

To be used by the said Mount Vernon Avenue Association toward the construction of a boulevard from Mount Vernon to Washington.

That seems to the Chair to be general legislation. Subsequently language is found as follows:

Said sum of $120,000 to be in full compensation for all debts, claims, or demands on the part of the State of Virginia.

It would seem to be——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I ask that that language be stricken out. In doing so, I will explain that that is in accordance with the assignment from the State of Virginia. The Mount Vernon Avenue Association was compelled by its charter and by the act assigning this claim from the State of Virginia to that association to use the money for that purpose and no other. I therefore ask that that part of the amendment be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves to amend the amendment by striking out the language referred to, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment on page 13, lines 7, 8, and 9, it is proposed to strike out the words "to be used by the said Mount Vernon Avenue Association toward the construction of a boulevard from Mount Vernon to Washington."

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, that is the only redeeming feature in the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, if the Senator will excuse me for a moment, I said I had made it clear that the boulevard is compelled to be constructed by the act of the Legislature of Virginia making the assignment of this claim to the Mount Vernon Avenue Association.

Mr. HEYBURN. Why should not the paymaster of this $120,000 also have something to say about it, so that the Government may enforce it?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Government can enforce it anyhow; that is a condition of the assignment made by the State of Virginia; but, as it seemed to make a point of order available to defeat the amendment, and inasmuch as the language is not necessary to accomplish the purpose, as I have explained, I moved that it be stricken out.

Mr. HEYBURN. Why not say, then, "subject to the obligations entered into between the Mount Vernon Avenue Association and the State of Virginia"?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is perfectly agreeable to me. It is going to that purpose and none other.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am taking the Senator's statement that the provision in the charter is definite.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have the act of the legislature here; it is a part of the report made to the Senate; and it provides absolutely that the money shall be used for that purpose.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think it well to have some reference to it in order that we may know where it is going. I now move to insert the words "to be used by the said Mount Vernon Avenue Association for the purpose specified in the charter of said association granted by the State of Virginia."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think that is but a limitation on the appropriation, and I do not think it can be out of order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I make the same point of order. If that is not legislation, I do not know what would be. Then, if the language referred to should be stricken out, this is a claim; it is not a deficiency for maintenance of the Government; it has not been estimated for, and it is clearly out of order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is recommended by a standing committee of the Senate. I hope the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] will withdraw his amendment, so as to avoid all question and controversy. I can assure him that the money can not possibly be used for any other purpose, because the charter of the company to which it is to be paid requires that use of it and because the act of the Legislature of Virginia assigning the claim to that company makes the same restriction as to its use. So the amendment is but an embarrassment to the situation and not at all necessary to attain the object which the Senator has in view. Under those circumstances I hope he will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not desire to embarrass the situation.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I know the Senator does not.

Mr. HEYBURN. I only want to see that road built.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator may be assured it will be built, so far as this money may go.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let me inquire, then, in view of that statement, will this association be required to furnish any additional money necessary to build that road and to complete it under the charter?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is created for that purpose. I can not speak as to its present resources. It has spent a good deal of money already; but as to the resources of that association I am not prepared to say what they are or how much it has available for this purpose. It was chartered, however, for the purpose of building this boulevard; the people south of the river, in Alexandria, are taking the deepest interest in it, and I have no doubt that the funds will be provided and that the boulevard will be built.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What is the mileage of the road?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think about 14 miles.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this money should not be paid to this association until it is known that the association will carry out the plan or the contract to build the road.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The foremost men in my State constitute this association, which was chartered for this sole purpose. It has no other object for existing than to construct a boulevard from Washington to Mount Vernon.

Mr. HEYBURN. It was evidently contemplated——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will pardon me, if the road is only to be 14 miles long, they ought to be able to construct it for $120,000.

Mr. HEYBURN. How many miles long?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Fourteen.

Mr. HEYBURN. Oh, no; the road is to be, as I understand, from Mount Vernon to the city of Washington.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not know the exact distance; but my impression is it is not more than 14 miles by road from Alexandria.

Mr. ROOT. It is 20 miles, I think.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think it is about 20 miles.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. This money will not build such a boulevard as we ought to have. We ought to have connected with the Lincoln memorial a memorial bridge and a magnificent boulevard from the Capital to Mount Vernon; and, if the Nation will extend that generosity and that patriotic consideration which, I think, ought to be extended, all of those things will be accomplished; but we can certainly make a good road, a respectable road, a comfortable road, for $120,000.

Mr. HEYBURN. May I ask the Senator what funds or resources did this association have in view when it entered into contract with the State of Virginia to build this road?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I do not like to make a statement about that, as I am not sufficiently familiar with the matter. I know I have been waited on a dozen times by the most prominent, most intelligent, and most patriotic people in the city of Alexandria, who organized this organization and attempted to construct this boulevard. I have not inquired into their resources or the details of their plans; but they have certainly looked largely to this aid in accomplishing that patriotic purpose.

Mr. HEYBURN. What is the date of the charter?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I can not give you that. I have not a copy of the charter here, but I can give you the date of the act of the legislature which made the assignment. I have a copy of that here. In 1887 the General Assembly of Virginia made an assignment of this claim to the Mount Vernon Avenue Association, to be used for the purpose of constructing this boulevard.

Mr. HEYBURN. That was 25 years ago.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Yes, sir; in 1887.

Mr. HEYBURN. Since that time have they expended any money for the purpose?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I understand that they have; but I can not, as I said before, give the details of the work of the association.

Mr. HEYBURN. I know the Senator from Virginia feels just as intensely patriotic about this measure as I do or as does any other Senator. I am not questioning his sincerity at all. I believe that he feels that there should be such a road or boulevard and that he would cooperate for the purpose of seeing that the plan was carried out; but I wanted to get such facts in the record here as that in the future we might be able to refer to them in de ermining the intent of this appropriation.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There is not, Mr. President, the slightest doubt about the intent or that the money will be used for the purposes intended. It will be applied intelligently and patriotically to the construction of this boulevard.

Mr. HEYBURN. At once?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. At once—just as soon as it can be obtained. It concerns the people of the entire United States who come to the National Capital and who visit Mount Vernon. It is of as much importance and interest to them, and perhaps more, and to the people of Washington than it is to the people of Virginia.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will say that the Senator's late colleague, who was a Member of the Senate when I entered it, spoke to me about this fund and about the possibility of securing its diversion or appropriation to the building of a memorial bridge, so that the subject is not new to me, because we talked it over on a number of occasions. I would, however, rather see it devoted to the building of the road.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is what is asked, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 13, lines 7 and 8, it is proposed to strike out "to be used by the said Mount Vernon Avenue Association toward the construction of a boulevard from Mount Vernon to Washington."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

The Senator from Virginia offers another amendment to the committee amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 13, in line 14, after the word "Government," it is proposed to strike out "said sum of $120,000 to be in full compensation for all debts, claims, or demands on the part of the State of Virginia, or of her assignee aforesaid, arising out of the aforesaid act of the general assembly of date December 27, 1790."

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I did not hear that amendment proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia proposed it, as the Chair understood.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I said I would be willing for those words to be stricken out to meet the suggestion from the Chair, though it seems to me they constitute but a limitation upon the appropriation and could hardly make the amendment out of order. The amount is in full for the claim, and I have not the slightest objection to its being so stated. It is a final disposition of this matter; but if those words make the amendment out of order, of course I would want them to go out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator withdraw the amendment to the amendment?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia withdraws the amendment to the amendment. The Chair will now submit the question to the Senate, Is the amendment proposed by the committee as amended in order on an appropriation bill? [Putting the question.] By the sound the "ayes" appear to have it.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask for the yeas and nays on that. It is clearly general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. For manifest reasons I hope the Senator will not ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will insist, because this amendment has no more right on an appropriation bill than any other claim of the thousands that are pending before the Claims Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded?

Mr. BRISTOW. If it is proposed here to make a deficiency bill a claims bill, that is one thing, but if it is proposed to conform to the rules of the Senate and make it a deficiency bill for the maintenance of the Government, as the rules provide, then we ought to adhere to the rule.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, there are thousands of items in this bill more in the nature of claims than is this one, as the Senator knows.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is now on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Customs Service," on page 14, after line 2, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the J. Kennard & Sons Carpet Co., as authorized by private act No. 77, approved August 16, 1912, $2,427.88.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there is an amendment which I wish to add on page 14, after line 6, to provide for a bill carrying an appropriation which has passed since this bill was made up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, after line 6, it is proposed to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Mary J. Manning, as authorized by Private Act No. 82, approved August 17, 1912, $334.49.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I now desire to call up an amendment which I offered yesterday and which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri submits an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

Columbia Polytechnic Institute: For the instruction and employment of the blind of the Columbia Polytechnic Institute who are actual residents of the District of Columbia, and for the purchase and repair of machinery and tools which may be needed to equip a workshop for the blind of said District, $5,000, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the committee did not approve of that when considering it; but, unless objection is offered by some other Senator, I am willing that it shall go to conference and we will look it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "District of Columbia," on page 16, line 22, after the date "1912," to strike out the amount "$596.50" and insert "$775.50," so as to make the clause read:

Payments to destitute women and children: For additional amount required for payments to destitute women and children, fiscal year 1912, $775.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 23, to insert:

Outstanding liabilities: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to pay to Ida Steger the sum of $4.43, being amount to her credit, account "Outstanding liabilities, District of Columbia," for amount of check drawn in her favor and subsequently lost, without requiring surrender of said check as required by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 4, to insert:

Damages and payment for ground on account of condemnation proceedings: To pay Thomas W. and Alice N. Keller for ground taken and damages on account of condemnation proceedings in square No. 2838, in the city of Washington, $4,140.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 12, after the numerals "777,'" to insert "and Senate Document No. 909"; and in line 13, after the word "session," to strike out the amount "$8,944.04" and insert "$9,087.29," so as to make the clause read:

Judgments: For payment of the judgments, including costs, against the District of Columbia, set forth in House Documents Nos. 402, 634, 648, and 777, and Senate Document No. 909, of this session, $9,087.29, together with a further sum sufficient to pay the interest, at not exceeding 4 per cent, on said judgments, as provided by law, from the date the same became due until the date of payment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 7, after the words "District of Columbia," to strike out the amount "$13,000" and insert "$23,349.95," so as to make the clause read:

Miscellaneous expenses, supreme court: For payment of such miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized by the Attorney General for the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and its officers, including furnishing and collecting of evidence where the United States is or may be a party in interest, including also such expenses as may be authorized by the Attorney General for the Court of Appeals, District of Columbia, $23,349.95.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, after line 8, it is proposed to insert:

Jury commission, District of Columbia: For expenses of the jury commission, including stationery and clerical assistance, to continue available during the fiscal year 1913, $400.

Mr. WARREN. That is involved in the previous amendment, but I shall not object to it, and it can go to conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In connection with the amendment I should like to have inserted in the RECORD a letter from the jury commissioners showing the necessity for the appropriation and an indorsement by Judge Clabaugh.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The paper referred to is as follows:

JURY COMMISSION, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
May —, 1912.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

SIR: The jury commission of the District of Columbia respectfully request that an item be inserted in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, to read as follows:

"Jury commission, District of Columbia: For expenses of the jury commission, including stationery and clerical assistance, $400, one-half of which shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia."

The sections of the code providing for a jury commission and the selection of jurors in this District are as follows:

"SEC. 198. Jurors: The clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the United States marshal, and the collector of taxes for said District are hereby constituted a commission to from time to time make the list of jurors for service in said court and fix the number of jurors to be listed therefor.

"SEC. 199. The said jurors shall be selected, as nearly as may be, from the citizens in the different parts of the District.

"SEC. 200. Jury box: The names shall be written on separate and similar pieces of paper, which shall be so folded or rolled up that the names can not be seen, and placed in a box to be provided for the purpose.

"SEC. 201. The box shall be sealed and, after being thoroughly shaken, shall be delivered to the clerk of the supreme court for safe-keeping."

From the above provisions it will be seen that a large amount of clerical work is increasingly involved in compiling and sifting the lists of competent jurors for two criminal, two circuit, one police, one juvenile courts and grand jury, keeping the lists and records of service, comparing said lists, and preparing the slips for the jury box. The entire list of names has not only to be tabulated, but the name of each juror entered upon a card index together with such information as to his age, occupation, and previous record of jury service. It is impossible for the clerk of the court, the marshal, and the collector of taxes to perform properly the detailed clerical work involved in preparing and keeping the jury records.

The compensation of jury commissioners before the code went into effect amounted to over $400 per annum, but the new commissioners have not received any compensation for their personal services, and no provision has been made for the necessary expenses of the commission.

Very respectfully,

JOHN R. YOUNG,
AULICK PALMER,
C. C. ROGERS,
Jury Commission, District of Columbia.

The court has requested me to earnestly indorse the above.

HARRY M. CLABAUGH,
Chief Justice.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "War Department," on page 21, after line 22, to insert:

Reimbursement of the State of Texas: To reimburse the State of Texas in full payment of all claims of any nature whatever on account of expenses incurred by that State prior to February 9, 1861, the payment of which was provided for in appropriation acts enacted by the Legislature of the State of Texas, and approved on February 13, 1858, February 3, 1860, and February 8, 1861, respectively, for the pay and maintenance of State volunteers or rangers called into service by authority of the governor of Texas in defense of the Texas frontier against Mexican marauders and Indian depredators, for which reimbursement has not been made out of the Treasury of the United States, as ascertained under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1905, and certified in House Document No. 551, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $217,693.39.

Mr. WARREN. There is a repetition of the subhead there, and in line 23 the words "Reimbursement of the State of Texas" should be stricken out.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 15, to insert:

Payment to the State of Oregon: To pay the State of Oregon, in settlement of its claim for expenses incurred in raising volunteers for service in the Indian wars from 1862 to 1867, as audited and reported to Congress for appropriation by the Secretary of the Treasury under the general deficiency act of June 28, 1910, $193,543.02.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question. Does the size of a claim have anything to do with its consideration? From my State there are a large number of small claims arising during the war for the occupation of property, et cetera, which have been passed upon, as well as the loyalty of the people, and all other questions. Those claims were thrown out by the committee—not this committee, I believe, but the committee to which they were sent—and I merely wanted to know if the fact that these were small claims was any reason for their being thrown out?

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator refer to any committee on which I serve?

Mr. REED. The Senator is not the chairman of the committee to which these claims went. I should like to know how I could get under the jurisdiction of this committee. I wish to have my claims considered.

Mr. WARREN. It is not the intention of the Committee on Appropriations to deal with claims as such. We have been compelled at times to provide for them. For instance, take this very claim. It is a part of what was originally a claim for nearly $2,000,000 for Oregon and Nevada. We provided that the Treasury Department should take it up, compute and audit it, and render us a decision upon it. We paid Nevada, I think, something over a hundred thousand dollars, and now this Oregon item has been sent up to us, at $193,000, and thus something like $300,000 will wipe out the claim of what was originally a million and a half to two million dollars.

As to the Missouri claims I am unadvised. I have not seen them and do not know what the condition is.

Mr. REED. I take it these claims are just claims. I am not raising that question. I suppose they are just claims or they——

Mr. WARREN. I can not hear the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I am talking loud enough, but the people around me are talking louder.

I say, I have not challenged the justice of these claims. I take it they would hardly be advanced by the Senators from those States unless they were just claims, but it has struck me as a little peculiar that claims very similar in their nature, but smaller in amount, have been thrown out by the wholesale by the Committee on Claims; and I should like to be advised how I can get a change of venue from the Committee on Claims to this committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 3, to insert:

Relief of Lieut. David H. Biddle: For payment of the amount of judgment of the circuit court of Meade County, S. Dak., against Lieut. David H. Biddle, United States Army, including $43.05 costs, also the costs ($29.80) attending appeal to the Supreme Court of the State of South Dakota, and $84.97 interest under the laws of South Dakota, at 7 per cent; in all, $407.82.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 10, to insert:

Reimbursement to Figueras Hermanos: To pay to Figueras Hermanos, of Manila, P. I., to reimburse them for expenses incurred in repairing damages to their lorcha Tomas, $40.

Mr. WARREN. I am not sure whether that should be "him" or "they," and I propose to make it "reimbursement for expenses," leaving out the word "them"; strike out "to" and make it read "as reimbursement for expenses incurred."

The SECRETARY. In line 12, after the word "Islands" strike out the words "to reimburse" and insert "as reimbursement"; strike out the word "them," in line 13, and the word "their," in line 14.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 14, to insert:

National cemeteries: For pay of 76 superintendents of national cemeteries, for the fiscal year 1913, $275.

Mr. WARREN. I offer at this point, to be inserted after line 17, on page 23, an amendment to carry into effect a law passed since the bill was made up.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, after line 17, it is proposed to insert the following:

To carry out the provisions of public resolution No. 48, entitled "A joint resolution directing the Secretary of War to investigate the claims of American citizens for damages suffered within American territory and growing out of the late insurrection in Mexico" approved August 9, 1912, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Military Establishment," on page 23, after line 18, to insert:

UNDER THE SURGEON GENERAL OF THE ARMY.

For providing medical and hospital supplies and services for the relief of sufferers from floods in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys in 1912, and for reimbursing to the Medical Department of the Army the value of supplies issued and expenditures made by that department toward such relief, the funds herein appropriated to be available for relief measures subsequent to June 30, 1912, should the same continue to be necessary, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pay Department," on page 24, after line 19, to insert:

For payment of mileage to officers and contract surgeons traveling under orders of the War Department in connection with the relief of sufferers from floods in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys, and for the reimbursement of the appropriation of the Pay Department for the amounts heretofore expended for this purpose, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Settlement of accounts," on page 25, after line 23, to insert:

Credit in the accounts of First Lieut. George Ruhlen, jr.: The accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of First Lieut. George Ruhlen, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, United States Army, the sum of $96.39, for which he is held on the books of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 4, to insert:

Relief of Lieut. Sanderford Jarman: To pay Lieut. Sanderford Jarman, Coast Artillery Corps, United States Army, $550.91.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 7, to insert:

Credit in the accounts of Col. Frederick G. Hodgson, Capt. Briant H. Wells, and Capt. Girard Sturtevant: The accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of the following-named officers of the Army the sums set opposite their names, respectively, which have been disallowed and charged against them on the books of the Treasury, namely:

Col. Frederick G. Hodgson, February, 1912, $21.

Capt. Briant H. Wells, September and October, 1911, $171.

Capt. Girard Sturtevant, December, 1911, $2.99: Provided, That said accounting officers are authorized and directed to remove any other suspensions or disallowances in the accounts of quartermasters of the Army for the fiscal years 1910, 1911, and 1912, for the temporary hire of animals and vehicles for use of officers of the Army while traveling on official duty under competent orders, and hereafter to allow all proper accounts for such purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. After line 2, on page 29, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

For the protection of the buildings and property of the United States at Valdez, Alaska, from glacial floods, $55,000.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if that is estimated for?

Mr. JONES. It has been estimated for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 29, line 1, after the words "Six hundred and six," to strike out "and 828, $2,135.48," and insert "828, and Senate Documents Nos. 901 and 906, $2,371.54," so as to make the clause read:

To pay the claims adjusted and determined by the Navy Department, under the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 607), on account of damages occasioned to private property by collisions with vessels of the United States Navy and for which the naval vessels were responsible, certified to Congress at its present session in House Documents Nos. 394, 484, 569, 606, 828, and Senate Documents Nos. 901 and 906, $2,371.54.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 2, to insert:

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation "Contingent, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts," including all objects mentioned under this title of appropriation in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1912, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Navigation," on page 32, after line 14, to strike out:

There is reappropriated and made available for the payment of the balance found due the Noel Construction Co. for extra work under its contract dated May 31, 1907, for the erection of 10 main buildings at the naval training station, Great Lakes, so much as is necessary, not exceeding $2,100.91, of the unexpended balance of the appropriation made in the naval act approved May 13, 1908, for "cost of inspection of public works" at said station.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Marine Corps," on page 34, after line 4, to insert:

For the fiscal year 1912, $17,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 12, to insert:

For the fiscal year 1912, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 21, to strike out:

For military stores, Marine Corps, including items specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1911, $8,730.

And insert:

For military stores, Marine Corps, including items specified under this head in the naval appropriation acts, fiscal years as follows:

For the fiscal year 1912, $25,000.

For the fiscal year 1911, $8,730.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of the Interior," on page 36, after line 6, to insert:

Enlarging the Capitol Grounds: The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, until their removal becomes necessary, to rent for such periods and under such terms and conditions as he may deem proper, any building or buildings, or vacant land, that may be acquired under the provisions of the sundry civil acts of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., p. 738), and March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., p. 1414), or subsequent acts, for the enlargement of the Capitol Grounds, the proceeds to be deposited in the Treasury and a detailed report thereof to be submitted to Congress at the beginning of each regular session thereof. The Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby charged with the immediate care of said buildings and the direction and supervision of all repairs thereto and the lands acquired under the provision of the above-mentioned acts: Provided, That the authority hereby granted shall also apply to the Maltby Building, now under the control of the United States Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire as to the purpose of providing for the renting of buildings that we have bought for the purpose of destruction. The Government has condemned this property with a view of removing the buildings and converting it into a park until we shall have opportunity to legislate to convert it into its final permanent purpose. Now, why should we provide that these buildings should remain there after we have bought them and paid for them, and that we shall rent them and continue the nuisance they now constitute?

Mr. WARREN. The inquiry of the Senator from Idaho is very pertinent, but, if he will remember, the legislation that laid the foundation of these purchases provided that we should spend $500,000 a year, if I correctly recall the sum, and that they could buy as best they could here and there, and condemn if it should come to the extreme. Now, it occurs that sometimes they may buy house A and are not yet able to buy B and they buy house D, and the idea is to obtain some little rental and income until they can, as the Senator says, remove the buildings. That is all.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the removal of those we have purchased would facilitate the purchase of those remaining. If we devastate that section in part, we probably will be able to get the remaining portion at a very much lower price and more speedily.

Mr. WARREN. As against that, let me say to the Senator that oftentimes tearing down a building which we have bought would undermine an adjoining structure and let that building down.

Now, that is being cared for, and it is not intended either to perpetuate the nuisance or to provide except for the time being. This provides for only one year.

I think the Senator knows we are getting quite a large revenue from buildings on property we have bought now upon which it is proposed to erect the three department buildings. I refer to the block adjoining the White Lot.

Mr. HEYBURN. I regret to say I know that.

Mr. WARREN. And the Senator regrets with me that Congress has not yet made the appropriation for tearing down those buildings and constructing the new ones.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is not the controlling feature. The buildings at Fifteenth and Pennsylvania Avenue should have been removed ere this. They are unsightly. The Government of the United States is renting buildings for its legitimate purposes. There is no reason why it should become a landlord, to own a lot of discredited buildings. One reason that we were able to secure legislation for the purchase of that property was that it was an eyesore—a lot of Chinese restaurants and other undesirable property fronting the city, standing between the city and its park, and one of the inducements that has been urged for the purchase of that property is that it is an undesirable thing to have such property between the city and its park.

Now, if we are going to enter upon a period of landlordism, I wonder if we are going to rent all of the buildings south of the Avenue for the purpose for which they are now occupied. It will be an interesting question when we are confronted with it.

Here we are reaching out to grasp a few petty rentals at the expense of continuing an undesirable condition in the city. I do not believe the committee should have reported such an amendment as this.

I happened to be on the train the other day when one of the present occupants of a building on Pennsylvania Avenue nearly opposite the Willard was riding in the same compartment of the car, and I heard a discussion as to the character of the premises and the purposes for which it was being used. It was not one that was calculated to awaken any spirit of pride or of patriotism in my breast. I can not recite it, because of the nature of it, but shall merely characterize it as a most unpleasant occurrence.

Now, we have paid out vast sums of money for that property, more than we should have paid for it. Transfers were made immediately before the Government took up the question of acquiring it, for the purpose of holding up the Government of the United States, and there were margins of profit made, by reason of two certain transfers, to build a pretty good sized Government building.

Now we have it, and we are going to perpetuate, not a business community, not buildings occupied by reputable business and maintained as such buildings are, but a lot of unoccupied, staring, vacant buildings, interspersed with those kept for other purposes.

No; it is the wrong policy, and I would not detain the consideration of this measure did I not feel very strongly upon this question.

Quite a long time ago I commenced an endeavor in this body to secure the purchase of all the property and the destruction of the buildings thereon, south of the Avenue. That was supplemented by legislation introduced and secured by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] covering this property. Now, we have been successful in part on the south side of the Avenue, and not entirely as to the property involved in this amendment.

Why should we now provide for the rental of those buildings? Let us allow them to become vacated; let us tear them down as rapidly as possible, and convert an unsightly condition into a spot of beauty.

THE TARSNEY ACT—BUREAU OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, while the subject of public buildings is up, I should like to say a word regarding the provision in the sundry civil bill repealing the Tarsney Act. I came here this morning expecting to oppose the approval of the conferenec report, and upon my arrival I ascertained that yesterday, while I was ill, the conference report had been approved by the Senate. I was quite surprised to find that the Senate conferees had agreed to the repeal of the Tarsney Act, for I supposed that they realized how strongly many of the Members on this floor felt regarding it. I regard the repeal of the Tarsney Act as a piece of reactionary legislation, practically restoring, in part, the old spoils system regarding public buildings and striking out from the statute books of the country the only measure that has passed in the last 20 years regarding public buildings that is at all constructive in character.

The Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury has been an evolution. It was, in the first place, a small office, as its name indicates, and without any material change in its organization except so far as the Tarsney Act was concerned, it has grown until it has become practically a great bureau under which $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 annually is expended.

I had hoped that if anything was done regarding that bureau or office something would be accomplished in the way of constructive legislation, merging that bureau with its officials and functions and duties and funds into a great bureau of public buildings and architecture, which, with the National Commission of Fine Arts as an advisory council, would recommend some comprehensive plan for the development of our public buildings in an orderly and consecutive way, providing for the standardization of certain classes of public buildings where that was practicable, providing for the utilization of the services of the best architects and artists in the country in the construction of these buildings, and providing for efficient organization and administration and artistic excellence. I had hoped that this office would be put upon as substantial a basis as some of the great architects' offices of the country are, offices which embrace the employment of two or three hundred men, and which are models of efficient administration. I had hoped that the aid of the Commission of Fine Arts would be sought in this great matter, as it embraces not only artists and sculptors of distinction, but architects and constructors of the greatest ability and reputation, men who have been identified with the great works of the country, in our expositions at Chicago and elsewhere; men who have taken the lead in the great architectural development of the country and who have advanced in certain lines the architecture of this country to European standards and even beyond.

I did not expect that a Congress in this day of intelligence would strike down the only measure that now provides for the utilization of these men of ability and distinction and would repeal an act introduced by a Democrat 20 years ago, sustained by the great profession of architects and by artistic associations throughout the country; an act which provided for a competitive system under which the great buildings of the country should be constructed by the most noted architects; an act which has worked beneficially, according to the testimony of every Secretary of the Treasury; an act which has worked beneficially, according to the opinion of the present Secretary; and an act which is sustained by the artistic sentiment of the country.

I did not feel that in this era of American development, when a movement has been inaugurated of which the democratization of art, its identification with the daily lives of our people, applying the stamp of beauty to everything useful, was the chief aim, the Congress of the United States, which is supposed to represent the highest intelligence of the people, would strike from the statute books so beneficial a statute.

I have looked over the records to see how this was accomplished, upon what recommendation. I found this measure of repeal upon the sundry civil appropriation bill, general legislation, subject to a point of order as such. I found that the House of Representatives by some general rule had abrogated that rule with reference to new legislation and practically made the Committee on Appropriations of the House the arbiter of all legislation, enabling that committee, with its great powers of coercion, to drive the Senate and to drive the President into legislation which it thought desirable and beneficial.

I am not unaware of the fact, Mr. President, that many beneficial measures affecting administration have been put upon appropriation bills, but it seems to me the safe rule to pursue with reference to such measures is that wherever any opposition is presented in the other body comity between the two bodies demands that the House presenting the new legislation upon an appropriation bill should yield. The Senate declared its opposition to that kind of legislation. There were Senators upon this floor who were preparing to make a stout resistance against the repeal of that act. There were Senators on this floor who felt that it ought to have full consideration by the appropriate committees, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate, that the great artistic sentiment of the country should be consulted, that architects and constructors should be allowed to appear and present their views, and that hasty legislation inaugurated by a few men in the Committee on Appropriations in the House should not be permitted to have its way, aided by the power of coercion to which I have referred.

What inquiry was made with reference to this subject? I find that no inquiry was made by the proper Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate having jurisdiction of the subject. I find that no investigation was made, so far as I am informed, by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House. The only inquiry which was made was made by a Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury in the House of Representatives, and their inquiry consisted only of a hearing of the Supervising Architect himself and one or two subordinates. The great body of the architectural profession of the country, the great body of artists of the country, the great body of constructors and engineers in the country were not consulted at all.

I find that, dissatisfied with the administration of the Supervising Architect's office, instead of striking at things which perhaps might have been subject to just criticism, they struck at the most beneficial measure which has been adopted in connection with public buildings. We find in the hearing and in the report of the Committee on Expenditures the most egregious errors. They seemed to be of the impression that the commission paid to the outside architects of 5 per cent surpassed the expenditures of the Supervising Architect's office in making plans and drawings for works under their control, whereas the fact is, as shown by a public document which I had printed the other day and which I presented to the conferees upon this bill, that the cost of making plans and specifications in the Supervising Architect's office has been larger during the last seven years than the commissions of the private architects. We all know that the Supervising Architect can not command among his employees the genius and the talent and the capacity that can be commanded by a competition among distinguished architects under the ordinary commission plan.

One statement was made in the report of the House Committee on Public Expenditures which bears its own refutation. The declaration was made that a commission of 5 per cent, aggregating about $150,000, had been paid to the architect upon the Cleveland public building, the cost of which, I believe, was about $3,000,000. The statement was made that this commission amounted almost to the total annual expenditure of the Supervising Architect's Office, whereas the fact is that the Supervising Architect's Office expends annually between six and seven hundred thousand dollars, and while $150,000 was paid to the architect for the Cleveland building, it covered work and supervision not for one year, but for about five years, and of the 5 per cent commission which that architect received, according to the testimony which has been presented in past cases, at least three-fifths of it was paid out by the architect in the expenses of designers and draftsmen.

Mr. President, this simply illustrates what general legislation upon appropriation bills means. Three men upon the Appropriations Committee of the House have been able, through the coercive power which they possess, to force through legislation against the judgment of the Senate and practically without consulting the House.

It is of a piece with other mistaken legislation upon a recent appropriation bill, legislation regarding the civil service, a most important question, demanding the attention of the Civil Service Committees in both bodies, demanding serious consideration in debate, particularly under the pledges of both parties in the late conventions that there should be a just organization of the civil service. We all know how the Senate conferees were coerced upon this subject, and how a presidential veto alone saved the situation.

I do not doubt that the intention of the Committee on Appropriations of the House was a good one; that they had in view the benefit of the service; but the debate in the Senate demonstrated that that measure was unjust, ill considered, and likely to be demoralizing to the public service. There was hardly any difference of view in the Senate on that subject, and yet, after protracted conference the Senate was compelled to yield.

This growing habit of general legislation upon appropriation bills is a habit which should be checked, for it makes the Senate not a coordinate body with the House but the victim of coercion.

Mr. President, as the provision in the sundry civil appropriation bill repealing the Tarsney Act was general legislation, which passed without thorough consideration by the proper committees and without any debate, practically, in either body, and as it represents simply the judgment of the conferees of the House and the coerced judgment of the conferees of the Senate, I ask the chairman of the committee whether he will make any objection to this general legislation or new legislation of a remedial character upon this deficiency appropriation bill. I ask the Secretary to read, and I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

The Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury shall hereafter be known as the bureau of public buildings, and such Supervising Architect shall hereafter be known as the director of public buildings. The present officials and employees of the Supervising Architect's Office shall be the officials and employees of such bureau of public buildings; and all appropriations, compensations, funds, and salaries now authorized by law regarding the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury shall belong, pertain to, and be available by such bureau; and all duties now required of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury and of the officials and employees in his office shall become the duties of the director of public buildings and of the officials and employees hereby transferred to such bureau; and the director of public buildings shall have general direction over all work placed in such bureau. Such bureau shall, until otherwise provided by law, be under the general supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury. The director of public buildings shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury on the certification of the Civil Service Commission, and he must be by education and experience technically fitted to carry out the work of the bureau.

The bureau of public buildings shall have control of the construction, alteration, and maintenance of all public buildings, including the furniture and equipment for the same; the selection of sites for buildings and monuments; the landscape treatment of public buildings and parks; the selection and installation of statuary and paintings; and all other work of an architectural or artistic nature, and of the repair and preservation of the same, unless specifically otherwise directed by Congress.

The Commission of Fine Arts shall, in addition to their existing duties, aid the director of public buildings by their advice in matters of a general artistic character in the various branches under his control; shall aid in the selection of competitors, where work in any of the branches is to be carried out under competition; shall advise upon the character, design, site, and landscape treatment of all public works of architecture, painting, sculpture, monuments, parks, bridges, and other works of which the art of design forms a part; and shall make recommendations for the conservation of all historic monuments. Such commission shall serve without compensation, but the expenses necessarily incurred in the performance of their duties shall be paid from appropriations made for the conduct of the bureau. Such commission shall also aid the director of public buildings in recommending to Congress a plan for the organization of such bureau, with a view to efficient and economical administration, and with a view to reasonable expedition in meeting the requirements of the Government as to public buildings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Nevada is right in saying that this is legislation. He is also right in saying that the repeal of the Tarsney Act is legislation. The difference lies in this: The House under its new rules has the liberty and right to put legislation in its appropriation bills, as far as it is concerned, while we under our rules are debarred from putting in legislation.

I will say to the Senator that, as rank as that legislation is, I do not propose myself to object to it. I want to say to the Senator that the efforts of the conferees to protect the Tarsney Act could hardly be exceeded in earnest opposition and continued effort, and it was the very last thing in the 289 amendments the Senate conferees receded from; but in the judgment of the Senate conferees they were compelled to so recede.

As I said, the House had a right to put it in under their rules. We do not have the right to put it in, but I am willing, as far as I am concerned, to refrain from any objection.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me submit to the chairman of the committee that this amendment will give an opportunity to the House conferees to do what I believe they wish to do, to organize the bureau upon a substantial and businesslike basis. I am very glad to know that the Senator makes no objection to the amendment. I ask for its adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 37, after line 21, to insert:

Authority to use a certain unexpended balance by the State of Arizona: The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay to the governor of the State of Arizona, for the use of the said State of Arizona, any and all unused balance of the sum of $100,000 now remaining and unexpended, heretofore appropriated under an act (H. R. 18166) entitled "An act to enable the people of New Mexico and Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," etc., to be used for the payment of election expenses of the first State election and in repaying to the different counties, pro rata, of the State certain amounts of money expended by them in such election and canvassing the returns thereof, after first paying the expenses of canvassing the general election returns to the persons and in the amounts certified by the governor of the Territory of Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 12, to insert:

Authority to use a certain unexpended balance by the State of New Mexico: The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay over to the treasurer of the State of New Mexico the sum of $14,825.62, now in the Treasury of the United States, being the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $100,000 made under the provisions of the act of Congress of June 20, 1910, for the payment of the expenses of the constitutional convention and the election held upon the adoption of such constitution, said sum to be applied by the treasurer of the State of New Mexico for the payment of the expenses and the reimbursement to said State, and to the various counties thereof, pro rata, of the moneys already expended in the election and canvass of the returns of the election held under the provisions of Public Resolution No. 8 (Senate joint resolution No. 57), approved August 21, 1911 requiring the people of New Mexico to vote upon certain amendments to their constitution previous to the admission of said Territory as a State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 7, to insert:

PENSION OFFICE.

For the purchase of necessary furniture, supplies, and equipment, and purchase and exchange of typewriters, including $2,000 for stationery, for the temporary additional force for the Bureau of Pensions, $14,695.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 12, to insert:

For the purchase of necessary furniture, supplies, and equipment, and purchase and exchange of typewriters, which will be required on account of the transfer of employees from the pension agencies to the Bureau of Pensions at Washington, D. C., $7,612.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 17, to insert:

INDIAN OFFICE.

To pay the Second Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for the fiscal year 1913, $500: Provided, That hereafter said salary shall be at the rate of $2,750 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 22, to insert:

To pay the Turner Produce Co., of Mitchell, S. Dak., the amount due said company under a contract dated November 8, 1907, for furnishing merchandise to the United States Indian School at Chamberlain, S. Dak., $20.32.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 2, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to purchase not to exceed 10 acres of land for an agency site for the Pottawatomie Indian School, Kansas, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 5, to insert:

For payment of rent of office and storage rooms for Office of Indian Affairs, Department of the Interior, including heat, light, and janitor service, $27,500; for labor, purchase of material and boxes, and transfer charges in moving desks, furniture, and other equipment of the Office of Indian Affairs from Pension Building to quarters to be rented, $2,500; for purchasing desks, filing furniture, and equipment, $7,500; for pay of employees in reclassifying and refiling old files, $10,000; in all, $47,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Mines," on page 47, after line 18, to strike out:

The accounting officers of the Treasury Department are authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of F. E. McCalip, special disbursing agent of the Bureau of Mines, the payment, amounting to $12.50 for a Pittsburgh Directory, made by him during the quarter ended December 31, 1911, voucher No. 1007.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, are amendments other than committee amendments now being considered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been the procedure.

Mr. BORAH. I offer an amendment to come in under the subhead "Reclamation Service," on page 49, after the word "act," in line 6.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 49, after line 6, it is proposed to insert:

That any desert-land entryman whose desert-land entry has been embraced within the exterior limits of any land withdrawal or irrigation project under the act of June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, and who may have obtained a water supply for the land embraced in any such desert-land entry from the reclamation project by the purchase of a water-right certificate, may at any time after having complied with the provisions of the law applicable to such lands and upon proof of the cultivation and reclamation of the land to the extent required by the reclamation act for homestead entrymen, submit proof of such compliance, which proof, if found regular and satisfactory, shall entitle the entryman to a patent and a final water-right certificate under the same terms and conditions as required of homestead entrymen under the act entitled "An act providing for patents on reclamation entries, and for other purposes, approved August 9, 1912."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho—I was not listening very closely to the reading of the amendment—if the amendment applies to homesteaders or to those who settle upon reclamation projects only.

Mr. BORAH. No; this applies solely to settlers upon reclamation projects. It puts desert-land entrymen—that is those settling upon reclamation projects—upon the same footing as homestead entrymen.

Mr. SMOOT. It places desert-land entrymen on a reclamation project on the same footing with homesteaders.

Mr. BORAH. Yes. I will say, Mr. President, that this is substantially approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and that it has also been reported favorably by the Committee on Public Lands of the other House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Department of Justice," on page 50, after line 8, to insert:

Payment to O. J. Field: To pay the expenses incurred by O. J. Field, chief clerk Department of Justice, in attending the annual meeting of the American Association of Law Libraries, under the direction of the Attorney General, $74.44.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous, Department of Justice," on page 51, line 2, after the words "Attorney General," to strike out the sum "$4,000" and insert "$5,000," so as to make the clause read:

MISCELLANEOUS, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Detection and prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States; the investigation of the official acts, records, and accounts of marshals, attorneys, clerks, and referees of the United States courts and the Territorial courts, and United States commissioners, for which purpose all the official papers, records, and dockets of said officers, without exception, shall be examined by the agents of the Attorney General at any time; for the protection of the person of the President of the United States; for such other investigations regarding official matters under the control of the Department of Justice as may be directed by the Attorney General, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 14, to insert:

To pay W. and J. Sloane, New York City, for material and labor furnished in making alterations in the judges' platform and screen, court of appeals addition to courthouse, Washington, D. C., $175.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "United States Courts," on page 52, after line 10, to insert:

The disbursing clerk of the Department of Justice is hereby authorized to pay from the appropriation known as "Salaries, fees, and expenses of marshals, United States courts, 1912," the salary of Creighton M. Foraker, for acting as United States marshal during the period from January 7, 1912, to March 1, 1912, inclusive, at the rate of $4,000 per annum, and also the salary of W. R. Forbes, for acting as chief office deputy marshal during the same period of time, at the rate of $1,800 per annum.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if it is in order, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 52, at the end of line 20, after the amendment just agreed to, it is proposed to insert a semicolon in place of the period and the words—and said disbursing clerk is further authorized to pay from the same appropriation the salary of Charles A. Overlock, for acting as United States marshal during the period from February 14 to March 4, 1912, and to the regularly appointed deputy marshals acting under him for said period, as per accounts rendered the Treasury Department by said marshal's office and which would have been audited and paid if Arizona had remained a Territory.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In support of the amendment I ask for the reading of the letter which I send to the desk.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to ask the Senator from Arizona whether he has the audit of the Treasury Department to show the amounts due?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I will leave it entirely with the department. If Arizona had remained a Territory the accounts would have been allowed.

Mr. WARREN. The reason I asked the question was because the department sent us estimates and figures for New Mexico, but did not send an estimate for this item. I am not objecting to it; only when we meet in conference we shall be unable to sustain it unless we have the figures from the department to show that the amounts are proper. I say that to the Senator so that he can reenforce it before we get to conference.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I appreciate that, and if I only had time I would be glad to follow the suggestion of the Senator. I think if the Senator will observe the letter which I will ask to have inserted in the RECORD, and the amendment he will find that, except for the hiatus caused by the change from a Territorial to State condition, this marshal's accounts would have been paid. They were all filed.

Mr. WARREN. I understand exactly what the Senator wishes to arrive at. I have no objection whatever to the amendment. I desire to have the amount paid, provided it is approved by the department, and I ask the Senator to reenforce the conferees, if he will, by going to the department in the morning and getting the figures to correspond with the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I will attempt to do so.

Mr. WARREN. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona desire the letter read?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I will not delay the Senate for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I will ask to have the letter printed in the RECORD in connection with the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF UNITED STATES MARSHAL
FOR THE TERRITORY OF ARIZONA,
Tucson, June 26, 1912.

Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR FRIEND MARK: I am taking the liberty of asking a favor of you at this time. On the 14th of February this year, when Arizona became a State, it naturally caused a termination of the office of United States marshal under my previous appointment, and owing to the fact that there was no judge in the district of Arizona so that I could qualify under my new appointment, the office of United States marshal for Arizona from February 14 to March 4 was virtually vacant, as far as the appropriation for salaries was concerned, but on account of there being no judge who could qualify my successor I had to still retain the office, as there was no one to turn over the office to, and was forced to keep my deputies during this period, which, according to estimate, was 19 days, and there is no appropriation for paying for such service. As I understand the law, there would have to be a special act of some kind in order to obtain pay during this time.

I would not have taken the matter up on my own account, but inasmuch as my salaried deputies, five in number, are working for small salaries, it does not look quite fair that they should not be allowed their regular salaries during this time, and knowing that you would know how to handle this matter, and see if you can get some bill to relieve the situation, I would be very pleased to hear from you in regard to the matter and to know if there is anything that can be done to help out the boys in receiving pay for the stated time.

Anything you can do for me in the matter will be greatly appreciated, not only by myself but my deputies, who are interested in the matter.

Truly, yours,

C. A. OVERLOCK.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 53, line 10, after the date "nineteen hundred and twelve," to strike out the sum "$40,000" and insert "$50,000," so as to make the clause read:

For payment of assistants to the Attorney General and to United States district attorneys employed by the Attorney General to aid in special cases, to be available also for the payment of foreign counsel employed by the Attorney General in special cases, and such counsel shall not be required to take oath of office in accordance with section 366, Revised Statutes of the United States, fiscal years as follows:

Fiscal year 1912, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Out of the postal revenues," on page 55, after line 23, to strike out:

For payment of limited indemnity for the loss of pieces of first-class domestic registered matter, fiscal year 1911, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 2, to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

FOREST SERVICE.

To pay to former employees of the Forest Service and certain other persons named herein the amount recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture for injuries incurred in and losses resulting from fighting forest fires in 1910, as follows: L. R. Sullivan, Wallace, Idaho, $800; James G. Danilson, Pullman, Wash., $322.33; Anton Canyor, Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, $2,500; Samuel W. Stockton, Phoenix, Ariz., $995; Gust Keating, Grangeville, Idaho, $200; Frank D. Freeman, Goff, Idaho, $732.50; R. L. Irwin, Goff, Idaho, $100; Dr. W. A. Foskett, White Bird, Idaho, $15; Mrs. Emma Woods, Pollock, Idaho, $25; Dr. T. R. Mason, Wardner, Idaho, $50; Dr. Albert Knudston, Kettle Falls, Wash., $80; in all, $5,819.83.

BUREAU OF BIOLOGICAL SURVEY.

General expenses: So much of the fund for the maintenance of the Montana National Bison Range and other reservations as remains unexpended on June 30, 1912, is reappropriated and made available until expended for fencing on said national reservations and for transportation of game; and hereafter the appropriation for maintenance of said reservations may be utilized for fencing and for construction of shelters, sheds, and other necessary buildings: Provided, That the cost of any one building shall not exceed $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 2, to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

Authority to lease building for a five-year period: For the purpose of providing adequate space for those bureaus and branches of the Department of Commerce and Labor, the rent of which is now paid from the appropriation "Rent, Department of Commerce and Labor," the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to enter into a contract for the lease, for a period not to exceed five years, of a modern fireproof office building, containing no less than approximately 100,000 square feet of available floor space for Government uses, at an annual rental not to exceed the present annual rental as now provided for by law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not understand that last amendment. Is that a provision for the rent of some building in the city of Washington in addition to those we already have rented? I ask the Secretary to read the amendment again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what particular building is going to be rented under that provision?

Mr. WARREN. There is no particular building; but, as the Senator knows, the Department of Commerce and Labor is now occupying various buildings in different parts of the city. They have before them two or three, or perhaps more, offers to construct a building during the present season large enough to include all the bureaus now in various buildings and also to provide extra room at a rate not to exceed what they are now paying and what has been appropriated for.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why would it not be cheaper for the United States Government to provide in this bill for a building for the Department of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me, we have already provided for that department and two other departments, so far as buying the site is concerned, down near the White Lot, but we have not yet appropriated for the construction of the building. It would take in the ordinary course of Government building, considering the character of buildings the Government constructs, I think probably five years; so this proposition is to make a short lease, not exceeding five years, to use no more money than is now being used, and get all the bureaus of the department together in the meantime.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator says "a short lease, not exceeding five years." It does not strike me that that is a "short lease." If we are going to construct these buildings for the departments, it seems to me that we will have them ready at a much earlier period than five years. I shall not make any objection to the amendment, but I want to call attention to the fact that we are constantly providing for unnecessary rentals in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator has observed the kind of leases which the Government makes, he must have noticed that they nearly always contain a clause that when the new Government building to be constructed is ready for occupancy the lease is canceled; so that while the owner of the building, whether a corporation or a private individual, is bound to the five years, the Government is not bound beyond the time it may need the leased building and can at once occupy the new quarters which have been provided.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I appreciate what the Senator says, and I reckon it is all right, so I will let it pass; but it does seem to me that we are constantly anxious to fix up rentals for somebody.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 58, after line 16, to insert:

For reimbursement to the owners of the schooner Thomas W. H. White for losses incurred when the lighthouse tender Lilac swung against the schooner, $260.02.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 19, to insert:

For payment to Crowley Launch & Tug Boat Co., for repairs to launch damaged by Coast and Geodetic Survey launch Reynard, $10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 59, to insert:

LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

Additional aids to navigation: For the construction and equipment of additional light vessels for general service, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 4, to insert:

For the completion and reestablishment of the light and fog-signal station marking Thimble Shoal, Chesapeake Bay, Va., $39,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 7, to insert:

For completing the lighting and marking with aids to navigation of Cape Fear River, N. C., $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, to come in after the amendment just adopted, I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 59, after line 9, it is proposed to insert the following:

Cape St. Elias Light Station, Alaska, No. 6: For establishing light and fog signal at or near Cape St. Elias, Alaska, $115,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think I ought to ask unanimous consent at this point to have the Secretary correct all totals before the bill leaves the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 59, after line 9, to insert:

For improving the lighting of Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and the construction of a dwelling for the keepers of the lights, $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 12, to insert:

For repairs and improvements to aids to navigation in St. Marys River, Mich., $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 14, to insert:

In all, $393,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 15, to insert:

BUREAU OF IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION.

Immigrant station, Galveston, Tex.: For locating and correcting leak in cast-iron water main constructed at Galveston, Tex., for use of the United States immigration station, to continue available during the fiscal year 1913, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 21, to insert:

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION.

Radio communication: To enable the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to enforce the acts of Congress "to require apparatus and operators for radio communication on certain ocean steamers" and "to regulate radio communication" and carry out the International Radiotelegraphic Convention, and to employ such persons and means as may be necessary, this employment to include salaries of employees in Washington not exceeding $5,000, traveling and subsistence expenses, printing, purchase and exchange of instruments, technical books, rent, and all other miscellaneous items and necessary expenses not included in the foregoing, to continue available during the fiscal year 1913, $27,880.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 20, to insert:

SENATE.

To pay Helen Frye White and Alice Frye Briggs, daughters of the late Senator William P. Frye, from the State of Maine, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 61, to insert:

To pay Mamie Love Taylor, widow of the late Senator Robert Love Taylor, from the State of Tennessee, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 2, to insert:

To pay Kate I. Nixon, widow of the late George S. Nixon, from the State of Nevada, $7,500.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the committee amendment, in line 3, page 61, the Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to the fact that the word "Senator" should be inserted after the word "late."

Mr. WARREN. I suggest that the amendment be so modified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be so modified, and the amendment as modified will be agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 61, after line 4, to insert:

To reimburse the official reporters of the proceedings and debates of the Senate for expenses incurred to July 1, 1912, for clerk hire and other extra clerical services, $4,810.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 8, to insert:

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $10,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 9, to insert:

For repairs to Maltby Building, $500.

Mr. WARREN. I move to amend that by making the appropriation available during the current year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add in the amendment on page 61, line 10, after the word "Building," the words "to continue available during the fiscal year 1913."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 10, to insert:

To pay E. C. Talbot $750, Addison T. Smith $500, and J. K. White $150 for services rendered to the Committee on Privileges and Elections making investigation of the charges against Isaac Stephenson involving his right to his seat in the United States Senate as a Senator from the State of Wisconsin; in all, $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 16, to insert:

To pay Harry B. Straight for extra clerical services, $360.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 18, to insert:

To pay F. H. Wakefield for preparing the history of legislation for the Senate in the first and second sessions of the Sixty-second Congress, for carrying out his tracing and notification plan to Members of the Senate and clerks of committees, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SANDERS. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 61, after line 23, it is proposed to insert:

To pay Grant Jarvis $600 for services in carrying on the notification work to the Members of the Senate and clerks to committees in the extra session and in the present session of Congress.

Mr. WARREN. I shall make no objection to the amendment, as it is a matter I wish to submit to the conferees.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 61, after line 23, to insert:

To pay J. H. Jones for services in the care of the Senate chronometer and for the work in connection therewith, for the second session of the Sixty-second Congress, $100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 62, to insert:

To pay Robert W. Farrar for extra services as clerk to the Committee on Pensions, Sixty-second Congress, first and second sessions, $750.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am going to move an amendment to this paragraph and the succeeding one. I refer to the first two paragraphs on page 62. In the first instance, I am going to move to strike out "$750" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,200," and in the second paragraph to strike out "$750" and insert "$1,000."

I am quite certain that the Senator in charge of the bill will, with his general sense of fairness, accede to this request for a modification. The Senate, of course, understands the vast amount of work that is thrust upon the Committee on Pensions in both the House and the Senate, but what I especially desire to call attention to is the fact that the Senate has but one Committee on Pensions. The House has two Committees on Pensions, one that has jurisdiction over questions relating to pensions of the Civil War, and the other to all other wars and also the general establishment.

Mr. OVERMAN. What salaries do these gentlemen get now?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think $1,440 in the one instance and $2,000 in the other.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 64) authorizing the conference reports on the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 25531) to be changed so that amendment 11 of the Senate will be changed so as to read "after the words 'aviation duty' insert a comma and the words 'any student officer in attendance at the service school at Leavenworth, Kans.'"; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives, which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
August 23, 1912.

House concurrent resolution 64.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the conference reports on the Army appropriation bill be changed to this extent: That amendment 11 of the Senate be changed so as to read "after the words 'aviation duty' insert a comma and the words 'any student officer in attendance at the service school at Leavenworth, Kans.'"

Mr. WARREN. That is intended to correct a bill before it is enrolled, and as there is no time in which to call together the Committee on Military Affairs——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that this is a concurrent resolution.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that, Mr. President, and as I was going to ask that it be now acted upon, I was about to give the reason why it does not come from the committee. There is no time to carry it to the committee. Therefore I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Mr. WARREN subsequently said: I am just informed by a representative of the House that the resolution just adopted is not in form to correct the error, and that there is a corrected resolution about to follow, so I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was concurred in.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the resolution lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 25970) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1912 and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to see if I correctly understand the Senator from North Dakota. He says one of these clerks has $2,250 and the $750 would give him $3,000 a year.

Mr. McCUMBER. Each committee has one person delegated from the Pension Bureau. Now, the House has already, by another bill, voted an amount for the chief clerk and for the one delegated from the Pension Bureau. In the one instance they have granted $1,200 additional, and in the other instance they have granted $1,000 additional. I am asking for the same amount for the Committee on Pensions of the Senate, that which has been done year after year, as has been allowed in the House.

I simply call attention to the fact that the Pensions Committee of the Senate does the work of both Pensions Committees in the House and, in addition to that, has the pension appropriation bill; and, further than that, this year it has considered some 4,000 bills——

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the clerk in the House of Representatives get the same salary?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think it is the same in the House. I am not certain.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the committee has agreed to increase this by $750—to $3,000—and the Senator proposes——

Mr. McCUMBER. I intend to make it just the same as it was. I am not certain as to the amount paid to Mr. Kerr.

Mr. WARREN. Two thousand dollars.

Mr. McCUMBER. That would make it $3,000. He remains here all summer and does work during the entire summer months on bills which have not been acted upon. The investigation requires an immense amount of work. The clerks work from 8 o'clock in the morning until 6 o'clock in the evening, and a great deal of work is required to be done in the evening, besides.

When it is remembered that about four-fifths of all bills introduced are pension bills, and that each one requires a separate investigation, it will be understood the amount of extra work that is thrown upon the chief clerk of the Pension Committee and also in the House. Now, all I am asking for is that he be granted the same amount that the House has allowed in another bill to its clerks performing not the same service but less service.

Mr. WARREN. In the House they have allowed from their contingent fund $1,000 to one detailed clerk and $600 each to two other detailed clerks.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. This year. If the Senator will allow me, I suppose the most ungracious and unpleasant thing that a Senator can do and has to do when he is in charge of a bill is to debate with other Senators the subject of salaries of their clerks; but I think I ought to say that there seemed to be extreme reluctance this year on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to go into the matter of extra payments at all, on the ground that we ought to make the salaries commensurate with what the men are earning and then have no more additions or extras. That is the proper way to do, in fact.

The committee brought in these smaller amounts. It is true, as the Senator says, that last year the clerks of the Pension Committee had an extra payment of $1,200 each, one drawing a regular salary of $2,500 and the other $2,000; and it is true that the House extra payment has run all the way from $200 to $1,000 each; I think in one man's case $1,200 was paid for a number of years. This matter of extra pay for the pension clerks is almost as old as the subject of pensions. I looked into the subject, going back 10 years, and I find in both Houses they have had extra pay each year, ranging from $200 each to $1,200 each. We cut down the other amounts. In cases where $500 has been usually granted the committee has cut the amount to $360.

I can only say to the Senator now on the floor, and others, that I hope they will bear down as lightly as possible on the committee, because, as I stated, it is an ungracious thing to oppose any of these requests; and, on the other hand, I do not divulge any secret when I say we are having a pretty strenuous time with Representatives in the other House who maintain that they have the same right, on the House side, as the Senate itself has, to examine into and allow or reject every dollar we propose to expend on the Senate side. That is a new doctrine, I will admit, and one which I do not favor, but that is the situation.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the reason I should like the Senate to stand by the amendment I have proposed and put it up to the House and let the House determine whether a committee here, which does the work of two committees in the House, shall not have a payment for clerical work equal to the amount paid in that body.

I find that the amount paid for clerical services by the House on pension matters is 50 per cent higher than that paid by the Senate, and the Senate does 50 per cent more work. It has but one committee, at least, which does as much work as both of the House committees, and has the pension appropriation bill in addition. If a Senator or a Representative comes and asks for information we must go over the case and give a report in each case and then inform him what additional testimony is required.

The House has granted this additional amount. It is not, of course, in this bill. It is in another bill. It has granted it for its employees, and I am asking, inasmuch as one of the committees of the House has granted that again this year, and it is a grant we have given for several years, that the Committee on Pensions of the Senate be treated exactly in the same way.

If the Senator from Wyoming will accept the amendment, then if the House disagree I agree to abide by whatever the conferees decide to do.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, it is not that I complain of the increase of the salary of these people, but I complain, and I shall hereafter complain more and contend more strenuously against this kind of legislation. We incorporate in the legislative appropriation bill a salary of $2,700 or $2,500 for a certain employee, and then you will find stuck around in some other appropriation bill an increase of the salary. It is not as to these pension clerks that I am speaking, but it is the general system. You will find here a whole page of appropriations for extra clerical services for clerks to particular committees. If one clerk is entitled to extra pay for extra clerical services why should not somebody else's clerk be entitled to the same amount?

I am not complaining of the Senator's clerks, but if Mr. Kerr is entitled to the $3,000 give it to him and do not in one appropriation bill pay $2,200 or $2,500 and then, in another bill, say that he shall have extra pay to the extent of $1,200.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. Kerr can scarcely be said to be clerk of the committee. He is delegated from the Bureau of Pensions.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. And of course his salary is fixed by the bureau. But his work is at least a third more than it would be if he were doing work in the bureau.

Mr. OVERMAN. He is used for that purpose, and let us fix the salary at what the employee deserves. I believe there should be ample compensation to each for the work he is doing.

Mr. McCUMBER. We are trying to fix it in this way.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to this way of legislating. I think there is a great reform here. I have introduced an amendment, which has been carried forward by the committee. There has been a practice growing up in this Government of appropriating, say, $200,000, in a lump sum, and we find heads of departments and secretaries paying a $1,500 clerk $2,000 or $2,700, when the law says he shall have $1,500. The committee has an amendment here that the salaries shall not be increased except by act of Congress.

I am not going to object in this instance, but I give notice that hereafter, if I am on the Committee on Appropriations, I shall see to it that this plan is not continued. Increase the salaries, if necessary, but I am opposed to fixing the salary in one bill and then saying in another bill that the employees shall have an extra sum.

Mr. McCUMBER. I myself would greatly favor that proposition, but let me again call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Senate Committee on Pensions performs all the work that both committees on Pensions of the House do, and at an expense of nearly $4,000 less for clerk hire. In other words, we do all their work and the additional work of looking after the pension appropriation bill and other matters of that character, and yet the expense for clerk hire is nearly $4,000 less than in the House. I am simply asking that the Senate employees receive the same sum that has been granted in the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment of the committee on page 62, line 3, after the word "session," strike out "$750" and insert "$1,200."

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, in addition to what has been said by the chairman of the committee I wish to add that I have witnessed the faithful and intelligent service of these men. In my judgment this little increase at best does not make the salary of these men as much as it should be. They commence early in the morning and they work until 6 o'clock. They are faithful, they are efficient, they are accommodating, and the volume of work done by these men during a session is enormous. I trust the Senate will agree to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 62, after line 3, to insert:

To pay Dennis M. Kerr for services as assistant clerk by detail to the Committee on Pensions, Sixty-second Congress, first and second sessions, $750.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move to strike out "$750" and insert "$1,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, for many years I have been profoundly impressed by the racial complications of the United States, holding within its boundaries, as its does, nearly twelve millions of blacks, and facing on the Pacific hundreds of millions of people of the brown and yellow races, who look upon the United States as the promised land of opportunity.

At the Baltimore Democratic convention I presented a platform plank proposing to restrict suffrage in and immigration to this country to people of the white race. Later on Mr. Roosevelt, whose views regarding the right of the blacks in the South to suffrage, to office holding, and to social recognition have hitherto been in marked hostility to the prevailing sentiment of the South, astonished the country by his declaration in favor of organizing a Progressive Party as a white party in the South and as a white and black party in the North.

So far as the platform plank which I sought to have adopted at Baltimore is concerned, I found that whilst there was little disposition to insist upon the exercise of the privilege of suffrage by the blacks, there was an unwillingness to add this issue to the many presented by the Democratic Party in this campaign; the sentiment of the southern men, particularly, being that whilst northern sentiment was gradually changing upon this subject, it was not yet ripe for a rational consideration of the subject. I therefore withdrew the plank. I have no disposition to enter into a discussion at this time of the race question; but as the various publications of interviews with me on this subject have not contained my full expression and have not made clear the humanitarian and kindly considerations which have controlled me, I shall ask leave to publish in the RECORD—

First. The platform containing the race plank which I offered at the Baltimore convention.

Second. The full statement which I gave the press upon the subject.

Third. My full press statement regarding Col. Roosevelt's decisive action on the race question at Chicago.

Fourth. A letter to Gov. Dickerson, of Nevada, dated February 3, 1909, at a time when the legislatures of the various Pacific Coast States were preparing to take action upon the Japanese question and were expressing themselves with an emphasis that was likely to jeopardize our friendly relations with Japan. In this letter I took up the whole race question as it relates to the question of the black, the brown, and the yellow peoples; and I publish it for the purpose of showing how futile the policy of drift is and how important it is that the conservative thought of the country should anticipate the most serious racial difficulties of the future, which may result in bloodshed and war, by a deliberation that will force a calm and rational solution of these important questions.

I ask leave to insert in the RECORD the matter to which I refer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, permission will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

A TENTATIVE PROPOSAL FOR A NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM, SUGGESTED BY SENATOR NEWLANDS, OF NEVADA.

First. We, the representatives of the national Democracy in convention assembled, reaffirm our belief in an indestructible Union of indestructible States and in the exercise of all the powers of popular sovereignty, both National and State, for the common good.

Second. Whilst reaffirming our faith in home rule and in keeping the powers of government as far as practicable in the hands of the people, in the municipalities and States, we also believe in the full exercise of the granted powers to the Nation and in the cooperation of the Nation with the States, within their respective jurisdictions, in the promotion of the general welfare.

Third. We declare that the Republican Party has drifted from the teachings of Lincoln and has become during long years of power the protector of privilege and abuse, whilst the Democratic Party still stands true to the doctrines declared by Jefferson—of equal rights to all and special privilege to none.

THE TARIFF.

Fourth. The protective tariff is one of the chief sources of high prices. Whilst refusing to indorse the principle of protection, we recognize the fact of protection, and that under a protective policy industries have been stimulated which it would be unwise violently to disturb. We therefore favor the gradual reduction of tariff duties toward a revenue basis, so accomplished as to disarm the charge that reduction of excessive duties will cause a flood of importations which will displace American labor and impair American industries. We declare our purpose to feel our way prudently and with a due regard to American wages and industry toward a revenue basis.

THE TRUSTS.

Fifth. We declare that private monopoly is indefensible and that combinations of plants and of capital having such monopoly in view should be restrained and broken up.

We declare against any modification of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, but we favor supplementing it by the organization of a nonpartisan independent interstate trade commission possessing powers of investigation, publicity, and recommendation regarding interstate trade similar to those possessed by the Interstate Commerce Commission regarding interstate transportation, and giving such commission the power to aid the courts in the disintegration of monopolistic combinations and to act independently upon complaint, or its own initiative in investications, with a view to bringing such combinations to justice, where they fail to conform with the law.

We declare that the system of enforcing the Sherman law regarding monopolies in interstate trade through the Attorney General's office, with its shifting incumbencies and varying policies, has not been satisfactory, as compared with that of the Interstate Commerce Commission in enforcing the laws regarding interstate transportation, and that this experience constitutes a controlling reason for organizing an independent interstate trade commission which, regardless of political exigencies or executive or political influence, will insure the steady and continuous enforcement of the laws relating to trusts and monopolies.

We also favor the declaration by law of the conditions upon which corporations shall be permitted to engage in interstate trade, including among others the prevention of holding companies, of interlocking directors, of stock watering, and the control by any one corporation of so large a proportion of any industry as to make it a menace to competitive conditions.

BANKING AND FINANCE.

Sixth. Whilst opposing the Aldrich plan for the organization of a central banking and reserve association, we favor the union, under national law, of both National and State banks within the boundaries of each State in reserve associations analogous to existing clearing-house associations, for the purpose of protecting their reserves and cooperating in the prevention of bank panics, the membership of the State banks in such reserve associations to be made dependent upon their complying with the requirements of the national banking act regarding capital and reserves and upon their submitting to such examination as the national banks are subjected to.

We also favor federating, under national law, such reserve associations of the respective States by the organization of a central reserve commission, composed of nine members, to be selected by the various State reserve associations, one member thereof from each judicial circuit; such commission to have such powers in bringing the various State reserve associations into cooperation as Congress may determine, and to be advisory to Congress and to the Executive Department.

We also favor the merger of the comptroller's office, with all its officials, funds, powers, and duties, in a nonpartisan national banking commission, to be appointed by the President, of which commission the Secretary of the Treasury shall be the charman and the Comptroller of the Currency the secretary, such commission to have powers of investigation, correction, and publicity over banks engaged in interstate exchange analogous, so far as practicable, to those now exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission over carriers engaged in interstate transportation.

We favor a law which will bring such banking commission into cooperation with similar commissions organized by the respective States.

We also favor legislation which will gradually do away with the existing pernicious practice of allowing a large proportion of the reserves of the country banks to be deposited in reserve city and central reserve city banks, to be used there for purposes of speculation instead of exchange.

CONSTRUCTIVE POLICIES.

Seventh. We favor constructive policies under which at least one-fifth of the total revenue of the Government will be expended in constructive work of a durable character, and to this end we favor the expenditure of at least $50,000,000 annually in the regulation of our rivers for navigation and in supplementing bank and levee protection below by the diversion and storage of flood waters above in aid of the reclamation of swamp and arid lands and of water-power development, such work to be accomplished under the direction of a board of experts appointed by the President, of which board the Chief of Engineers of the Army shall be the chairman, to act, with the approval of Congress, in cooperation with the States in plans and works intended to accomplish the full development of our rivers for every useful purpose, under the respective powers and jurisdictions of the Nation and the States. The recent devastation of the lower Mississippi Valley accentuates this movement and necessitates not only additional bank and levee protection below, but the control of the headwaters above.

We favor the expenditure of $25,000,000 annually in the construction of model interstate roads, such work to be conducted under a system of cooperation with the States, approved by Congress.

We favor also the appropriation of at least $30,000,000 annually for public buildings, the construction of which shall be conducted under a board of architecture and arts, composed of experts in architecture, construction, and art; such work to be taken out of the spoils system and put upon the basis of adaptability to locality and use, based upon public necessity.

We also favor the expenditure of at least $30,000,000 annually in the construction of a proportionate Navy, consisting of fighting and auxiliary ships, the latter to be used in time of war in aid of the fighting ships and in time of peace, so far as practicable, as training schools for the Naval Reserve and in opening up new routes of foreign commerce under lease to shipping companies.

We also favor the expenditure of at least $10,000,000 annually in the construction of fortifications and the expenditure of at least $10,000,000 annually in securing the national control and ownership of deforested areas within the watersheds of navigable rivers.

We insist that all the foregoing works shall be conducted continuously through the creation of funds in the Treasury for that purpose and without the breaks hitherto experienced through political change and exigency.

THE MILITARY DEFENSE.

Eighth. We favor high efficiency in our military expenditure by regarding the military defense as a unit and by uniting the Navy and the Army in cooperation through a board of military defense, consisting of distinguished Army and naval officers, which board shall be advisory to the President and to Congress. We also favor the cooperation of our Army with the militia of the various States in securing discipline and drill that will result in a citizen soldiery able at any time to respond to the demands of war.

Realizing the importance of having officers trained in drill, sanitation, and care of troops to take charge of the citizen soldiery in case of war, we favor an increase in the military school at West Point, with a view to meeting such requirements.

RENEWAL OF PLEDGES.

Ninth. We renew the declarations made in our last platform relating to the neutralization of the Philippines, the development of waterways, the conservation of natural resources, the imposition of an income tax, the enforcement of the civil-service law, a generous pension policy, the organization of a health bureau, and the extension of agricultural, mechanical, and industrial education. We also favor cooperation with the States in the establishment of vocational schools which will serve as models for vocational training.

MERIT IN WORKS AND PROJECTS.

Tenth. We favor the abolition of the spoils system in projects and works as well as offices. We condemn the practices under which the apportionment of river and harbor improvements and public buildings are made dependent upon logrolling rather than on merit. We favor the construction of all public works under the direction of a board of experts, to be organized by law, which will bring into coordination with it the various bureaus and services affected. And we favor the enlargement of the Engineer Corps of the Army with a view to increasing their employment in such public projects and works. We favor the enlargement of the functions of the National Art Commission, so that it may embrace all matters of art and architecture in national works and include cooperation with similar commissions organized by States and municipalities.

BUDGET COMMITTEE.

Eleventh. We favor the organization of a budget committee in each House of Congress, such committees to act in cooperation with the executive department in matters relating to efficiency and economy and to recommend the apportionment of revenue between the different departments and offices of the Governemnt.

INCOME, OCCUPATION, AND INHERITANCE TAXES.

Twelfth. In addition to the income tax, we favor an extension of the occupation tax imposed on corporations to all individuals, firms, and persons, and also a graduated inheritance tax under which a deduction not exceeding one-half may be made in States now deriving a portion of their revenue from inheritance taxes, such taxes to make up any deficit in revenue caused by a reduction of customs duties and also to be applied to the constructive work herein demanded regarding river regulation, public buildings, and other public works.

LABOR AND INJUNCTIONS.

Thirteenth. We renew the declarations made in our last platform regarding labor and injunctions. We favor a workingmen's compensation act applied to common carriers engaged in interstate commerce. We favor the frank imposition of the expenditures under such an act of interstate commerce as a part of the transportation charge and as a compensation for the hazard of the occupation.

THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

Fourteenth. We declare that the Nation has always regarded itself, and should now regard itself, as the trustee of the public domain, holding the great natural resources in land, water, timber, and minerals included in such domain as trustee for the interest of settlers of the West, both those who are there now and those who are to come; and whilst it is the duty of the Nation to guard these natural resources against combination and monopoly, it is also its duty to see that they are not unduly withheld from development or from the taxing powers of the States within which they are situated.

We therefore favor the passage of laws that will break the existing deadlock and which will secure the full development of western resources, at the same time guarding against monopolistic control.

The rapidly approaching exhaustion of the public domain and the increasing difficulty which would-be settlers on the land find in securing homes have created a condition which makes it the duty of the Nation to take charge of the settlement of the people on such lands. We favor the establishment of a homestead service with appropriate officials and machinery for aiding settlers in finding homes on the land, instructing them how to make a living from it, and making the remainder of the national domain available to the people on conditions favorable to successful settlement and cultivation.

The following plank is also presented for consideration:

THE RACE QUESTION.

Fifteenth. History shows that wherever two races differing in color have coexisted upon the same soil the result has been either amalgamation or the subordination of one to the other. Both are undesirable—the one resulting in the impairment of race integrity, the other in conditions that are incompatible with the maintenance of true democracy.

Experience has demonstrated that the granting of the franchise to the blacks under the belief that it was necessary for their protection was a mistake, and that it has led, and can lead, to nothing but their injury.

We declare that our whole policy regarding the blacks since the war has been a mistaken one; that their sudden elevation from a condition of slavery to that of political sovereignty was a cruel injury both to them and to the white race; and that the blacks should have been regarded as an infant race, wards of the Nation, entitled to vocational training and to intelligent and humane assistance in emigration from this country to the land of their origin under the plan proposed by Lincoln in 1862, and so gradually conducted, without injury to the industrial development of the South, as to result in the colonization of the blacks on African soil under such conditions of territorial control as would secure their advancement and progress.

Our country is peculiarly subject to race complications by reason of the residence of 12,000,000 blacks within our borders, whose constantly increasing numbers threaten our race integrity and our institutions. Confronting us on the Pacific are nearly 700,000,000 people who look upon the United States as the promised land of opportunity. Experience on the Pacific coast has demonstrated the danger of race complications and of race war resulting from their unrestricted immigration to this country.

Entertaining nothing but the most humane and helpful purposes regarding the blacks in our midst and the most friendly disposition to races differing in color and confronting us on the Pacific, we declare our purpose to maintain this as a white man's country, and to that end we favor a constitutional amendment confining the privilege of voting to the white race, and legislation prohibiting the immigration to this country of all peoples other than those of the white race, except for such temporary purposes of education, travel, or commerce as comity between friendly nations may require.

THE BLACK QUESTION.

[Press dispatch.]

"Col. Roosevelt opened up a very interesting question," remarked Senator NEWLANDS, of Nevada, "in declaring that his new party should be a white man's party. It is true that he weakened the logic of his position by declaring that it should be white in the South and black and white in the North, but perfection in mental process is not to be expected of one who is going through a revolution of long-held opinions. He will come out all right in the end, and will reach the inevitable conclusion that the blacks as a race must everywhere in this country be deprived of sovereignty; and that is what black suffrage means. The same reason that justifies disfranchisement of the blacks in party justifies it in government. If we ought to have a white man's party, we should also have a white man's government.

"The colonel complained of black domination at Chicago. But what does he think of black domination at Washington, maintained by the black vote in five pivotal Northern States where they have the balance of power?

"What does he think of the black domination in the South—once actual, and, if the fifteenth amendment is enforced, always possible and even probable?

"There is but one real party in the South to-day—the Democratic Party—the white man's party. The colonel proposes to organize another white man's party there. What will happen when they get into hot rivalry with each other? Will they then both suppress the black vote at the polls as they will at the primaries, or will they bid for it? And if they do, will the candidates at the primaries long desist?

"Carrying out the analogy nationally, what will become of our dreams of a perfected Government which will abolish privilege, establish wise economics, and secure social and industrial justice when the political activities of 12,000,000 blacks are aroused by the bidding of rival parties and candidates and government—national, State, and municipal—is thus weakened at its very source?

"Does not the same reasoning which demands the negro's disfranchisement in parties demand his disfranchisement in government?

"A cruel suggestion, it may be said. How cruel? The blacks had a right to be made free men; but did they have the right to be made sovereigns? And was not their sudden transformation from slaves to sovereigns the greatest cruelty that could be inflicted upon them as well as upon the whites? Freedom was a right; suffrage was a privilege. The former was beneficial; the latter prejudicial. Whilst securing and strengthening the former, why not withdraw the latter, avoiding even the appearance of injustice by applying the withdrawal only to those hereafter born?

"And then how humanely and beneficially we could bring the Nation into cooperation with the States in plans for the real—not the sham—betterment of this unfortunate race—plans involving the training in industrial vocations and in self-control of an infant race, simple, kindly, affectionate, and dependent, recognizing always the historical fact that wherever two races differing in color have coexisted upon the same soil the result has been either the amalgamation of the two or the subordination of the one; and, frankly determined, to maintain subordination, because amalgamation, with the attendant evils of a mixed breeding, is unthinkable.

"But the colonel as to this question is on the right road, though he is as yet unwilling to go far enough. And we who regard the race question as the most important of the time, who realize the gravity of the yellow and the brown peril as well as that of the black peril, who want to do justice to all races, but in such a way as to preserve the integrity of our own race and our own institutions, and who believe that for the protection of our race and our institutions we should write 'white' in the suffrage clause of the Constitution as well as in our immigration laws will hope to have ultimately his full cooperation, for this is a question that will not down."

THE JAPANESE QUESTION—THE RACIAL COMPLICATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES.

[Letter from Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS to Hon Denver S. Dickerson, governor of Nevada.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 3, 1909.

Hon. DENVER S. DICKERSON,
Carson City, Nev.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: With a view to moderating any action tending to create friction between Japan and this country, I take the liberty of suggesting to the legislature, through you, a plan of action which, whilst indicating a proper solicitude for relations of friendship and amity with Japan, will mark clearly our purpose to maintain this country as the home of the white race, free from such racial competition and antagonism on our own soil as will surely breed domestic violence and international hatred.

Entertaining no prejudice against any foreign race and particularly admiring the vigor, courage, and patriotism of the people of Japan, and disposed to advance rather than to thwart her career of national greatness, we of the West are yet profoundly impressed with the view that the United States, possessing a vast territory as yet undeveloped and capable of supporting many times our present population, with natural resources unrivaled anywhere, with climates adapted to every people, will, with the cheapening of transportation, draw to itself the surplus population of all peoples.

Nature has classified the peoples of the world mainly under three colors—the white, the black, and the brown. Confronting us on the east lies Europe, with a total population of about three hundred million white people. We are finding it difficult to assimilate even the immigrants of the white race from that continent and have been obliged to carefully restrict such immigration. We have drifted into a condition regarding the black race which constitutes the great problem and peril of the future. Confronting our Pacific coast lies Asia, with nearly a billion people of the brown race, who, if there were no restrictions, would quickly settle upon and take possession of our entire coast and intermountain region. History teaches that it is impossible to make a homogeneous people by the juxtaposition of races differing in color upon the same soil.

Race tolerance under such conditions means race amalgamation, and this is undesirable. Race intolerance means, ultimately, race war and mutual destruction or the reduction of one of the races to servitude. The admission of a race of a different color in a condition of industrial servitude is foreign to our institutions, which demand equal rights to all within our jurisdiction. The competition of such a race would involve industrial disturbance and hostility, requiring the use of a large armed force to maintain peace and order, with the probability that the nation representing the race thus protected would never be satisfied that the means employed were adequate. The presence of the Chinese, who are patient and submissive, would not create as many complications as the presence of the Japanese, whose strong and virile qualities would constitute an additional factor of difficulty. Our friendship, therefore, with Japan, for whose territorial and race integrity the American people have stood in active sympathy in all her struggles, demands that this friendship should not be put to the test by bringing two such powerful races of such differing views and standards into industrial competition upon the same soil.

This can be prevented either by international treaty or by national laws regulating, restricting, or preventing immigration. International negotiation and treaty is, in my judgment, an unsatisfactory method. It requires a nation with which we have treaty relations to prevent its own people from going where they will—a restriction which we would never in any treaty apply to our own people. We would therefore be asking other nations to put a restriction upon the movements of their people which we would refuse to prescribe regarding our own. There is but one consistent position to assume, and that is to relegate the whole question to domestic legislation in each country, permitting each to make such laws regarding the regulation, restriction, or prevention of immigration as it sees fit. The time has come, in my judgment, when the United States, as a matter of self-protection and self-preservation, must declare by statutory enactment that it will not tolerate further race complications. Our country should by law, to take effect after the expiration of existing treaties, prevent the immigration into this country of all peoples other than those of the white race, except under restricted conditions relating to international commerce, travel, and education; and it should start immediately upon the serious consideration of a national policy regarding the people of the black race now within our boundaries which, with a proper regard for humanity, will minimize the danger to our institutions and our civilization.

Japan can not justly take offense at such action. She would be the first to take such action against the white race, were it necessary to maintain the integrity of her race and her institutions. She is at liberty to pursue the same course. Such action constitutes no charge of inferiority against the race excluded; it may be a confession of inferiority in ability to cope economically with the excluded race. It involves no insult, or the possibility of war, for Japan could not possibly sustain a war, even were her finances in better condition than they now are, without the sympathy of the world as to the justness of her cause.

I give this utterance reluctantly, for I am not disposed to participate in the prevailing sensationalism; but the issue has been made; the public attention is called to the question; and failure upon the part of our Western communities to meet it candidly and courageously might be regarded in the Eastern States, whose people are unfamiliar with the economic and social dangers attendant upon Asiatic immigration, to believe that we have abandoned our convictions and acquiesce in the view that a great question of national and domestic policy shall be turned over to the bargaining of diplomats. I am opposed to sporadic legislation here and there by the various States, intended to meet only certain phases of what constitutes a national peril—phases which will necessarily be covered by broad national legislation. I am opposed to terms of opprobrium and of insult. Japan deserves from us only respect and admiration; we deserve from her a proper regard for the integrity of our race and institutions. A temperate declaration made at this time by the legislatures of the Western States upon the lines here indicated will aid much to advance the enlightened, calm, and forceful presentation of this question in such a manner as shall convince the judgment of the world, including that of Japan herself. Thus, upon the expiration of the present treaty with Japan and without attendant attacks upon Japanese sensibilities, public opinion will be so shaped as to force a calm and rational solution of the question by purely domestic and national legislation.

Very sincerely, yours,

FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 6, to insert:

To pay Edward T. Clark for extra services rendered the Committee on Immigration during the fiscal year 1912, $360.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 9, to insert:

To pay the assistant clerk to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, $360.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 11, to insert:

To pay Clinton R. Thompson for extra clerical services in connection with the work of the Committee on the District of Columbia, $360.

Mr. WARREN. In line 14, I move to strike out "$360" and insert "$500."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 14, to insert:

To pay the assistant clerk to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine for extra clerical services, $360.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 17, to insert:

For payment for services rendered to the special committee of the Senate making investigation of the election of William Lorimer as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois, as follows: To E. L. Cornelius, $500; Miss Kathleen F. Lawler, $250; F. N. Webber, $250; Michael Eidsness, $150; and Frank G. Jones, $50; in all, $1,200.

Mr. WARREN. On page 62, line 23, I move to strike out "Michael" and insert "Magnus L." before the name "Eidsness."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. In line 21 I move to strike out "five hundred" before dollars and insert "one thousand." I want to make a statement in just a word as to the reason why I move the amendment to the amendment. On page 61 we adopted an amendment allowing certain amounts for services in connection with the Stephenson investigation. I make no question as to the justice of those amounts. While the Stephenson investigation occupied weeks, the Lorimer investigation occupied months. No one could have rendered more efficient service nor more extra service than Mr. Cornelius rendered in connection with the Lorimer investigation. He worked day and night, and away into the hours of the night. In view of what we have allowed in the Stephenson case, I think that in justice we should increase this amount to $1,000, and it would still lack what he really deserves to receive. I therefore move to insert "$1,000" instead of "$500."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 62, line 21, strike out "$500" and insert "$1,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 63, to insert:

To pay A. W. Prescott for extra clerical services, $360.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 1, to insert:

To pay Robert H. Turner for extra clerical services, $360.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 2, to insert:

For the Capitol: For repairs, improvements, and equipment for Senate kitchens and restaurants, Capitol Building and Senate Office Building, including personal and other services, to be expended by the superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, under the supervision of the Committee on Rules, United States Senate, to continue available during the fiscal year 1913, $17,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 9, to insert:

Senate Office Building: For maintenance, miscellaneous items, and supplies, and for all necessary personal and other services for the care and operation of the Senate Office Building, under the direction and supervision of the Senate Committee on Rules, to continue available during the fiscal year 1913, $2,460.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRADLEY. I desire to offer three amendments, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated in their order.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, after line 15, insert:

For additional amount to pay the superintendent of the Senate press gallery a salary of $2,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment submitted by the Senator from Kentucky will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just agreed to, insert:

For additional amount to pay the assistant superintendent of the Senate press gallery a salary of $1,600 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The third amendment submitted by the Senator from Kentucky will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just agreed to, insert:

For additional amount to pay messenger to correspondents a salary of $1,200 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "House of Representatives," on page 63, line 20, after the words "Philippine Islands," to strike out "$3,708.90" and insert "$14,498.28," so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of Members of the House of Representatives, Delegates from Territories, the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, and the Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands, $14,498.28.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 12, to insert:

To pay the legal heirs of George W. Kipp, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 16, to insert:

For allowance to the following contestants and contestees for expenses incurred by them in contested-election cases, as audited and recommended by the Committees on Elections:
Gilbert N. Haugen, $2,000;
Daniel D. Murphy $2,000;
Rankin Wiley, $2,000;
James Antony Hughes, $2,000;
Fred J. Crowley, $2,000;
William W. Wilson, $2,000; in all, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, after line 19, to insert:

To pay Fannie M. Page, widow of Fernando Page, late a messenger of the House of Representatives on the soldiers' roll, the sum of $90, accrued salary due said Fernando Page at the time of his demise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Judgments, United States courts," on page 66, line 18, after the words "seventy-four," to insert "and Senate Document No. 926," so as to make the clause read:

For payment of the final judgments and decrees, including costs of suit, which have been rendered under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," certified to Congress at its present session by the Attorney General in House Document No. 774 and Senate Document No. 926, and which have not been appealed, namely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 21, after the words "Treasury Department," to strike out "$393.12" and insert "$972.35," so as to make the clause read:

Under Treasury Department, $972.35.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 22, after the words "War Department," to strike out "$34,081.88" and insert "$43,250.69," so as to make the clause read:

Under War Department, $43,250.69.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 24, after the words "in all," to strike out the sum "$38,038.15" and insert "$47,786.19," so as to make the clause read:

Under Department of Justice, $420; in all, $47,786.19.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Judgments, Court of Claims," on page 67, line 9, after the words "seventy-five," to insert "and Senate Document No. 924," so as to make the clause read:

For the payment of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, reported to Congress at its present session in House Document No. 775 and Senate Document No. 924, namely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 12, after the words "Treasury Department," to strike out "$6.80" and insert "$24,960.28," so as to make the clause read:

Under Treasury Department, $24,960.28.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 13, after the words "War Department," to strike out "$189,293.43" and insert "$190,253.62," so as to make the clause read:

Under War Department, $190,253.62.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 14, after the words "Navy Department," to strike out "$5,175.85" and insert "$7,366.14," so as to make the clause read:

Under Navy Department, $7,366.14.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 15, after the words "Interior Department," to strike out "$2,589.06" and insert "$6,104.51," so as to make the clause read:

Under Interior Department, $6,104.51.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 18, after the words "in all," to strike out "$200,665.27" and insert "$232,284.68," so as to make the clause read:

In all, $232,284.68.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 20, to insert:

For the net amount of a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians dated February 13, 1911, exclusive of the amount awarded for attorney's fee, pursuant to the provisions of the jurisdictional act approved March 3, 1909, the same to bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from and after the date of said judgment, the amount thereof and the interest accruing thereon to be available for cash payments to the Indians, or for expenditures for their benefit, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, $3,305,257.19.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "judgments in Indian depredation claims," on page 68, after line 7, to strike out:

For payment of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases, certified to Congress in House Document No. 776, at its present session, $39,971; said judgments to be paid after the deductions required to be made under the provisions of section 6 of the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," shall have been ascertained and duly certified by the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury, which certification shall be made as soon as practicable after the passage of this act; and the amounts paid shall be reimbursed to the United States: Provided, That no one of said judgments provided in this paragraph shall be paid until the Attorney General shall have certified to the Secretary of the Treasury that there exists no grounds sufficient, in his opinion, to support a motion for a new trial or an appeal of said cause.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 69, to insert:

For payment of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases, certified to Congress in House Document No. 776 and Senate Document No. 925, at its present session, except the judgment in favor of Martha J. Riddle, administratrix of James Anderson, reported to Congress at its present session in House Document No. 776, which has been vacated by the Court of Claims, $49,459; said judgments to be paid after the deductions required to be made under the provisions of section 6 of the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," shall have been ascertained and duly certified by the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury, which certification shall be made as soon as practicable after the passage of this act; and the amounts paid shall be reimbursed to the United States: Provided, That no one of said judgments provided in this paragraph shall be paid until the Attorney General shall have certified to the Secretary of the Treasury that there exists no grounds sufficient, in his opinion, to support a motion for a new trial or an appeal of said cause.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, after line 10, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. That for the payment of the following claims, certified to be due by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, and under appropriations heretofore treated as permanent, being for the service of the fiscal year 1910 and prior years, unless otherwise stated, and which have been certified to Congress under section 2 of the act of July 7, 1884, as fully set forth in Senate Document No. 923, reported to Congress at its present session, there is appropriated as follows, CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

For collecting revenue from customs, $530.
For payment of judgments against internal-revenue officers, $2,066.33.
For expenses of Revenue-Cutter Service, $602.06.
For Life-Saving Service, $418.47.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

For pay, etc., of the Army, $56,270.66.
For commutation of quarters to paymaster's clerk, act of March 3, 1911, $194.40.
For encampment and maneuvers, Organized Militia, $45.22.
For subsistence of the Army, $8.
For regular supplies, Quartermaster's Department, $7,054.66.
For transportation of the Army and its supplies, $1,083.83.
For water and sewers at military posts, $26.40.
For engineer depots, $28.95.
For headstones for graves of soldiers, $2.03.
For pay of volunteers, Cayuse Indian War of 1847 and 1848, in Oregon, $582.85.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

For pay of the Navy, $13,602.95.
For pay, miscellaneous, $152.67.
For pay, Marine Corps, $576.21.
For contingent, Marine Corps, $6.08.
For pay, Naval Academy, $952.08.
For transportation, Bureau of Navigation, $511.83.
For recruiting, Bureau of Navigation, $26.70.
For ordnance and ordnance stores, Bureau of Ordnance, $665.92.
For equipment of vessels, Bureau of Equipment, $159.28.
For maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks, $3,281.15.
For Medical Department, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, $17.50.
For provisions, Navy, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, $10.56.
For freight, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, $332.84.
For naval supply fund, $306.52.
For construction and repair, Bureau of Construction and Repair, $1,463.58.
For steam machinery, Bureau of Steam Engineering, $48.10.
For navy yard, Charleston, S. C., $1,075.60.
For enlistment bounties to seamen, $366.67.
For indemnity for lost property, naval service, act March 2, 1895, $120.30.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

For contingent expenses, Department of the Interior, 1911, $4.81.
For contingent expenses, Department of the Interior, $12.75.
For library, General Land Office, 1912, $120.77.
For return of funds of patients, Government Hospital for the Insane, $19.86.
For contingent expenses of land offices, $1.52.
For surveying the public lands, $23,141.90.
For restoration of lands in forest reserves, $27.31.
For Geological Survey, $14.92.
For irrigation, Indian reservations, $35.
For Indian schools, support, $168.
For telegraphing, transportation, etc., Indian supplies, 1911, $1,992.91.
For telegraphing, transportation, etc., Indian supplies, 1910, $146.55.
For telegraphing, transportation, etc., Indian supplies, $12.52.
For support of Sioux of different tribes, employees, etc., South Dakota, $26.23.
For support of Sioux of different tribes, subsistence and civilization, South Dakota, $192.46.
For support of Indians of Colville and Puyallup Agencies, Wash., 1911, $2.45.
For support of Yakima and other Indians, Washington, 1912, $49.27.
For indemnity to certain Chickasaw Indians for losses, treaty June 22, 1855, $13,205.
For Army pensions, $36.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE STATE AND OTHER DEPARTMENTS.

For transportation of diplomatic and consular officers, 1911, $190.05.
For contingent expenses, United States consulates, $6.
For general expenses, Forest Service, $15.67.
For general expenses, Weather Bureau, $0.85.
For contingent expenses, Department of Commerce and Labor, $1.12.
For special examiners, etc., Division of Naturalization, $4.21.
For expenses of regulating immigration, $62.50.
For miscellaneous expenses, Bureau of Fisheries, $102.65.
For supplies of lighthouses, $1,614.
For prosecution of Indians in Arizona, act of March 4, 1907, $1,948.90.
For support of prisoners, United States courts, $107.66.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

For inland mail transportation—star, $570.24.
For mail transportation—boat, $1,323.75.
For indemnity for losses by registered mails, $72.40.
For shipment of supplies, $14.30.
For freight on mail bags, postal cards, etc., $93.31.
For compensation to postmasters, $209.32.
For Rural Free Delivery Service, $34.20.
For Rural Free Delivery Service—tolls, $3.80.
For rent, light, and fuel, $187.50.
For Railway Mail Service, $13.33.
For claims for additional salary of letter carriers under section 2 of act of January 3, 1887, $455.49.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, after line 22, to strike out:

SEC. 3. The Secretary of War is authorized in his discretion to grant and lease in the manner hereinafter provided, for a period of 25 years, such surplus water of the United States within the limits of or pertaining to the military reservation of Schofield Barracks (Waianae Uka), island of Oahu, Territory of Hawaii, as may not be needed for the supply of the military post and troops on said reservation; and he is further authorized and directed to include in such grant or lease authority to the grantee or lessee thereunder to enter upon such reservation and make surveys thereon for and construct and maintain dams, reservoirs, canals, ditches, flumes, tunnels, and pipe lines for the purpose of diverting and conducting from the reservation the water covered by such grant or lease, at such places on said land as said grantee or lessee may select, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and to include also the right to said grantee or lessee to take from the lands of the United States adjacent thereto, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, earth and stone necessary for such construction and maintenance: Provided, That said grant or lease shall be made to or entered into with the highest responsible bidder for such surplus water, under sealed proposal, after public advertisement of the terms and conditions thereof for a period of not less than 30 days in a newspaper or newspapers of general circulation published at Honolulu, in the Territory of Hawaii, such terms and conditions to be fixed by the Secretary of War when not inconsistent with the provisions of this section: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, reject all bids and report his action to Congress: Provided further, That the right to amend, alter, or repeal this section is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, after line 17, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 6. Refund of sums paid for documentary stamps: The time within which claims may be presented for refunding the sums paid for documentary stamps used on foreign bills of exchange drawn between July 1, 1898, and June 30, 1901, against the value of products or merchandise actually exported to foreign countries, specified in the act entitled "An act to provide for refunding stamp taxes paid under the act of June 30, 1898, upon foreign bills of exchange drawn between July 1, 1898, and June 30, 1901, against the value of products or merchandise actually exported to foreign countries and authorizing rebate of duties on anthracite coal imported into the United States from October 6, 1902, to January 15, 1903, and for other purposes," approved February 1, 1909, be, and is hereby, extended to December 31, 1912.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 93, after line 11, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 7. No part of any money contained herein or hereafter appropriated in lump sum shall be available for the payment of personal services at a rate of compensation in excess of that paid for the same or similar services during the fiscal year 1912; nor shall any person employed at a specific salary be hereafter transferred and hereafter paid from a lump-sum appropriation a rate of compensation greater than such specific salary, and the heads of departments shall cause this provision to be enforced.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This completes the amendments of the committee. The bill is still open to amendment as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CATRON. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After line 18, on page 8, insert:

For additional vault facilities in the Federal building at Santa Fe, N. Mex., in which to guard and care for the records and files belonging to the Federal court, $1,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CATRON. I send to the desk a letter which I ask may be printed in the RECORD for the use of the conference committee.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES COURT CHAMBERS,
DISTRICT OF NEW MEXICO,
Santa Fe, N. Mex., August 12, 1912.

Hon. T. B. CATRON,
The Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The organization of the Federal court for the new State has resulted in bringing to Santa Fe the records from all of the former seven districts dealing with United States business. The result is a great mass of papers, dockets, and records extending over 50 years, the loss of which, as you can well see, would be a public calamity. We find the vault facilities for the accommodation of these records totally inadequate, and many of them are necessarily being kept where in case of fire their loss would be almost inevitable. Accordingly I requested the Department of Justice some time since to take up with the Treasury Department the matter of enlarging the vault facilities. I am just in receipt of a letter from the Attorney General in which he incloses one from the Secretary of the Treasury indicating that while "the department believes that additional vault facilities are necessary" yet on account of a lack of appropriation for the department there is no immediate prospect of the improvement being made, and indeed when it will be made is a matter of great indefiniteness.

I write to ask if you can not have attached to one of the appropriation bills a provision of $1,100 for this most necessary improvement. Of course, I realize that the time elapsing to the adjournment of Congress is very short and that there is great difficulty to get anything of this kind just now. However, we would all feel very badly if between now and the next session of Congress these records should be destroyed by fire because of a lack of this concededly necessary protection.

With kind regards,
Sincerely, yours,

WILLIAM H. POPE.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 5, 1912.

The honorable the ATTORNEY GENERAL.

SIR: By direction of the Secretary I have the honor to refer further to your communication of June 18 last in connection with enlargement of vaults in the Federal building at Santa Fe, N. Mex. A representative of the office was detailed to investigate and to submit estimate for the work found necessary, and in his report of the 26th ultimo he recommends that the work be undertaken, estimating the cost of same at approximately $1,100.

This department believes that the additional vault facilities are necessary, but there are no funds available with which to take up the work, and it is probable that it will be several months hence before it will be in a position to authorize the expense. The work is chargeable to the appropriation for "Vaults, safes, and locks for public buildings," and Congress has allowed the department one-eighth of last year's appropriation up to the middle of the present month, which allowance has already been practically expended in the purchase of safes for the protection of Government funds and for exigency authorizations.

No further provision has been made as yet for the balance of the present fiscal year, and when the regular annual appropriation is placed at the disposal of the department the strictest economy must be used in limiting authorizations to safes and to the purchase of lock boxes for post offices, which are chargeable to the appropriation named and for which requisitions have been on hand since last spring awaiting funds.

As soon, however, as the department is in a position to do so steps will be taken looking to the improvement of the vault facilities at the Santa Fe building.

Respectfully,

SHERMAN ALLEN,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. JONES. I offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the end of the bill add as a new section the following:

That every person who located or entered, or attempted in good faith to locate or enter, any coal land in Alaska under the coal-land laws of the United States, prior to November 12, 1906, and whose location or entry thereof has been suspended, contested, denied, or canceled by the United States, is hereby authorized, at any time within one year from the date of the approval of this act, to bring a suit in equity against the United States in any court of competent jurisdiction in the district where the land is situate to quiet his title thereto; and if, upon the trial of such cause, it shall be found by the court upon the evidence that the said locator or entryman had complied with the coal-land laws of the United States up to the time of the suspension, contest, denial, or cancellation of his location or entry, such location or entry shall be reinstated by order of the court, and the locator or entryman may thereupon complete said entry by making the proof required to the court; and the court, upon satisfactory proof by the locator or entryman that he has complied with all the requirements of the coal-land laws of the United States, and that he has paid to the United States, or if he shall pay into court for the United States, the purchase price fixed by said laws of the United States for said land, and shall prove to the satisfaction of the court that he has complied with all the requirements of the coal-land laws of the United States in respect to his said location or entry, then in every such case the said court shall enter a decree in conformity with the law and the evidence quieting the title to the said lands in the said locator or entryman: Provided further, That either the locator or entryman so bringing said suit or the United States may appeal said cause in the manner provided by law for taking appeals in said court; that if the final decree of said court shall be in favor of said locator or entryman, a patent shall be issued by the Secretary of the Interior in the usual form conveying said land to said locator or entryman. That if the final decree of said court in said cause shall be in favor of the United States, the said locator or entryman shall be held to have no right to or equity in said land, and his location or entry shall be canceled and held for naught.

Mr. WARREN. It would prejudice the matter rather than help it to attach it to this bill. I shall be compelled to make the point of order that it is general legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. McCUMBER. I offer an amendment to be inserted after line 15, on page 63.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, after line 15, insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of July, 1912, including the Capitol police appointed by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, and the official reporters of the Senate, in lieu of all transportation and other expenses in coming to and returning from Washington, for the first and second sessions of the Sixty-second Congress, a sum equal to one-twelfth of the annual compensation then paid them by law, the same to be immediately available.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I understand the reading of the amendment, it refers only to employees of the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is all. If this amendment is adopted it will afford the basis for the House if they desire to give their corresponding employees the same amounts, and they can do so under the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I hardly think that it should be left to the other House to include the House employees, because if we adopt the amendment, the House not having passed any provision of this kind, I scarcely think the conferees would have the power to provide for the employees of the House. I believe that if the employees of the Senate are to be provided for, the employees of the House should be provided for as well.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator takes that view of it, I have not objection to so modifying the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the amendment if that modification is made.

Mr. OVERMAN. Would that, then, include all the employees of the Senate and of the House?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota modifies his amendment in the manner which will be stated.

The Secretary read the amendment as modified, as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House borne on the annual and session rolls on the 30th day of June, 1912, including the employees on the maintenance rolls of the Senate and House Office Buildings, the Capitol police, the official reporters of the Senate and House, and W. A. Smith, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk, in lieu of all transportation and other expenses in coming to and returning from Washington, for the first and second sessions of the Sixty-second Congress, a sum equal to one-twelfth of the annual compensation then paid them by law, the same to be immediately available.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, in the West we sometimes hear the command, "Hold up your hands!" I am holding up my hands now. Of course, I know what would be the effect if I should make any objection to the amendment. It would be put before the Senate and carried. I understand, however, from another place that this amendment, or something like it, has been unfavorably considered in one of those night gatherings in which are settled political policies. If that be true, I can only say that I hope my colleagues will not expect any more of the conferees on the part of the Senate than human effort can bring forth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment as modified will be agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOURNE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21279) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report, which appears on page 11553 of yesterday's RECORD.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads the state of affairs with reference to amendment numbered 60, which involved the matter of paying a bridge company at St. Louis for the use of the bridge in transferring mail across the bridge for terminal facilities there?

Mr. ROOT. That was agreed to with an amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My understanding was that the House and the Senate were agreed substantially in striking out altogether any payment for this service. I do not understand how the conferees restored it to the bill apparently allowing a lesser amount—$35,000.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, the facts in reference to that are these: The House struck out the provision allowing the Postmaster General to pay this terminal company up to $50,000 under the law, as I remember, of 1899, but it was imperfect in its provisions. It simply prohibited out of the appropriation any payment being made that did not agree with the law. The Senate committee recommended the repeal of the law, perfecting the action of the House. In conference the fact was presented that the cost to the St. Louis company, under the testimony and representations that were made, was about $20,000. The cost in the way of transportation, under the regular laws applying to railway mail pay, would be about $12,000. After considerable discussion, the conferees finally put in the amendment stated, allowing the Postmaster General to pay up to $35,000, provided it was found upon investigation that the cost to the terminal company would be that amount. It is a diminution of the discretionary power on the part of the Postmaster General by some $15,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I understand that originally when payment was made to this company for these so-called terminal services, it was a company really separate from the railroad company, but now it is owned by the railroad companies, the same as any other depot company which furnishes and manages the terminal facilities of railroads. The payment that is provided for in this bill to this particular company is for a service which is identical with the service that is rendered by other railroad companies all over the country, for which the Government does not make any payment.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington had taken the time to read the hearings that were printed, he would have found that he was misinformed. This is rather a unique situation. It is sui generis, so far as any other terminal companies that the committee were cognizant of in the United States. I quote from memory, but my recollection is that there are some 15 railroads interested in the property of this terminal company. My recollection also is that 7 companies—I may be incorrect in the number—who are interested in the terminal company haul no mail over the 4 miles of railroad owned by this terminal company. Consequently, if this were operated at a loss, they would receive nothing whatever in the way of compensatory pay, under the regular railway mail pay.

The presentation made to the committee and the action of the department in connection with the payment of this $50,000, which, as I recollect, the law of 1899 permitted the Postmaster General to pay, or gave him discretionary power to pay, led the committee to believe that it was just and right to give this discretionary power up to $35,000, being a reduction of $15,000 from the amount which it has been in the power of the Postmaster General to pay from the time of the enactment of the law of 1899.

The House provision was inserted on the floor of the House without, as I am informed, any discussion or consideration. I am sure the Senator from Washington would not want an injustice done to any corporation or to any citizen; and it was the belief of the conferees that a probable injustice might be done to individuals if the action of the Senate was not changed in conference.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the railroad companies which carry the mail over this bridge into the terminal grounds are paid for carrying the mail. This is extra pay, additional pay, to the same companies. I know the chairman of the committee has devoted a great deal of attention to the question of reducing the amount, if possible, or, at least, arriving at some more equitable basis of ascertaining the amount to be paid to the railroads for carrying the mails; and yet, when the amount that this bill carries for railway mail pay is considered, altogether aside from the extra payments, such as the one to which I have referred, we find that it is still $47,646,000. The amount of money that that annual payment represents at 4 per cent interest is $1,191,000,000 or more, a sufficient amount of money to construct, if you estimate the cost of railroad construction at $25,000 a mile, over 47,000 miles of railroad complete. This is equivalent to a great number of lines of railroad from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and the excessiveness of this amount of money, or the apparent excessiveness of it at least, appears by comparison of the rates upon which the payment is based with the rates which are paid to railroads in Canada, where the amount of business is much less, where the population is sparse, and where, if there is any difference at all, the rates ought to be higher; and yet the amounts paid are much less.

Mr. President, the House struck out this payment for this year; the Senate struck it out in a different form; so that the House and the Senate agreed upon that proposition, and, while I realize——

Mr. BOURNE. I am sure, if the Senator will permit me, that he does not wish to be put in the position of making a misstatement. The House did not strike out the provision; it simply prohibited any part of this appropriation being operative under the law of 1899.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The language I used probably was not appropriate, but the House——

Mr. BOURNE. The Senate perfected the provision.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But the House refused to make an appropriation for this purpose this year. I understand that is correct, is it not?

Mr. BOURNE. Yes; that is, it prohibited the use of the general appropriation——

Mr. POINDEXTER. For this purpose.

Mr. BOURNE. For this purpose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And the Senate did likewise, although the Senate provision went further——

Mr. BOURNE. And perfected the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And perfected the amendment. Therefore, there was an agreement between the House and the Senate, at least so far as the appropriations for this year carried by this bill are concerned.

I make the point of order, Mr. President, that the change made by the report of the conference committee in this respect is beyond the power of the conferees and amounts to the repeal of a substantive matter which was agreed upon between the House and the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No point of order can lie in the Senate against a conference report. The only question to be considered is, Will the Senate agree to the conference report?

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, the report as a whole has to be agreed to or disagreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Absolutely so, under the rule.

Mr. BOURNE. Before the Senator from Washington takes his seat, Mr. President, if he will permit me, I should like to say, in regard to the adjustment of railway mail pay, that a provision has been placed in the bill as reported by the conferees for the appointment of a joint committee to take up and study the question of the adjustment of the railway mail pay and make a report to Congress at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I realize in the closing hours of the session the futility of making an issue upon this proposition, where the entire bill is involved with it; but I desired to call this matter to the attention of the Senate and have it put in the RECORD, saying at the same time that I know of the efforts the chairman of the committee has made along the lines he has suggested to bring about a readjustment of this general matter.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I think I ought to say, in confirmation of what the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] has said, that I thoroughly agree with him as to the undesirability of this appropriation and this provision. If it were standing alone and could be voted on by itself I should oppose it most vehemently, because I do not think that it can be justified. I know that the chairman of the committee has done everything that he could to sustain the position the Senate took when the bill was before the Senate, and I know that he has done everything that any other Senator could possibly have done. I do not feel justified in opposing the conference report because of this provision, for I know that we should get nowhere if it were defeated.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, did the Secretary read the amendment relating to the parcel post? I think not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary may have overlooked that. Does the Senator desire to have it read?

Mr. HEYBURN. The Secretary must have overlooked that, I think. Mr. President, I do not intend to do more than register my protest against that provision. I was detained from the Chamber by illness when the matter was under consideration.

I am opposed to the parcel post, and in a few words I can state the grounds of my opposition. I believe that it will tend to the centralization of business in cities and towns that should be conducted in country communities. I believe it will strike down the community life in small towns. I mean by country towns places of from a few inhabitants to those of two or three thousand inhabitants. In my judgment, the most valuable life in this country is in the country. I believe that the civilization of this country depends upon maintaining the standard of country life and of country village and town life.

The inducement to reside in small towns consists in a large part in the convenience of that class of community life where those people engaged in business—commercial business, mercantile business—furnish the supplies needed in everyday life to the people of the country districts, where the country producer may find a ready market for the sale or exchange of his products, where the people may come together and know each other, keep up and maintain the acquaintances incident to the life of small communities. Under the proposed system what are known as catalogue houses will in a large measure take the place of the country store, the village store, the larger commercial institution in places of a few thousand population. When those people can no longer conveniently go to the country store for the necessities of everyday life, the institutions—that is, the business institutions—will close their doors; they will cease to exist. Why not? Why would they continue in business if this parcel-post system is to furnish the community with the necessities of everyday life? Either one or the other must go out of business.

Either the parcel post must be a failure or the country store must go out of business. One is intended to take the place of the other, and one will take the place of the other. What inducement would there be for people to live and maintain their homes in the country, or in a country town or village, if no stores were maintained there? When those stores have disappeared whatever inducements may have existed at other times to purchase through the catalogue houses will also disappear. Their prices will be advanced because they will have a monopoly of the market. The catalogue houses furnish no market for the produce of the farm such as is now and has been for centuries found at the country store or in the small town. The character of the articles that come within the provisions of this bill covers practically the complete list of everyday necessities. When the country store disappears, where will the country residents get the sugar and the salt and the pepper and the flour? Get it from the catalogue houses! Suppose they find themselves unexpectedly without the necessary supply to last them over Sunday or over the period necessary to secure it from the catalogue house, where will they get it? Where will they find that market for the eggs and vegetables and the small products which are now purchased freely by the country stores?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is not the very difficulty to which you refer guarded against in this bill? A lower rate is furnished for the short distance carried by the rural carrier, a very low rate, and then from the neighboring larger towns, 50 miles off probably, a higher rate because of the cost of transportation, and a still higher rate for 150 miles, and very much higher when reaching the big department stores in the great cities to which the Senator refers.

I would like to say to the Senator, if he will permit me——

Mr. HEYBURN. Under the provisions of this bill, under the circumstances stated by the Senator from Georgia, it would cost 16 cents a pound, 1 cent an ounce, for transportation; that is to say, instead of a pound of sugar costing what it does now it would cost that plus the postage.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator to say that under the provisions of this bill the cost would be a cent an ounce?

Mr. HEYBURN. I will read the provision in order that it may appear in the RECORD.

Mr. BOURNE. It is the first 4 ounces.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BOURNE. After that the rate changes.

Mr. HEYBURN (reading)—

That the rate of postage on fourth-class matter weighing not more than 4 ounces shall be 1 cent for each ounce or fraction of an ounce.

Mr. BOURNE. That is the present rate.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield.

Mr. ROOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Idaho that many of my constituents have written to me under the same impression which he has expressed—that the parcel post would tend to enable the great department stores, the mail-order houses, to drive out the smaller dealers in the small places, and I gave a great deal of consideration to the different schemes of parcel post which had been proposed. It seemed to me that this plan which we know as the "zone system," worked out by the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and to which the Senator from Oregon has devoted a great amount of very intelligent and discriminating labor, met that difficulty. I think it does pretty substantially and practically meet it.

So I became quite reconciled to it because, it seemed to me, it would meet the strong desire of the farmers among my constituents to have the rural mail carrier, instead of driving an empty buggy by their place, bring to their homes, while he was on his way, their little packages, instead of requiring them to send to the express office for them, and because it would at the same time meet the desire of the small dealer in the country place to be protected against the loss of his business.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word or two more, if the Senator from Idaho will allow me.

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I gave upon the committee a great deal of attention to this matter, and my opinion is that it entirely takes care of the local merchant. Instead of breaking up his business it will facilitate his business. The very low rate given to the local merchant by the rural route carrier, so much lower than any other rate, puts him in close touch all the time with his farmer customer in the country, enabling the farmer to send to his home town at a very low rate his own smaller products, and by dropping a postal card to his home merchant to obtain at a very low rate the small things he needs from his local merchant.

When it comes to a distance of more than 50 miles from his local merchant there is quite a considerable increase, covering the normal additional cost of transportation, and it increases as the distance increases, which brings him to the big department houses. Buying from them he will pay not a flat rate similar to that which he pays to his own merchant, but a rate commensurate with the difference of distance in the haul, measured by the cost of transporting the goods. The distance articles have to go is considered in this bill, so that nothing is really given as an advantage to anyone, but the bill contemplates furnishing, at rates based upon the cost of transportation, facilities of communication for short and long distances. Its final result, therefore, must be that no merchant is given an advantage over another, but facilities for trade are furnished according to distance, short and long, and the danger to which the Senator has given expression is avoided.

I am taking no issue with the Senator as to the evil which would result if that was produced to which he objects, but I believe by this bill that evil is not caused, but instead legitimate and helpful aid is given to all interested in the exchange of products.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I fully realize the suggestions, and the apparent reasonableness of them, made by both the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from New York. I suppose, outside of the pure-food legislation, there is no subject upon which my correspondence has been more extensive than in regard to this question. It seems to have become known through some source that I was not in favor of the parcel post, and that knowledge has resulted in perhaps more communications being addressed to me on the subject than otherwise would have been. I have gone out through the country and met the people engaged in keeping the local stores. I have talked with them and have received from them statements that lead me to believe that a very large per cent of the country stores will disappear. No man will maintain a store for the purpose of competing with mail-order houses in the class of goods that are handled by those houses. We know from statements made in the press and from general information that there is now on foot a plan for the organization of a combination of mail-order houses that will create the largest monopoly, perhaps, or one of the largest monopolies, in the business of this country. I have in my committee room statements in regard to this matter that, were I discussing this under other circumstances, I would bring to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him just a moment?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think the Senator can rely upon the fact that the big mail-order houses do not obtain what they sought in this bill. Their demand was for a flat rate, uniform. That demand was disregarded and the rate of the character to which I have referred, recognizing the cost of transportation, was given.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I give due weight to that suggestion, and have considered it in arriving at a conclusion in this matter. There are only certain articles of merchandise in which country stores deal upon which there is any profit. Many articles of merchandise are handled by them merely as an accommodation, in order to keep together their business and keep the friendship of their customers.

Now, it so happens that among the actual everyday rapid necessities of life are those articles upon which there is comparatively little profit, oftentimes none. No attempt is made to make a profit. They will not maintain their stores in order to sell that class of commodities. Just as soon as you place them in competition with mail-order houses upon the goods on which they make a reasonable profit they will quit business.

There is not so much in this question of the zone system as appears upon the face of it or has been stated in the discussion of it. Your difficulty will begin right at home with your neighboring store. In the first place, his competition will be emphasized, because he must compete with the mail-order houses, and I used that term in a broad sense as representing the class of business that will benefit by or under which the people are expected to benefit by this legislation. When you provide for a postal charge of a cent an ounce or for each fraction of an ounce up to 4 ounces, you cover a very large class. There are a great many articles that come within that limitation.

Under present conditions the provisions of this bill have no application whatever. You are now providing for the small articles. You are providing for a postage rate of 1 cent an ounce on them. They will not stand it. You may argue that it is worth that much for the party to go to the store and get them. It does not cost the party anything to go to the store and get these articles. They do not charge anything up against that effort.

Mr. President, if they had no store to go to, then they must of necessity come within the terms and operation of this legislation. If this measure could be carried into effect without disturbing or destroying existing conditions in regard to supply points, then you might say he may still go to the store and get them, but when the store disappears he is at the mercy of the mail-order house. A package of 4 ounces represents many purchases of supplies, and drugs, and cottons, and a hundred other articles of daily necessity. Take away the opportunity to go to the store without expense or to send a child to the store to get the article and you compel them to patronize this new machine and to send somewhere and pay postage on it.

The great evil, as I see it, is in the destruction of the opportunity to deal with your neighbor, the destruction of the maintenance of commercial institutions that accommodate the varying wants of the urban resident. That is one of the great evils. If you could compel them to remain in business and supplement the parcel-post system, you might answer a good many of the objections, but you can not do it. I talked with a number of them within the last two weeks for the purpose of ascertaining the sentiment in regard to it. I went out into the country districts and advised myself with regard to the sentiment, and the sentiment is universally against it. You can get some organizations to indorse the parcel post in general terms, but when you catechise them as to the reason of their indorsement they fall down and they retreat; they say, "We had not considered that phase of it."

I was starting to say, when the Senator from Georgia interrupted me, that I have in my committee room a statement from a newspaper as to the arrival in one of the cities in our State of a carload, not of merchandise, but of circulars of mail-order houses. They sent a carload into that city to be distributed among its inhabitants in order that they might be armed and ready for this proposed legislation. If you saw the figures representing the number and cost and expense of mail-order circulars and books you would be astonished. The money expended for that class of advertising runs into millions of dollars.

You will increase the business of the railroads at the expense of the people of the country. It will be of no value to the people in large cities one way or the other. The smallest possible portion of them would patronize a parcel post, because they would have such a number and variety of stores from which to select where they would purchase their goods.

Country stores in this section of the United States, and in all sections, so far as I know, exchange the product of the farmer for their own merchandise. They keep yearly or semiyearly accounts with the farmers and balance them up, sometimes neither owing the other anything.

Now, you are about to enter upon it where the cash must be sent out of the neighborhood, all of it, to a distant part of the country. It does not return. You are not going to maintain these local institutions under the provisions of this bill, because you will take away the profitable part of their business and they will go out of business.

Do not make such a mistake as to think that the people of the country districts are in favor of this measure. They are not. The agitators are. The great lobby of mail-order houses are in favor of it. Those now engaged in that business and those who expect to be interested in it are in favor of it; but go into the small country town, with its prosperous, well-kept country store, and talk either to the proprietor of the store or to the people who constitute his customers, and you will find that 90 per cent of them are against it and the other 10 per cent simply say, "Well, we do not know."

The most valuable asset in this country is country life. The inducements to life in the country must not be overlooked. How many of the young folks of the country would live there if there were no central communities in the country, no small or considerable towns at which they could gather, where they could go to do their shopping and meet in the incidental way in which meetings come about in those towns? How many would stay there in the solitude of their own farms? How often would they go to these towns, except upon the errands of necessity? Would they go without any excuse for going? No; they would stay in isolation upon their farms and what effect does that have upon the mentality and the civilization of a community?

Mr. President, that is the largest part of this question. When you have once driven out the local business it will require many generations and much assurance to induce them to reinstate the country business. This is an evil that will not be readily cured. You can not say, "Well, if it does not work well we will repeal it and return to the old system." You will be compelled to find some one willing to reengage in business in these towns and communities, and it takes years to reestablish that condition, when you are at the mercy of the mail-order house for your daily groceries, which may be unexpectedly exhausted at a most inconvenient time. I suppose you will go and borrow of the neighbor, backed on the assumption that the neighbor is more provident than you are.

In my inquiry, which extended over a very large section of the country, and in my correspondence, which covers this whole country from ocean to ocean, I did not meet with a single instance where the country merchant did not say that it would be destructive of his business and that he would be compelled, of course, to go out of business.

The social life will be affected by it—the social life in the country and in the towns of the country, I mean. The business life will be affected by it. What remains? An imaginary convenience within the scope and possibilities of the mail-order house, and the money going out of the country and not returning to it, because there is nothing that the mail-order house or those who contribute to its stock or supplies have to draw upon the country district for.

You are making a mistake. You are going to make it, of course. That has been evident for some time. It is one of those crazes in the air and the age—it is full of them—that seem to come over those invested with responsibility, who seem quick to respond to anything or any idea that is new.

This country has grown up because of the existence of present conditions, and you would change it overnight in the pessimistic idea, "Oh, well, it can not do much harm; the people are clamoring for it." More bad legislation comes in response to that false statement and false idea that the people are clamoring for something than from any other cause. We have been entering upon some of those mistaken policies during this session of Congress, and now we are proposing to enter upon the greatest mistake of all of them. The country represents the real life of our people as a nation; not the cities. The cities produce nothing. They are consumers. They are the market of the country and make the country. Discourage the country, and it will find its revenge upon the people of the cities. Depopulate a country or make it so that the younger generations will not remain there, and the cities will feel it in the very near future.

I am not going to enter into any very extended or lengthy discussion of this question. I had intended to do it. I had intended to stand upon this floor until I had exhausted every possible resource within my grasp to prevent this legislation. But it has passed beyond that point, and I can only stand here to record my judgment and my protest against it. It is a toy, but it is an awfully expensive toy. It is attractive to put a map on the wall with zigzag lines and theories that would require the microscopic mind of Mephistopheles to understand it. "Why, yes; a thing so intricate and complicated as this must have merit of course"; and you cipher the people out of their rights.

The Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] seems to think that the zone theory solved this question. Well, it did, I guess. I do not know whether the Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE] could possibly have succeeded in inducing any branch or part of Congress to adopt this thing in type. It required that artistic map. Men were appalled by it. It looked to them like a possible engine of destruction or some kind of aero machine that would carry them over any difficulty. It might represent anything. It looked like a zebra. It looked like a map of the heavens.

Mr. ROOT. Or oilcloth.

Mr. HEYBURN. It looked like oilcloth. Yes; that is a very excellent simile. It looked like this ornamented, figured oilcloth that you see on floors and such places and you slip up on it. Mr. President, the people will slip up on it, and then they will stoop down, like the Senator would do if he stumbled and stumped his toe on a broken oilcloth; he would rip it up from the floor and throw it out of the window. That is where it will land.

They will say to the country stores, "Come back, we want you. We are out of groceries, and we can not send off 50 or 100 miles to get them by mail. We can not wait. We have no sugar for the coffee, no salt for the meat." And what will be the reply? They will say, "We will not come back to sell you sugar and salt; there is no profit in either, and you do not buy anything but those things of us." They will say, "We have brought down here some eggs and other familiar products of our gardens and we want to sell them to you." He will say, "I am not buying eggs to-day."

I know personally of an incident of that kind within two weeks, where a man who had been sending off to a mail-order house for the things that the merchant would make a profit on went to the merchant and said, "I have some eggs and vegetables here. How much will you give me for them?" He replied, "I will not give you anything for them. You are not buying anything of me upon which there is any profit and I will not buy anything of you. Send your eggs to the mail-order house." That is an actual occurrence, and it will be repeated a million times when you get this beautiful system in operation.

Mr. President, I am so constituted that I grieve for the people at times when I see them being led away from the conditions which they are entitled to merely because of the ambition of some men to-day, something that looks as if it was business and is nothing on earth but simply a crystallized mistake.

I will not detain the Senate longer. I am not going to vote against an appropriation so necessary as that to carry on the business of the post offices of the United States. I am not even going to record my vote against it. I have preferred to record my sentiments in what I have said, but the temptation would be very great to vote against the adoption of this report because of the great evil that exists in it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. As I must be out of the Chamber in conference now all the time, I ask to call up the bill (S. 4495) for the relief of George W. Hoyt. It is a local matter and a short bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. Will the Senator yield to me a moment to make a statement before he proceeds? I am perfectly willing that consent be given for his request.

Mr. WARREN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming yields to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I feel like I should make a statement in regard to the paragraph in the conference report relating to the parcel post. I am very much in favor of the parcel-post provision as it passed the Senate and as it remains in the bill, because the zones and the rates as they are incorporated in the law are the same as were agreed to by the committee and adopted by the Senate; but the conferees on the part of the Senate found it necessary to accept the paragraph which is found at the bottom of page 7 of the report of the conferees, which reads as follows:

> The classification of articles mailable as well as the weight limit, the rates of postage, zone or zones, and other conditions of mailability under this act, if the Postmaster General shall find on experience that they, or any of them, are such as to prevent the shipment of articles desirable, or to permanently reader the cost of the service greater than the receipts of the revenue therefrom, he is hereby authorized, subject to the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission, after investigation, to re-form from time to time such classification, weight limit, rates, zone or zones, or conditions, or either, in order to promote the service to the public or to insure the receipt of revenue from such service adequate to pay the cost thereof.

In other words, that paragraph permits the Postmaster General to fix the rates, to change the zones, and to fix any limit of weight from 1 pound to 100 pounds, or whatever it may be.

Mr. BOURNE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. BRISTOW. In a moment. I want to express my dissent in the most positive terms from such power being given to the Postmaster General. Now I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, before this picture that the Senator has painted could be put upon the wall the Postmaster General would have to have the experience growing out of the working of the provision, and if he desired to make a change he would have to have the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission. He could not secure the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission until after an investigation on their part. So that no power of action on these changes is centralized in the hands of the Postmaster General, except with the conditions I have enumerated attached.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to say to the Senator from Oregon that the conditions to which he refers constitute the reasons why I did not oppose the conference report. I realized that before the Postmaster General could exercise any such authority as is conferred upon him, Congress will have an opportunity to take from him this authority; and I hope that Congress will do so, and I believe it will. Therefore, I made no objection. I believe that no such provision could possibly pass either branch of Congress if it were not submitted as part of a conference report, thereby necessitating the rejection of the entire bill in order to secure the elimination of the objectionable provision.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming has asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill.

Mr. WARREN. It is a very short bill and concerns a local matter only.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say a word about this conference report.

Mr. WARREN. As that has been concluded, I trust the Senator will permit me to have my request acted upon.

Mr. NELSON. We have just heard some remarks on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WARREN. I appeal to the Senator. I have not yet had a bite to eat since morning. I should like to get through.

Mr. NELSON. I merely wish to say one or two words.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; and there are several others who wish to do the same.

Mr. NELSON. No; I want to say, Mr. President, that this session of Congress has demonstrated more clearly than other sessions of Congress the necessity of having a rule of the Senate in reference to conference reports. There has never been in my experience of now nearly 18 years in the Senate a session when there have been put into general appropriation bills so many new matters not agreed to by either House. It has come to be legislation by committees of conference instead of legislation by Congress. There is a rule in the other House respecting conference reports, but we have no such rule here at all, and we are in the predicament of being compelled either to reject a conference report in its entirety or adopt it in its entirety.

Some of the most dangerous and far-reaching provisions I have ever seen in any legislative session I have attended have been inserted in several of the appropriation bills. In the Post Office appropriation bill—and I am not criticizing the members of the conference committee—there has been injected, in connection with the parcel-post provision, the paragraph quoted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], which practically confers legislative power upon the Postmaster General; gives him the power to make any changes in the rates or to provide new rates as to the parcel post, and not only to make changes in the rates, but in regard to the weight of packages, and so forth.

Mr. BOURNE. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. NELSON. I do.

Mr. BOURNE. The House sent over to the Senate, in the nature of an instruction, a supplemental action to the bill as it came here. It was contained in the bill which was before the Senate and before the conferees, so that the provision is perfectly germane; and no criticism can possibly lie against the conferees, because the matter was before both Houses.

Mr. NELSON. There is a double criticism; first, in its present form it was not before either House, and, in the next place—and that is the most vital part of it—it practically confers legislative power upon the Postmaster General in as bald a form as possible.

I trust that at the next session of Congress we shall have our rules amended so that conferees no longer can resort to the expedient of putting into a bill legislation which has never been passed upon by either House.

Mr. HEYBURN. Just a moment, Mr. President.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. Who has the floor Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming has the floor.

Mr. WARREN. I want to oblige everybody, but it does not seem to me, after the conference report has been agreed to, that it is necessary for Senators to keep me standing and waiting. They can just as well follow me. I am willing to yield for a moment, however.

Mr. BOURNE. If the Senator will yield to me for a moment, I merely want to correct a statement made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. The matter to which he refers was before the House. It was passed by the House and sent over to the Senate almost exactly in the form in which it is found in the conference report.

GEORGE W. HOYT.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill No. 4495.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4495) for the relief of George W. Hoyt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming for the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia objects.

Mr. WARREN. I want to appeal to the Senator from Georgia. Is his objection directed to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know what the bill is.

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that the bill has been thoroughly examined by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and that it is a perfectly legitimate case.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator will let the bill be now considered and passed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Very well.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to credit the accounts of George W. Hoyt, postmaster at Cheyenne, Wyo., in the sum of $11,236, due to the United States on account of money-order funds embezzled by Joseph Kingman, late assistant postmaster at Cheyenne, Wyo., in the year 1911, and appropriates $11,236 in payment of the claim.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25531) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 16611. An act setting apart a certain tract of land for a public highway, and for other purposes;

H. R. 24458. An act authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to deliver to certain cities and towns condemned bronze and brass cannon, with their carriages and outfit of cannon balls, etc.; and

H. R. 25069. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

ADMISSION OF ADULTERATED SEEDS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] asked that the consideration of House bill 22340 be postponed until he could examine some telegrams which he had received. He has since examined those telegrams, and he has now no objection to the consideration of the bill and its passage. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. What is the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. It is the bill (H. R. 22340) to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated seeds and seeds unfit for seeding purposes. Being a House bill, it must go to conference, and if it is not passed to-night it can not be acted upon by the House.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment inserting section 4.

The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 18, it is proposed to insert:

SEC. 4. That no person, firm, or corporation shall ship or deliver to any common carrier for shipment from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia any such grain or seeds for seeding purposes, the car, case, bag, or package containing which is not plainly marked so as to show the kind of grain or seeds, the percentage of germination, the percentage of adulteration, the name and address of the consignee, and the place where the grain or seed was grown.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill has already been read and one amendment agreed to. I ask that the Senate disagree to the amendment inserting section 4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee inserting section 4.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 2, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That any person or persons who shall knowingly violate the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall pay a fine of not exceeding $500 and not less than $200: Provided, That any person or persons who shall knowingly sell for seeding purposes seeds or grain which were imported under the provisions of this act for the purpose of manufacture shall be deemed guilty of a violation of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated grain and seeds unfit for seeding purposes."

SPEECH OF ACCEPTANCE OF VICE PRESIDENT SHERMAN (S. DOC. NO. 943).

Mr. SANDERS. I ask that the speech of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] notifying JAMES SCHOOLCRAFT SHERMAN of his nomination for the Vice Presidency by the Republican national convention, and the speech of JAMES SCHOOLCRAFT SHERMAN accepting the nomination by the Republican national convention, both delivered at Utica, N. Y., August 21, 1912, be printed as a Senate document, and also that they be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The speeches referred to are as follows:

SPEECH OF SENATOR SUTHERLAND.

Mr. Vice President, it has become my pleasant duty, speaking for the committee appointed for that purpose, to convey to you the formal information that at the national convention recently held in Chicago you were renominated as the candidate of the Republican Party for the high office of Vice President of the United States—an office which you have so creditably filled during the past four years.

It has seldom fallen to me to perform a duty in which my sense of personal pleasure and my judgment have coincided in such equal proportions. The many years of my association with you in the House of Representatives and in the Senate qualify me to say that if the people of this country have not lost their ability to appreciate faithful, conscientious, and unselfish public service, your reelection may be predicted with confident assurance. You have presided over the deliberations of the Senate with such fairness, courtesy, ability, and constant devotion to duty as to win the uniform and unanimous commendation of the entire membership of that body.

The Vice President should always be selected with the possibility in mind of his being called upon to assume the larger duties of the presidency, and I but give expression to the opinions of all those who know you best when I say that if that contingency should ever arise in your case the duties of that great office would fall into hands fully capable of bearing the new and increased responsibilities.

We shall have arrayed against us in the coming campaign our ancient and hereditary enemy, the Democratic Party. In addition we shall be called upon to contend with some former associates who have concluded to abandon their amiable custom of firing upon the flag they have been following in order that they may engage in the more honorable, but no more effectual, occupation of assaulting it from the front. For the next few months our ears are to be filled with the voice of the malcontent, strident and many-keyed, calling upon the people to forsake the tried and beaten paths of constitutional government, along which they have walked with sure feet for more than a century, and enter upon a personally conducted pilgrimage through the political wilderness to a promised land as shadowy and unsubstantial as a desert mirage.

The advance agents of this delirious excursion tarried a few days at Chicago, long enough to pool their individual grievances, visions, and vagaries in a bewildering farrago of impractical political nostrums such as never before has been collected at one time outside the violent wards of a madhouse. And thus the so-called Progressive Party was born, its sole excuse for existence being the unfounded claim that its nominee for the Presidency was defeated for a like nomination by stolen votes at the Republican convention.

I can not, of course, take the time to discuss this claim in detail and point out its utter and reckless falsity. The overwhelming majority of the national committee, the credentials committee, and the tribunal of ultimate appeal, the convention itself, after the most thorough and patient consideration, decided, and fairly decided, against this contention. Of the delegates elected for Mr. Taft, 238 were contested. Of these contests, 164 were rejected as wholly without merit, Mr. Roosevelt's own friends on the national committee joining in the decision. Mr. Roosevelt himself, although acquiescing in the filing of contests against 24 Alabama delegates, openly stated, after the national committee had unanimously seated 22 of them, that he had only counted on 2 delegates for himself and exhibited a list in which 22 were conceded to President Taft. Why were these 22 and the remainder of the 164 confessedly frivolous contests instituted?

The Washington Times, a Munsey newspaper, and an ardent supporter of Mr. Roosevelt, ingenuously furnished the explanation, namely—and I quote the exact statement:

> For psychological effect, as a move in practical politics, it was necessary for the Roosevelt people to start contests in these early Taft selections, in order that a tabulation of delegate strength could be put out that would show Roosevelt holding a good hand.

Larceny for "psychological effect" is something quite new in the history of penology

In other words, more than two-thirds of all the contests which were instituted were known to be fraudulent from the beginning. Though instituted for "psychological effect," they were apparently continued before the national committee for more practical reasons. It is difficult to imagine a more indecent attempt to dishonestly deprive duly elected delegates of their seats and secure unelected Roosevelt delegates in their places. In view of this conceded attempt to steal 164 of the delegates, it might not be unreasonable to require something more than the mere assertion of the unsuccessful freebooter to demonstrate the merit of the remaining 74 contests.

It would be a strange rule of evidence which would require us to accept the testimony of a buccaneering psychologist who confesses to an attempt to purloin the larger portion of an honest man's property as conclusive evidence of the psychologist's title to the remainder of the honest man's possessions.

There never has been in all history a more unique convention than that of the Progressive Party at Chicago. Heretofore, when a party has been organized, its organizers have in advance entertained at least a suspicion respecting their principles; but the delegates to this convention, wholly ignorant of the things for which they stood, waited, with patiently folded hands, the appearance of Mr. Roosevelt in the convention to tell them what they believed. Upon his appearance he was received with reverent adoration. With a spirit of self-abnegation never witnessed since the charge of the Light Brigade at Balaklava—a "Their's not to reason why, their's but to do and die" sort of exaltation, led by the Grand Young Man from Indiana, devout but tuneful, the assembled vassals proclaimed their joyous intellectual surrender to the feudal lord in the following hymn of driveling irresponsibility:

> Follow, follow,
> We will follow Roosevelt,
> Anywhere, everywhere,
> We will follow him.
>
> Follow, follow,
> We will follow Roosevelt,
> Anywhere he leads us
> We will follow on.

All of which being chanted to the ravishing air of that stirring ditty entitled, "We don't know where we're going, but we're on the way," wrought the multitude into such a state of blind and benighted idolatry that authentic information to the effect that the colonel had just waylaid a perfectly respectable minister of the gospel and robbed him of his last month's donations would have brought forth enthusiastic cheers for the colonel and a vote of stern condemnation for the man of God as the representative of a dangerous and iniquitous plutocracy.

In form 2,000 delegates, more or less, gathered in the Coliseum; in reality Mr. Roosevelt met in convention at Chicago, made a confession of faith, gave his hand to the colored brother from the North and his foot to the colored brother from the South, adopted a platform, nominated himself and Brother Johnson, and adjourned with the ease of a thoroughly trained thimblerigger plying his vocation among the rural visitors to the midway plaisance.

The campaign upon which we are about to enter presents issues of more serious moment to the American people than any they have confronted since the grave questions which immediately preceded and accompanied the Civil War. The overshadowing question then was whether the Union, under the Constitution, could be perpetuated; that which confronts us to-day is whether the Constitution itself, and the Government which the Constitution established, shall be preserved—a question of equal, if not greater gravity, since it would be of little avail to have preserved the Union from the chaos of disintegration if the Government of the Union is to be given over to the chaos of disorganization.

The party to which we belong, Mr. Vice President, stands in this supreme contest for the independence and integrity of the judicial tribunals of the land, without which the guaranty of life, liberty, and property would be a meaningless platitude. It stands for the settled rule of impersonal government, as opposed to the shifty opportunism of personal manipulation; for the liberty and order of general law, as against the tyranny of special edicts of changing men. It plants itself upon the impregnable ramparts of the Constitution and, solemnly protesting against any subversion of the terms of that great compact by the arrogant and revolutionary process of amendment by misconstruction, appeals from the midsummer madness of that portion of the people which can be fooled all the time to the sober second thought of the great body of the American electorate who will render judgment in November.

SPEECH OF JAMES SCHOOLCRAFT SHERMAN.

Gentlemen of the committee, this company appreciates the honor of this visit by your distinguished membership. You represent the 48 States of the Union and the 8,000,000 Republican voters in our wide domain. You bear the commission of the convention which, representing them, met in Chicago in June. That convention declared anew our fidelity to the historic Republican Party, our purpose to carry forward the work it has so well done, and to promote further the prosperity and progress of the United States. The annals of American parties do not record the proceedings of a political gathering conducted with more openness, fairness, deliberation, sobriety, and worthy purpose than that for which you speak. This assemblage will gladly concede the fact that other procedure were impossible in a body presided over by Oneida's native son, ELIHU ROOT.

Not deceived by the clamor of those who attempted to bolster up claims without basis by hundreds of contests resting on foundations so flimsy that, in the light of investigation, most of them melted away like snow in a furnace heat and were rejected by quite or nearly a unanimous vote, the convention adopted a platform that rings true for patriotism and constitutional government and worthily bestowed a renomination upon our present Chief Executive.

You, gentlemen, notify me that the convention named me as the party's candidate for Vice President. Our party has never before conferred a second nomination for that office upon any man. This distinction was not sought by me, but, unsolicited, it is the more appreciated and its value is augmented by the generous words in which you, Senator SUTHERLAND, are pleased to announce it. I can not but recognize your message, gentlemen, as a mandate which I must obey. As a loyal Republican, a disciple of the party of Lincoln and Grant, of Harrison and McKinley, and of him for whom the ground upon which we stand, dedicated to public use is named, Roscoe Conkling, I stand squarely upon the party platform. I approve of the admirable statement of Republican principles and achievements made in the address accepting the nomination for President by William Howard Taft. Upon that platform and associated with President Taft, I gratefully accept the renomination as the Republican candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States.

Fortunate are we, Republicans, in the fact that our opponents are divided into two camps, rivaling each other in their efforts to excel in disturbing the civic and economic order of the country. The new party thrusts itself forward into the vacuum left by the phantoms of other third parties which have passed into oblivion. Oblivion, too, awaits it. The Democratic Party in the Nation has many times defeated its Republican rival in August; but twice has it done so in November. The political skies are often confused and lowering in midsummer, but the cooling breezes of November render them clear and normal. Astronomers tell us that many shooting stars flash into vision in August, but, dazzling though they be in their flight, they disappear in unknown space, while the planets roll on in splendor in their regular orbits. So in the political firmament, comets may cross the canopy; they have no fixed place in the solar system. The Democratic rallying cry has always been "a tariff for revenue only," and the bitterest assaults on the policy of protection to American industry. This year sees no innovation. The Democratic candidate, Dr. Wilson, is Bryan and Parker over again without the oratory of the one or the legal training of the other, but with the free-trade prejudices of both seemingly intensified. It is not unkind to discern that Dr. Wilson is a pedagogue, not a statesman, and, in his mode of thought, academic rather than practical. Job appealed:

"O, that mine adversary had written a book." Dr. Wilson has written several, and many utterances in them will prove both an embarrassment and a burden in this campaign. In his History of the American People he says (vol. 5, p. 212):

> Now came multitudes of men of the lowest class from the south of Italy, and men of the meaner sort out of Hungary and Poland, men out of the ranks, where there was neither skill nor energy nor any initiative of quick intelligence, and they came in numbers which increased from year to year, as if the countries of the south of Europe were disburdening themselves of the more sordid and hapless elements of their population.

And almost immediately thereafter the learned doctor further says:

> The Chinese were more to be desired as workmen, if not as citizens, than most of the coarse crew that came crowding in every year at the eastern ports.

Was the statement when made well founded? Is it to-day? Was it just? Was it worth while for the learned writer to give expression to such sentiments? Do my hearers to-day believe the Chinese to be more desired than the European immigrants? Do they concede the immigrants from the land of Kosciuszko and Columbus to be of the "lowest class," of the "meaner sort," the "most sordid," and the "coarsest crew"? By their votes in November they must say if they believe a man who gave utterance but a few years ago to such thoughts and sentiments is now best fitted to be the Chief Executive of their adopted Government and country.

For the first time in the memory of my oldest hearer the country witnessed a convention, held in Chicago two weeks since, in which there was no roll call of delegates, no ballots cast; where red bandannas were preferred to the Stars and Stripes; where the scene was scarlet overmuch, like the flag of anarchy, not red, white, and blue, the symbol of patriotism. The unquestioned master of the situation was greeted by his satellites as "an inspired leader," and the irreverence which fell from many lips reached its climax in the closing utterances of the chairman. The "leader's" right to rule was recognized and proclaimed. Never in the history of the English tongue was greater assumption of power proclaimed. Thoughtful and patriotic citizens will inquire the meaning of the pronunciamiento of that gathering that there will follow "a dangerous revolution" unless its policies are adopted. American voters of all parties will, I believe, resent any appeal to the terror of violence. Both of the opposing parties assault with equal vehemence the present tariff, under which our country has so markedly prospered. They abuse the Payne-Aldrich law without stint and without reason. That tariff act has closed no factory, has put out the fires in no furnace, has thrown no mechanic or laborer out of employment. It has opened no free-soup houses for starving families deprived of the wage of the bread earner; it has formed no bread line of jaded, disheartened seekers for employment. It has kept wide open the home markets for the produce of the farm and the factory. Industrious workingmen, having the highest wage ever known, have been able to build new houses, to clothe well their children, to provide for their schooling, and to give them a generous measure of the comforts and luxuries of life. The landlord is not embarrassed in the collection of his rent, the grocer in receiving pay for his supplies. The church of his choice is receiving his free gifts from the prosperous citizen. Nearly 10,000,000 of depositors in the savings banks had last year laid away over four thousand millions of dollars—$4,212,583,000—while every branch of moral, social, and educational betterment has received vital impulse and generous support. Wherein can the thoughtful citizen see promise of a betterment in the frantic cry for "a change"?

I have seen in no speech or literature made or issued by a member of either of the opposing parties the fact stated that of the hundreds of millions of foreign goods imported last year 51 per cent came in duty free. Have any of the rancorous critics of the Payne tariff law cited the fact that under its provisions the duties on all importations were reduced 21 per cent? And yet this "revision downward" was accomplished without harm to American labor. Unbridled ambition and long-deferred hope have little regard for reason and for truth. Our export trade has mounted marvelously. In the last fiscal year in manufactures alone it passed the billion-dollar mark ($1,021,000,000). The annual product of our manufactories surpasses that of any other nation, and besides fully supplying our own people, exceeds all competitors in the value of exports.

The Democratic majority in our House of Representatives is writing in lurid characters the extent to which our opponents are willing to go in their zealous efforts to ruin protection. The several bills reducing various schedules, passed by the House, and under the strange condition existing in the Senate acquiesced in by that body, exhibit the crudities and destructive aims of the advocates of a tariff for revenue only. The need of a Republican President is clearly proven by the defense of American industry by President Taft in his vetoes of these recent tariff bills from which he has saved every interest of labor and production. Had he no other title to both gratitude and support (and he has a multitude) these vetoes alone call for the support at the polls of every American citizen who toils with hand or brain, on the farm or in the factory, in the mill or in the shop or in the office, who values present blessings and desires to preserve them.

The Republican Party has never claimed to possess within its membership all the world's virtue and patriotism. We do not pretend to be better than other men of good intent who try to behave well. We concede to the followers of other party standards, be they Democratic, Progressive, Prohibition, or what not, a desire to do that which shall serve the public weal. We insist that in their advocacy of many economic, financial, and governmental theories they are in error, grievous error. While admitting the sincerity of their beliefs, we maintain that the principles in which we believe and the policies which we advocate are far the best to be upheld and applied for the best interests of the hundred million of American people. We insist that experience justifies our contention. With but two intervals Republican rule has for half a century guided the majestic forward and upward strides of this Nation. That, we assert, is a demonstration of the capacity and the purpose and the success of the Republican Party in securing for this country sane, certain, and all-embracing progress.

The crime of this "new age" is frenzied speech and action; lack of thought, a spurning of deliberation and of the weighing of consequences. Fakers with projects to "get rich quick" draw gaping crowds. Mad haste is the pastime of the multitude. Automobiles race to carry their passengers to death at a mile a minute. The British Board of Trade attributes the awful sinking of the Titanic, with its cruel sacrifice of life of crew and passengers, to excessive speed. The third-term party and Candidate Wilson urge the country to like disaster and ruin.

When the American people, in the quiet of the home fireside, about the evening lamp, in the late autumn days, shall have given careful thought to the history of the past; shall have considered the blessings that have come from tried policies; when they shall have contemplated the possible dangers that may follow from unwise and unripe changes, they will give heed to the warning and will not repeat in our political and economic fields the frightful and ghastly experience of the Titanic. We Republicans are not men worshipers. We contend with Jefferson for "principles, not men." We are free and we follow blindly no leader and bow to no dictator. The people have and the people always will rule. We grip our anchor firmly to the Constitution and the American system of representative government. The more savage and truculent the attacks upon them, the more insolent the bluster, the more steadfast is our stand for free institutions, which are the glory of mankind. An untrammeled judiciary is their strong bulwark. We warn the electorate not to be drowned by a Niagara of denunciation and abuse. Every tirade against the Constitution and the law and the courts is a strident call to the American people to protect their homes and to maintain inviolate constitutional government; every assault upon profection a summons to preserve their opportunities, to maintain existing conditions which places the American wage earner in every calling on a higher scale of living and civilization than enjoyed elsewhere in the world. Such protection can be guaranteed only by adequate customs duties, justly and wisely applied to hold our broad and immense home market against the world. Such protection, to be safe and certain, must be based upon a Republican protective tariff.

The evidence upon which the American electorate will base its verdict in November will be submitted upon the hustings, through the press, and by pleas through the mails. The evidence should be based upon the experience of the past. The jury of American people must weigh it well and sift the false from the true. The verdict will be rendered within a few hours of a single day; its effect will be with us for years. Let no juror reach his conclusion, render his verdict, without due care for the welfare of himself, his kinsmen, and his fellows.

We ask that the Republican Party and its candidate be tried upon the record of service and accomplishments. We near the end of President Taft's first term of service with our Government at amity with all foreign powers, amid domestic tranquillity, and with our people blessed by prosperity and abundance; our Navy among the foremost of the world; our Army in a high degree of excellence; our postal service, for the first time in its history, self-sustaining; the colossal dream of the centuries, an Isthmian Canal, almost a completed reality; our foreign and domestic commerce in a condition of activity, vigor, and health, meeting the desires of the most optimistic, and every department of the Government rendering proper and efficient aid to law-abiding citizens in every calling. Confident that the American people are not yet willing to destroy and discard the Constitution, which has stood the test of more than a century, which was framed, expounded, and upheld by the great men of the past, that they have not yet forgotten the direful result of the mistake of 1892, we calmly await the ides of November.

LIFE-SAVING AND QUARANTINE FACILITIES.

Mr. BRYAN. On behalf of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] I report back from the Committee on Commerce, without amendment, House bill 26005. It is a brief bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida, on behalf of his colleague, reports from the Committee on Commerce a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 26005) to provide for the establishment of one life-saving station on the larger of the two Libby Islands, situated at the entrance to Machias Bay, Me.; one life-saving station at Half Moon Bay south of Point Montara and near Montara Reef, Cal.; one life-saving station at Mackinac Island, Mich.; and one life-saving station at or near Sea Gate, New York Harbor, N. Y., and to provide increased quarantine facilities at the port of Portland, Me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Florida to the fact that the second section of the bill regarding quarantine facilities at Portland, Me., has been incorporated in the deficiency appropriation bill. Without objection, that provision will be stricken from the bill.

Mr. NELSON. That provision on the general deficiency bill may not be agreed to in conference, as it is a Senate amendment. Therefore I think it had better be retained in this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the thrid time, and passed.

AFFAIRS IN NICARAGUA.

Mr. BACON. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate resolution 385 which I introduced two days ago and which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

There being no objection, the resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations, or a subcommittee thereof, authorized and appointed under Senate resolution 335, passed July 26, 1912, to make certain investigations and report concerning influences connected with or inciting rebellion, insurrections, or disorders in Cuba and Mexico, be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed by said committee, or a subcommittee appointed or to be appointed, to further inquire, investigate, ascertain, and report as to the alleged invasion of the Republic of Nicaragua by the armed sailors and marines of the Navy of the United States during the month of August, 1912, or at any other time preceding or subsequent thereto during said year; and particularly to investigate and report to the Senate—

First. Under what authority of law and by the orders of what official of the United States said armed sailors and marines were at any time during said year ordered to invade the territory of the Republic of Nicaragua.

Second. What armed officers and sailors and marines of the Navy and Marine Corps were under said orders sent into the territory of the Republic of Nicaragua.

Third. What orders were issued to said forces of the Navy and Marine Corps to be executed by the same in the Republic of Nicaragua, and what was done within the period named in pursuance thereof, and particularly what military operations were carried on within the Republic of Nicaragua by said forces in pursuance of said orders or otherwise.

Fourth. The said committee or subcommittee is further directed to investigate and report to the Senate what citizen of the United States or other person or persons are now or have been during said year assuming to collect customs in Nicaragua, and assuming to be American customs officials, and particularly by whom said collector of customs has been appointed, by whose instigation, and the authority assumed to be exercised by said alleged American custom officials and all the acting and doings of the same under any authority, actual or assumed.

Resolved further, That all the powers and authority conferred upon said committee or subcommittee by the said original Senate resolution 335 of July 26, 1912, be, and the same are hereby, conferred upon said committee or subcommittee in making the additional investigation and report herein authorized and directed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT APALACHICOLA, FLA.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask leave, out of order, to report favorably from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with an amendment, the bill (S. 2345) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Apalachicola, Fla. The senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] is very much interested in the bill, and in his behalf I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. It is a very short bill of not more than a dozen lines.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah for the consideration of the bill named by him?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the word "dollars," to strike out the remainder of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post office and other Government offices at the city of Apalachicola, in the State of Florida, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VALIDATION OF HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator withhold that motion for just a moment? I should like to have a minute of the Senate's time.

Mr. SMOOT. If the matter the Senator has in mind will not lead to any discussion, I will yield.

Mr. MYERS. I do not think it will lead to discussion. If I thought it would, I would not ask to have it taken up at this time. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 21826. It is a bill that was introduced by my colleague [Mr. PRAY] in the other House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 21826) validating certain homestead entries.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that all pending homestead entries made in good faith prior to September 1, 1911, under the provisions of the enlarged homestead laws, by persons who, before making such enlarged-homestead entry, had acquired title to a technical quarter section of land under the homestead law, and therefore were not qualified to make an enlarged-homestead entry, are validated, if in all other respects regular, in all cases where the original homestead entry was for less than 160 acres of land.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRAGG HILL LAND CO., TENNESSEE.

Mr. SANDERS. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 19276) authorizing the Secretary of War to convey by deed to D. B. Loveman and D. B. Loveman, president of Bragg Hill Land Co., of Hamilton County, a certain strip or parcel of land in Hamilton County, Tenn., to report it without amendment. It is a very brief bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow the Senate take up the calendar under Rule VIII and proceed to the consideration of bills to which there is no objection, not to interfere, however, with the consideration of conference reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I object to one part of the request, which is that we only take up those bills to which there is no objection. I think we ought to take up the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. SMOOT. If we did that, I think we would not proceed far with the calendar. If the Senator objects, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think there are some measures on the calendar under Rule VIII to which there might be some objection. The one in which I am especially interested is what is known as the parole bill which has passed the House. We have, I think, in the southeastern district——

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator objects, I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request is withdrawn.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SMOOT. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. NELSON. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 7 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, August 24, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate August 23, 1912.

NAVAL OFFICER OF CUSTOMS.

Lewis K. Torbet, of Illinois, to be naval officer of customs in the district of Chicago, in the State of Illinois, in place of Thomas N. Jamieson, whose term of office expired by limitation February 10, 1908.

CHIEF OF BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE.

Albertus H. Baldwin, of Connecticut, to be Chief of Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Department of Commerce and Labor.

ASSISTANT CHIEFS OF BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE.

Oscar P. Austin, of the District of Columbia, to be Assistant Chief of Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Etherd A. Brand, of Virginia, to be Assistant Chief of Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Department of Commerce and Labor.

COUNSELOR FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

Chandler P. Anderson, of New York, to be counselor for the Department of State. (Reappointment.)

ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Jesse C. Adkins, of the District of Columbia, to be Assistant Attorney General. (An additional position created by the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.)

PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

PAY DEPARTMENT.

Maj. Beecher B. Ray, paymaster, to be deputy paymaster general with the rank of lieutenant colonel from February 16, 1912, vice Lieut. Col. Hamilton S. Wallace, promoted.

POSTMASTERS.

ARIZONA.

Harry C. Adams to be postmaster at Hayden, Ariz. Office became presidential July 1, 1912.

CALIFORNIA.

George D. Barron to be postmaster at El Monte, Cal., in place of Lulu Mayes, resigned.

IOWA.

Alfred F. Wright to be postmaster at Denison, Iowa, in place of Frederick W. Meyers, resigned.

MONTANA.

Charles Weber to be postmaster at Thompson Falls (late Thompson), Mont., in place of Charles Weber. (To change name of office.)

PORTO RICO.

Julio Ramos to be postmaster at Cayey, P. R., in place of Julio Ramos. Incumbent's commission expired May 26, 1912.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

James D. Reeves to be postmaster at Groton, S. Dak., in place of John G. Ropes, removed.

TEXAS.

Wilard R. Crittenden to be postmaster at Sugar Land, Tex. Office became presidential July 1, 1912.

Dallas Harbert to be postmaster at Commerce, Tex., in place of Dallas Harbert. Incumbent's commission expired February 24, 1912.

George B. McManis to be postmaster at Baird, Tex., in place of Lulu F. McManis, resigned.

William J. Miller to be postmaster at Hallettsville, Tex., in place of William J. Miller. Incumbent's commission expired March 20, 1912.

Charles O. Nelson to be postmaster at Clifton, Tex., in place of Charles O. Nelson. Incumbent's commission expired January 23, 1910.

Orion L. Niccolls to be postmaster at Marfa, Tex., in place of Orion L. Niccolls. Incumbent's commission expired April 28, 1912.

Denny E. Walshe to be postmaster at Grand Saline, Tex., in place of Denny E. Walshe. Incumbent's commission expired April 28, 1912.

Effie Walton to be postmaster at Walnut Springs, Tex., in place of Effie Walton. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1911.

VIRGINIA.

Otis Tucker to be postmaster at Drakes Branch, Va., in place of William S. Gregory, jr., removed.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate August 23, 1912.

CONSULS.

Charles Forman to be consul at Turks Island, West Indies.

George M. Hanson to be consul at Hobart, Tasmania.

Perry C. Hays to be consul at Zanzibar, Zanzibar.

Frank Anderson Henry to be consul at Guadeloupe, West Indies.

Walter A. Leonard to be consul at Stavanger, Norway.

COUNSELOR FOR THE STATE DEPARTMENT.

Chandler P. Anderson to be counselor for the State Department.

ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Jesse C. Adkins to be Assistant Attorney General.

NAVAL OFFICER OF CUSTOMS.

Lewis K. Torbet to be naval officer of customs in the district of Chicago, Ill.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade):

George Joerns,
Cortlandt C. Baughman,
William T. Mallison,
Herbert A. Jones,
Chauncey E. Pugh, and
Herman E. Welte.

Ensign Jere H. Brooks to be a lieutenant (junior grade).

Asst. Surg. David G. Allen to be a passed assistant surgeon.

The following-named assistant surgeons to be passed assistant surgeons:

John G. Ziegler, and
William M. Kerr.

The following-named assistant naval constructors to be naval constructors:

Isaac I. Yates,
George C. Westervelt,
Charles W. Fisher, jr.,
Holden C. Richardson,
John H. Walsh,
Edward C. Hamner, jr., and
Emory S. Land.

Gunner William H. Dayton to be a chief gunner.

The following-named commanders to be captains:

George W. Kline,
Harrison A. Bispham, and
Charles M. McCormick.

The following-named lieutenant commanders to be commanders:

Thomas S. Wilson, and
Henry A. Pearson.

The following-named lieutenants to be lieutenant commanders:
George W. Steele, jr.,
John W. Timmons,
John G. Church, and
Paul Foley.
Lieut. John T. Bowers to be a lieutenant commander.
Lieut. (Junior Grade) Virgil Baker to be a lieutenant.
Lieut. (Junior Grade) Stuart W. Cake to be a lieutenant.
The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants:
Charles A. Woodruff,
Francis M. Robinson,
John F. Connor,
George A. Alexander,
James P. Olding,
Charles S. McWhorter,
Sherwoode A. Taffinder, and
Lesley B. Anderson.
Lieut. (Junior Grade) Reuben L. Walker to be a lieutenant.
Medical Inspector Philip Leach to be a medical director.
Medical Inspector Lloyd W. Curtis to be a medical director.
Surg. Charles F. Stokes to be a medical inspector.
Surg. Rand P. Crandall to be a medical inspector.
Surg. George T. Smith to be a medical inspector.
Passed Asst. Surg. James H. Holloway to be a surgeon.
Passed Asst. Surg. John L. Neilson to be a surgeon.
Passed Asst. Surg. Frederick W. S. Dean to be a surgeon.
Passed Assistant Paymaster Noel W. Grant to be a paymaster.

POSTMASTERS.

CALIFORNIA.

Robert K. Haines, La Mesa.
Henry E. Kay, Jackson.

GEORGIA.

George F. Flanders, Swainsboro.

MINNESOTA.

Paul H. Tvedt, Nashwauk.

NEBRASKA.

E. C. Colhapp, Humboldt.

NEVADA.

Joseph M. Lyon, National.

NEW JERSEY.

William C. Howell, Blairstown.

OHIO.

Frederick Greenwood, Minerva.

PENNSYLVANIA.

James E. Rupert, Conneautville.

TEXAS.

F. C. Allen, Bonham.
James W. Bradford, Mount Vernon.
Belle W. Bridges, Mason.
John L. Burke, Elgin.
John W. Chichester, Eagle Pass.
Wilard R. Crittenden, Sugar Land.
David Doole, jr., Brady.
Clinton J. Farrell, Vernon.
Christopher C. Gates, Sanderson.
Frederick W. Guffy, Belton.
William P. Harris, Sulphur Springs.
Louis Elmer Hill, Alvarado.
John M. Hill, Cooledge.
Leland S. Howard, Roscoe.
Oscar Hunt, Canyon.
Arthur P. McCauley, Sabinal.
George B. McManis, Baird.
William J. Miller, Hallettsville.
Charles O. Nelson, Clifton.
Orion L. Niccolls, Marfa.
Anna J. Roach, Atlanta.
John G. Ross, Garrison.
Nicholas D. Smith, Dublin.
Charlie B. Starke, Holland.
George F. Taylor, Royse City.
Denny E. Walshe, Grand Saline.
Effie Walton, Walnut Springs.
Louis Weete, Columbus.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Allen D. Fitzhugh, Bridgeport.
Louis Lowmiller, Weirton.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, August 23, 1912.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who are infinite in wisdom, power, and goodness, our God and our Father, we would draw near to Thee in the spirit of the Master and receive that uplift of the soul which shall enable us with patience, fidelity, dignity, and courage to meet all the duties and responsibilities Thou hast laid upon us, that we may weave for ourselves out of the great loom of life's activities a character which shall stand the test of time and eternity, and to Thee we will ascribe all praise, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 26371. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

S. 6384. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 6851. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 25069. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 20728. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 26371. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year, ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 6851. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. McCOY, for the day, on account of illness.

To Mr. ADAMSON, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter addressed by George Fred Williams to Senator R. F. Pettigrew, of Sioux Falls, S. Dak., dated December 15, 1911.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as a part of his remarks the letter addressed by George Fred Williams to Senator R. F. Pettigrew, dated December 15, 1911. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I insist on the regular order at this time until the conference reports are out of the way.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 20728, the Indian appropriation bill, and move its adoption. I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the statement being read in lieu of the report? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the statement.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1238).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from i s amendments numbered 2, 5, 6, 12, 13, 16, 18, 27, 34, 35, 38, 39, 42, 43, 50, 52, 56, 59, 63, 64, 65, 70, 72, 76, 77, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 95, 99, 108, 109, 115, 125, 127, 131, 132, 135, 134, 135, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 152, 153, 154.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 9, 14, 15, 17, 24, 30, 31, 33, 40, 44, 45, 46, 47, 51, 53, 54, 55, 58, 62, 66, 74, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 84, 85, 97, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 124, 128, 136, 144, 145, 148, 149, 151, 155, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "two hundred and fifty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "three hundred and twenty-five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "thirty-five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "ninety"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of sum proposed insert "four hundred and twenty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "four hundred and eighty." After the word "dollars," in line 11, page 5, insert the following: ": Provided, That out of the above amount the following expenditures shall be made, to wit: Thirty thousand dollars for the construction of buildings for agency headquarters on the Coeur d'Alene Reservation in Idaho; $10,000 for general repairs and improvements at the Yankton Agency in South Dakota; $15,000 for improvements at the Fort Bidwell School in California, as follows: Seven thousand dollars for the erection and construction of a water and electric-light system, $3,000 for sewerage system, $3,000 for a steam laundry, and $2,000 for complete heating system of the school and accessory buildings"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8 of the proposed amendment, after the word "to," strike out the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifteen"; in line 8 of the proposed amendment, after the word "and," strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "nine"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "twenty-eight"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "four"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "twenty-two"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "fifteen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For the development of a water supply for domestic and stock purposes and for irrigation for nomadic Papago Indians in Pima County, Ariz., $5,000.

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to make an investigation of the conditions on the Papago Indian Reservation in Arizona with a view to determining the possibility of enlarging the irrigation system for the protection and irrigation of the Indian lands and the development of a water supply for domestic and stock purposes, $5,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made together with an estimated limit of cost of said project and shall submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to make an investigation of the conditions on the White Mountain or San Carlos Indian Reservation in Arizona, with respect to the necessity of constructing, for the use of the Indians, suitable bridges across the San Carlos Creek and the Gila River, in the vicinity of San Carlos, on said reservation, $1,000, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made, together with an estimated limit of cost of construction of said bridges, at such sites as he may select, and submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to make an investigation of conditions on the Yuma Reservation, in California, with respect to the necessity of constructing, for the use of the Indians, a bridge across the Colorado River between Fort Yuma, Cal., and the town of Yuma, Ariz., $1,000, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause plans, surveys, and reports to be made, together with an estimated limit of cost of said bridge, and to submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 32: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the Senate amendment, after the word "Reservation," strike out the word "thirty-three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$52,362.62"; on page 11 of the bill, in line 13, strike out the first two words of said line, to wit, "and third"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the proposed amendment, after the word "Indians," insert

the words "in full settlement"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "one hundred and thirty-eight"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the proposed amendment, after the word "appropriated," strike out the word "for" and insert in lieu thereof the words "to complete"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "twenty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the amendment, after the word "of," strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "Congress," in line 12 of the proposed amendment, strike out the colon and insert in lieu thereof a period; strike out the remainder of said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 61: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$66,600"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "sixty-six"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 68: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "fifty-eight"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 71: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the amendment, after the word "attorney," strike out the word "four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "thirty thousand"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 75: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$38,000"; in line 10, page 20, of the bill, strike out the words "hundred and fifty dollars"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 83: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "twenty-six thousand five hundred"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 86: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 86, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "for erection of silo and purchase of ensilage cutter and other farm machinery, $2,000; for purchase of milch cows and other live stock and poultry, $2,000; for erection and completion of hospital building and equipment of same, $12,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "forty-six thousand"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 93: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$7,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 94: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 94, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$90,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 96: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 96, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to extend for a period of one year the time for the payment of any annual installment due or hereafter to become due on the purchase price for lands sold under the act of Congress approved June 17, 1910, entitled 'An act to open to settlement and entry under the general provisions of the homestead laws of the United States certain lands in the State of Oklahoma, and for other purposes,' and upon the payment of interest for one year in advance, at 5 per cent per annum upon the amount due, such payment will be extended for a period of one year, and any payment so extended may annually thereafter be extended for a period of one year in the same manner: Provided, That the last payment and all other payments must be made within a period not exceeding one year after the last payment becomes due by the terms of the act under which the entry was made; that all moneys paid for interest as herein provided shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians as a part of the proceeds received for the lands: Provided further, That failure to make any payment that may be due, unless the same be extended, or to make any extended payments at or before the time to which such payment has been extended as herein provided, will forfeit the entry and the same shall be canceled, and any and all payments theretofore made shall be forfeited: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall affect any valid adverse claim initiated prior to the passage of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 98: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 98, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the amendment, after the word "employees," strike out the words "one hundred and seventy-four" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two hundred"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 100: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "sale" at the end of said amendment insert the following: ": Provided, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, no moneys shall be expended from the tribal funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes without specific appropriation by Congress, except as follows: Equalization of allotments, per capita and other payments authorized by law to individual members of the respective tribes, tribal and other Indian schools for the current fiscal year under existing law, salaries and contingent expenses of governors, chiefs, assistant chiefs, secretaries, interpreters, and mining trustees of the tribes for the current fiscal year, and attorneys for said tribes employed under contract approved by the President, under existing law, for the current fiscal year: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to continue the tribal schools of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations for the current fiscal year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 101: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 101, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For expenses incident to and in connection with collection of rents of unallotted land and tribal buildings, such amount as may be necessary: Provided, That such expenditures shall not exceed in the aggregate 10 per cent of the amount collected."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 102: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to make the appraisement and sale hereinafter provided, $5,000: Provided, That the houses and other valuable improvements, not including fencing and tillage, placed upon the segregated coal and asphalt lands in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, in Oklahoma, by private individuals, while in actual possession of said land and prior to February 19, 1912, and not purchased by the Indian nations, shall be appraised independently of the surface of the land on which they are located and shall be sold with the land at public auction at not less than the combined appraised value of the improvements and the surface of the land upon which they are located. Said improvements shall be sold for cash and the appraisement and sale of the same shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and 95 per cent of the amount realized from the sale of the improvements shall be paid over under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior to the owner of the improvements and the appropriation hereinbefore made for this purpose shall be reimbursed out of the 5 per cent retained from the sale of the said improvements: Provided, That any improvements remaining unsold at the expiration of two years from the time when first offered for sale shall be sold under such regulations and terms of sale, independent of their appraised value, as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided further, That persons owning improvements so appraised may remove the same at any time prior to the sale thereof, in which event the appraised value of the improvements and land shall be reduced by deducting the appraised value of the improvements so removed: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to improvements placed on said lands by coal and asphalt lessees for mining purposes, but improvements located on lands leased for mining purposes belonging to, or heretofore paid for by, the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations shall be appraised and the appraised value thereof shall be added to the appraised value of the land at the time of the sale: Provided further, That where any cemetery now exists on the said segregated coal and asphalt lands, the surface of the land within said cemetery, together with the land adjoining the same, where necessary, not exceeding 20 acres in the aggregate to any one cemetery, and where a church was in existence on said lands on February 19, 1912, land not exceeding 1 acre for each church, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be sold to the proper party, association or corporation, under such terms, conditions, and regulations, as he may prescribe, provided application to purchase the same for such purpose is made within 60 days from the date of the approval of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "resold," in line 7 of the proposed amendment, strike out the colon and insert in lieu thereof a period, and strike out the remainder of the amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 104: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 104, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment insert the following: ", to June 30, 1913"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 105: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 105, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For the construction of a sanitary sewer system in Platt National Park, Okla., to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $17,500: Provided, That the said sum shall be available whenever a like amount is appropriated and made available by the town of Sulphur, Okla., for the same purpose: Provided further, That whenever said appropriation is made by the town of Sulphur, Okla., the entire amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the total appropriation made by this act and the town of Sulphur, Okla., shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 106: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 13 of the proposed amendment, after the word "family" strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That before such payment shall be made, the heirs or legal representatives of said John W. Noble and R. V. Belt shall sign a receipt in full for all claims for the services above specified and file the said receipt with the Secretary of the Interior"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 107: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 107, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "Huff," in line 18 of the proposed amendment, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a colon and the following: "Provided, That before such payments shall be made in full, said Albert J. Lee shall sign a receipt in full for all claims for services as herein specified and file the same with the Secretary of the Interior"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "thirteen," at the end of said amendment, insert the following: ": Provided, That this appropriation shall not be subject to the limitation in section 1 of this act, limiting the expenditure of money to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay for the relief of the Kickapoo Indians in Mexico the sum of $15,000, to be expended in the payment of taxes, salary of farmers, maintenance and repairs of irrigation ditches, indebtedness for supplies already furnished, court costs, and obligations heretofore incurred in settlement of land titles, said sum to be paid to the treasurer of a corporation to be known as the Kickapoo Community of Mexico, to be organized under the laws of the State of Arizona; the organization of said corporation shall be authorized by a majority of the members of the Mexican Kickapoo Indians now residing in the State of Sonora, in the Republic of Mexico, in council assembled."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 112: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be sent to the First National Bank of Douglas, Ariz., checks payable to the order of the individual Indian owners who are members of the band of Mexican Kickapoo Indians now resident in the Republic of Mexico, for and in the amount of all moneys known as lease money now on deposit with or in any manner under the control of the agents and officers of the Interior Department and all like money due or becoming due or collectible by them prior to the 1st day of January, 1914, and belonging to any of the said Mexican Kickapoo Indians."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 113: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 7 and 8 of the proposed amendment, after the word "than," strike out the words "February 1, 1913," and insert in lieu thereof the words "December 1, 1912"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 114: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For the relief and settlement of the Apache Indians now confined as prisoners of war at Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., on lands to be selected for them by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War, $200,000, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War may prescribe."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 122: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 122, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "eleven"; in line 20, page 28, after the first word, "dollars," insert: ": Provided, That $4,000 of this amount shall be used in the construction and maintenance of an irrigation system for the use of said school"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 123: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 123, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "forty-three"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 126: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "sixty-two thousand five hundred"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 129: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 129, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend the unexpended balance, which is hereby reappropriated, of the appropriation of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, appropriated by the act approved March 3, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 1074), 'for the purpose of constructing a bridge across the Duchesne River at or near the town of Theodore, Utah,' for the purpose of straightening the said Duchesne River at or near said bridge, with a view to protecting said bridge."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 130: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 130, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For cash payment to the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, or for expenditure for their benefit, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000, said amount to be reimbursed out of the appropriation, when made, to cover the net amount of the judgment rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of said Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, dated February 13, 1911."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 137: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the conditions on the Yakima Indian Reservation in the State of Washington with a view to determine the best, most practicable, and most feasible plan for providing water for such lands of said reservation as may be irrigated and to cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made thereon, together with an estimated limit of cost of such irrigation project, and to submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912, together with such facts and reasons in support of the same as may be necessary to advise Congress fully in regard thereto."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 143: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 143, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 146: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 146, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "18"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 147: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 147, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$57,170"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 150: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 150, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment, after the word "Wisconsin," strike out the word "nine" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seven"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 156: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 156, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "35,025"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 157: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 157, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For continuing the work of road and bridge construction on the Shoshone Reservation, Wyo., $10,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905: Provided, That this amount shall be expended, as far as practicable, in the employment of Indian labor."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JNO. H. STEPHENS,
C. D. CARTER,
CHAS. H. BURKE,
Managers on the part of the House.
MOSES E. CLAPP,
CHARLES CURTIS,
GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement was read as follows:

STATEMENT.

The department sent in estimates as follows:

Original estimates	$8,517,440.00
Supplemental estimates (H. Doc. No. 432)	281,174.95
Fort Sill supplemental estimate (S. Doc. No. 695)	250,000.00
Chippewas (Turtle Mountain Band)	100,000.00
Total	9,148,614.95

This bill as it passed the House carried an appropriation amounting to $8,149,359.90.

The bill as it passed the Senate, including appropriations out of trust funds and all, $16,383,039.34.

The bill as it was agreed to by the conference committee carries $9,854,184.46, not including Senate amendment 88, which amount is not known.

The Senate conferees have receded on the following amendments: 2, 5, 6, 12, 13, 16, 18, 27, 34, 35, 38, 39, 42, 43, 50, 52, 56, 59, 63, 64, 65, 70, 72, 76, 77, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 95, 99, 108, 109, 115, 125, 127, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 152, 153, and 154.

The House conferees have receded unqualifiedly on the following amendments: 7, 9, 14, 15, 17, 24, 30, 31, 33, 40, 44, 45, 46, 47, 51, 53, 54, 55, 58, 62, 66, 74, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 84, 85, 97, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 124, 128, 136, 144, 145, 148, 149, 151, and 155.

The effect of the recession of the House conferees on the amendments on which they have unqualifiedly receded is as follows:

No. 7. Authorizes the sale of wine for sacramental purposes.

No. 9. To enable the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service to investigate the cause of the prevalence of disease among Indians.

No. 14. To enable the Board of Indian Commissioners to employ a secretary.

No. 15. To increase special agents' allowance from $85,000 to $125,000.

No. 17. To classify and index files in the Indian Office.

No. 24. To make appropriation for Pima Indians for irrigation purposes reimbursable.

No. 30. For salary due Clarence I. Stacy, supervisor of ditches, Pima Indians in Arizona.

No. 31. For salary due N. D. Brayton, physician on said reservation.

No. 33. For continuing the construction of irrigation plants on the Colorado River in Arizona.

No. 40. Increase for improvements, Haskell Institute in Kansas.

No. 44. For purpose of paying balance due John E. Meyer, of Shepherd, Mich., for work at Mount Pleasant Indian School.

No. 45. Increase appropriation at Pipestone School in Minnesota for improvements.

No. 46. For construction of a drain at same school.

No. 47. Totals the above two increases.

No. 51. Striking out the provisions relating to Jocko and Pablo units.

No. 53. Striking out the provisions relating to the Two Medicine units.

No. 54. For continuing the construction of an irrigation system at Fort Peck, Mont.

No. 55. For erection of buildings on the Flathead Indian Reservation in Montana, and for agency purposes.

No. 56. Appropriating $5,000 for the surveying of lands on the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation in Montana.

No. 58. Authorizing an easement on Indian lands bordering Flathead Lake in Montana, to be used for irrigation purposes.

No. 62. For construction of a septic tank at Genoa Indian School in Nebraska.

No. 66. For an addition to girls' dormitory at Albuquerque Indian School in New Mexico.

No. 74. For rebuilding employees' quarters destroyed by fire at the Cherokee Indian School in North Carolina.

No. 78. Purchase of water for irrigating trees, gardens, and so forth, at the Bismarck Indian School in North Dakota.

No. 79. Increase of amount of total of appropriation for the Bismarck school, and as provided in last above amendment.

Nos. 80 and 81. Increase the appropriation for the Fort Totten Indian School in North Dakota.

Nos. 82, 84, and 85. Increase the appropriation for the Wahpeton Indian School in North Dakota.

No. 97. Authorizing the issuance of a patent for lands to the heirs of Buck Bill, as provided by court judgment.

No. 98. Increasing the appropriation for administering the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma.

No. 110. Making appropriation for school purposes in the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma.

No. 116. For the erection of a bridge on the Warm Springs Indian Reservation, Oreg.

No. 117. For payment of amounts of money due certain Indian tribes in Oregon.

Nos. 118 and 119. Increasing the appropriation for improvements at the Carlisle Indian School in Pennsylvania.

No. 120. For the construction and equipment of a gymnasium at the Flandreau Indian School in South Dakota.

No. 121. Fixes the total for above appropriation.

No. 124. Increasing the appropriation for the Rapid City School in South Dakota.

No. 128. To pay amount due A. C. Brink, of Pierre, S. Dak., for repairs to an engine, and other items, for supplying water at the Pierre Indian School.

No. 136. For support of Indian pupils at Cushman Indian School at Tacoma, Wash.

Nos. 144 and 145. For building addition to the dormitories at the Indian school at Hayward, Wis.

Nos. 148 and 149. For improvements and repairs at the Tomah Indian School in Wisconsin.

No. 151. Extending the time of bringing suit under the act of April 4, 1910.

No. 155. Increasing the amount for improvements at the Shoshone Indian School, Wyo.

On the following amendments the House conferees receded with modifying or substitute amendments, to wit:

No. 1. To better enable the department to make individual allotments so as to aid Indians to build homes.

No. 3. For construction and maintenance of irrigation plants.

No. 4. Incidental expenses for irrigation purposes increased to $325,000.

No. 8. For increase from sixty to ninety thousand dollars for the suppression of disease among Indians.

No. 10. A decrease for support of day and industrial schools from $1,450,000 to $1,420,500.

No. 11. An increase for construction and improvements in schools and agencies, from four hundred and twenty-five to four hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars.

No. 19. Decrease in amount of appropriation for salaries and compensation of employees from ten to fifteen thousand dollars.

Nos. 20 and 21. An increase of $1,000 for repairs and improvements in the school at Phoenix, Ariz.

Nos. 22 and 23. An increase of $1,000 for repairs and improvements at the Truxton Canon School in Arizona.

No. 25. For the purpose of conducting an investigation upon the Gila River, Ariz., for the purpose of irrigation for the San Carlos Indians, an increase of from ten to fifteen thousand dollars.

No. 26. For the development of a water supply for the Papago Indians.

No. 28. An appropriation for the purpose of ascertaining the necessity of building a bridge on the San Carlos Reservation in Arizona, a decrease from two to one thousand dollars.

No. 29. An appropriation for the purpose of ascertaining the necessity of building a bridge across the Colorado River at Yuma, Ariz., and for the estimation of its cost.

No. 32. A decrease from thirty-three to twenty-five thousand dollars for the purpose of constructing a dike to protect allotments on the Fort Mojave Indian Reservation in Arizona.

No. 36. An increase from eighteen to fifty-two thousand three hundred and fifty-six dollars and sixty-two cents for maintenance charge on the Yuma irrigation allotments.

No. 37. To make the receipt read in full settlement of claims for damages reimbursing Peter Moctelmy.

No. 41. An increase of $1,000 for repairs and improvements for the Indian school at Haskell, Kans.

No. 48. An appropriation to complete the construction of a bridge across the Clearwater River on Red Lake Indian Reservation in Minnesota.

No. 49. A decrease from twenty-five to twenty thousand dollars for support and civilization of Indians at Fort Belknap, Mont.

No. 57. Striking out the last paragraph of the amendment relating to timber on the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont.

Nos. 60 and 61. An increase for general repairs and improvements from three thousand to forty-five hundred dollars at the Genoa Indian School in Nebraska.

No. 68. An increase for general repairs and improvements from three to five thousand dollars at Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex.

No. 69. Changes the total appropriation for above school as provided for in amendment 68.

No. 71. Providing a special attorney for the Pueblo Indians in New Mexico, a decrease from four to two thousand dollars.

No. 73. A decrease from thirty-one thousand five hundred and sixty to thirty thousand dollars for support and education of pupils at the Cherokee Indian School in North Carolina.

No. 75. For the purpose of rebuilding employees' quarters at above school.

No. 83. A decrease on Senate amendment from twenty-eight thousand five hundred to twenty-six thousand five hundred dollars for support and education of Indians at Wahpeton, N. Dak.

No. 86. Adding an appropriation of $12,500 for the erection and equipment of a hospital at the Wahpeton Indian School.

No. 87. Changing the total for above appropriation at said school.

No. 93. A decrease of $500 for repairs and improvements at the Chiloco Indian School in Kansas.

No. 94. Changing total of the above item.

No. 96. Extending the time of payment for certain Indian lands in Oklahoma and making interest payable annually in advance.

No. 100. Requiring the Secretary of the Interior to pay certain salaries of employees in connection with disposition of tribal property of the Five Civilized Tribes, the same to be reimbursable from tribal funds of the Five Civilized Tribes.

No. 101. An amendment relative to the expenses incident to the collection of tribal revenue, not including royalties on coal and asphalt land in Oklahoma.

No. 102. Relative to appraising improvements on the coal and asphalt lands in Oklahoma.

No. 103. Relative to sale of town lots belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, and the forfeiture for nonpayment, by striking out that part of the amendment relating to cemeteries and churches.

No. 104. Limiting the time of the salary of Douglas H. Johnston, governor of the Chickasaw Nation, to July 1, 1913.

No. 105. For the construction of a sewer on the Platt National Park, in Oklahoma, reducing the amount from $35,000 to $17,500, and providing the town of Sulphur shall pay a like amount before this appropriation is available, all to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

No. 106. To limit the appropriation made to John W. Noble and R. V. Belt to the sum of $3,569.95, to be in full payment of said indebtedness.

No. 107. To limit the appropriation mentioned in this amendment to the amount named therein to read "for settlement in full."

No. 111. Is an appropriation of $15,000 to the Kickapoo Indian community in Mexico for the purpose of paying taxes, salary of farmer, maintenance and repairs to their irrigation ditches, supplies already furnished, court costs, and obligations heretofore incurred.

No. 112. Requiring the payment of lease money due Kickapoo Indians at the First National Bank of Douglas, Ariz.

No. 113. Changing the date for the completion of the classification and appraisement of the coal and asphalt lands in Oklahoma.

No. 114. Releasing as prisoners of war the Apache Indians now held on the Fort Sill Military Reservation, in Oklahoma.

No. 122. An increase of $4,000 for the purpose of constructing an irrigation system at the Pierre Indian School, in South Dakota.

No. 123. Changing the total as per above item No. 122.

No. 129. For the purpose of straightening the channel of the Duchesne River in Utah.

No. 130. Changing the appropriation from $3,305,257.19 to $100,000, the same in part payment of the said judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the Ute Indians in the States of Colorado and Utah.

No. 137. No appropriation carried, but requires the department to submit report and estimated cost for irrigating the Yakima Indian lands in Washington.

No. 143. A reduction of $500 in the appropriation for repairs and improvements in the Hayward Indian School in Wisconsin.

No. 146. Changing the amount appropriated from $20,000 to $18,000.

No. 147. Correcting totals as per above items.

No. 150. A reduction of $2,000 in the appropriation for the support and education of the Pottawatomie Indians in Wisconsin.

No. 156. Changing the appropriation for support and education of pupils at the Shoshone Indian School, in Wyoming, from $35,500 to $35,025.

No. 157. Is an appropriation of $10,000 for the purpose of continuing the construction of roads and bridges on the Shoshone Indian Reservation in Wyoming.

JNO. H. STEPHENS,
C. D. CARTER,
CHAS. H. BURKE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report unless some one desires information on certain portions of the bill. If that is the case, I will yield to him such time as he desires.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I desire some time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How much?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not think I will use it all, but I will say 10 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman from South Dakota 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to state that there was a mistake made in the RECORD of this morning. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] and the Senator from Kansas, Mr. CURTIS, signed this report. It was a unanimous report of the House and Senate. But their names have been omitted from the RECORD by error, for the reason that this report was sent up to the Printing Office, and they neglected to copy the names.

Mr. MANN. Did they not correct the report?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No. The Printing Office having had the matter set up in type, forgot to add the names of these two gentlemen.

Mr. MANN. Did they correct the balance of the report?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They did. It is all right with that exception.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I wished to ask that the RECORD be changed so that it will show I signed the report and statement, and it also ought to show that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] signed the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] asks unanimous consent that the RECORD be corrected to show that he signed this conference report.

Mr. MANN. Properly saying, the conference report as presented to the Senate, which, of course, must have been the same as presented to the House, did have the names of Senator CURTIS and of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] attached to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the RECORD shall be corrected to show that he and Senator CURTIS, of Kansas, signed the conference report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, when the conference report on this bill was before the House two or three days ago it did not meet with my approval and for that reason I did not sign it. I am, however, in accord with this report, did sign it, and I hope that it will be adopted. There are some things that I am not satisfied with and that would be different if I could have had my way, but every gentleman understands that in a conference you can not have your own way on everything, but must yield on some matters very much against your will. There are some things in the bill that I wish were not there and some things are omitted that I regret. One of the reasons that I declined to sign the conference report on the former occasion was because it contained an item to pay the Mexican Kickapoo Indians, now residing in the Republic of Mexico, the sum of $41,000. In this report we have agreed to a compromise and appropriate $15,000 as a gratuity for these Indians, and we have endeavored to provide so that the money will be actually used for the purpose for which it is given. I say "given," because it is a gratuity in the fullest sense, and I think it is the first instance where Congress has made a gratuity appropriation for Indians who have removed from the United States and are residing in a foreign country.

For the purpose of making a record relative to why I objected to agreeing to the original Senate amendment appropriating $41,000 for these Kickapoo Indians, I desire to set forth my reasons therefor, as I have no doubt the matter will again be presented, if not at the next session of Congress then at some future session. My principal objection to the item was based upon the fact that I found, by the Indian appropriation act approved April 30, 1908, that there had been appropriated for the Mexican Kickapoo Indians the sum of $215,000, and the act provided that the payment of the same and the expense thereof should be in final settlement of all claims of every kind whatsoever of the said Mexican Kickapoo Indians against the United States. The entire provision is as follows:

That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $215,000 for the fulfillment of certain treaty obligations to the Mexican Kickapoo Indians for differences arising out of the stipulations of article 4 of the treaty of June 28, 1862, and for all other differences growing out of any and all treaties and agreements heretofore made between said Indians and the United States. Said sum of $215,000 shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury as authorized and directed by a majority of the members of said Mexican Kickapoo Tribe in council assembled. Such council shall be composed of a majority of those surviving members of said tribe, male and female, heretofore allotted in Oklahoma. The authorization above mentioned and the proceedings of said council shall be attested by a clerk of the United States district court of the Territory of Arizona. Said sum shall be immediately available and the indorsement of the warrant issued in payment thereof shall be deemed and shall be a receipt in full for all claims of every kind whatsoever of the said Mexican Kickapoo Indians against the United States, and such authorization to the Secretary of the Treasury by said Indians as herein provided shall be considered to be and shall be an acceptance of said sum in final settlement of all claims of every kind whatsoever of the said Mexican Kickapoo Indians against the United States.

After discovering this item in the act of 1908 I made a careful inquiry to ascertain where it originated and upon what information the legislation was enacted and the appropriation made. I found it was an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill offered in the Senate and concurred in in conference. It was originally embodied in Senate bill 4735, upon which bill a hearing was had and a report made. (S. Doc. 350, 50th Cong., 1st sess.)

The hearing disclosed that Mr. Martin J. Bentley, who has been here for several months urging the appropriation of $41,000, appeared at that time, claiming to have authority to represent the Indians, and he assured the committee that if an appropriation was made nothing further would be asked for, and that it would be in full payment of all claims or demands on the part of these Indians against the United States. In order that there may be no misunderstanding as to what he said, I will read from page 27 of the hearings:

Mr. BENTLEY. Yes, sir; we know that the Government owes us five times the amount we are asking, and we could get a judgment for that if it was referred to the courts, and taking all the circumstances into account, I feel I am doing the best thing for the Indians; that I am only asking for practically a pittance of the amount that is due them, but a dollar to-day to them might be worth more than $40 at some future time. Again, this amount of money will be sufficient to put them in a position where they can secure a home and estate that will support them, and they will not need to ask anything further from the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Have they authorized you to settle all their claims and demands against the Government for $300,000?

Mr. BENTLEY. I have had authority from them time and time again, which appears in these records, binding themselves to ratify my acts, and this bill, looking to a final settlement, that you have before you will, if it becomes a law, be a receipt when the Indians accept the money from the United States. The bill was so drawn that the Government will be absolutely protected against any future claim of these Indians, and they in good faith understand clearly and fully what the proposition is.

The CHAIRMAN. They understand now that you are here in the interest of this bill?

Mr. BENTLEY. Yes, sir; they understand it fully. A year ago we would have been satisfied to have taken the one claim of $215,000, and the committee passed on that favorably and recommended it, as they did the year before, but time has gone on and their estate has been dissipated because of being held up by the departments of the Government, and we have finally gotten into a condition where it will require the sum named in this bill to put us in such shape that we can take care of ourselves, and for this reason the Indians are willing for the consideration named in the bill to absolve the United States from any and all obligations, financial or otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. I notice that your bill provides that the indorsement of the warrant issued in payment thereof shall be taken and shall be a receipt in full for all claims. The indorsement of whom?

Mr. BENTLEY. By the person or persons authorized by the majority of the tribe in council to receipt and receive the money provided for in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. You ought to put that in the bill.

Mr. BENTLEY. It is in the bill, I think. It is specifically provided that the indorsement of the warrant on which the money shall be paid shall be a receipt in full and shall be indorsed.

It is claimed that the $41,000 amount was for moneys expended subsequent to the passage of the act of April 30, 1908, in defending suits instituted by the Government, compelling them to be to great expense, and that when the act of 1908 was passed and the appropriation made it did not bar them from making this claim, but it was stated by Mr. Bentley in the hearings that they needed the appropriation in order to pay expenses that would be incurred in defending suits, and so forth. In other words, he urged the appropriation that they might have money to meet just such expenses as the present claim is based upon.

I also found that there was no question but what the committee fully expected that the appropriation would be a final settlement, as the report of the subcommittee concludes as follows:

The payment of the small sum will enable the Government to satisfy a large and very embarrassing claim for an amount far less than the sum due. At the same time it will rid itself finally and for all time of all supervision over and responsibility for the affairs of these oft-reputed "unreasonably stubborn, nonprogressive" people. They are, at the present time, in a foreign country without a home and without means to procure a livelihood. They went there by the advice of the United States Senators. They will not return. They have been impoverished and disgraced by the unwise attempts on the part of agents of the Government to compel their return. Never have they been in such need of assistance as now, and the small sum they offer to accept will enable them to procure the long-desired home where they may again see their tribe increase in strength.

When the amendment was offered in the Senate, on February 28, 1908 (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 2655), proposing to appropriate $300,000 to pay these Indians, it was fully stated that it was to be a full settlement, as will appear by what transpired at the time (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 60th Cong., 1st sess., pp. 2655–2656):

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I should like the Senator to explain the amendment somewhat. Has it been recommended by the department?

Mr. CLAPP. No, sir; I was going to state to the Senate that the department is opposed to this measure. The department was opposed to it last session. Last session, if I recall correctly, we put it on the bill in the form of an amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. And it was lost in conference. A statement covering this matter would necessarily be a very long one and would go into the history of the tribe. They have a very large claim, as they allege. The committee has gone over it very carefully, and, notwithstanding the attitude of the department, the committee by a majority voted in favor of recommending the payment of $215,000 in final settlement of this claim.

These Indians are known as the Kicking Kickapoos, and they have been trying for some time, at least a large number of them, to get to Mexico. Arrangements have been partially made once or twice whereby they could have secured a large tract of land in Mexico had the Government not withheld what it owed them. I am speaking now not of the $215,000 but the money which was actually in the Treasury and which we have heretofore voted to them. They were further embarrassed by the fact that notwithstanding a plain and direct authorization by Congress to 17 of them, I think, to dispose of their allotments in Oklahoma, the permission was withheld, and it was brought again to the attention of Congress.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has given the details of this matter more study than has the chairman of the committee. It is one of those cases where, perhaps, without being able to point out specifically the various steps upon which the claim is founded, I for one have no hesitation in standing here and saying that I believe we should pay these Indians this sum of money.

My own view would be that we owe them much more than this, but I believe that this granted to them now while their negotiations are pending for land in Mexico which they want, surrounded by conditions much more congenial to them than the conditions of Oklahoma, will enable them to be placed in a position where they will in every way be self-sustaining. They prefer this. A good many of them have been trying for years to get away, insisting that they would not remain in the United States. As I said before, the Senator from Colorado knows all the details. I can only say to the Senate, for one, that I am thoroughly satisfied that we ought to make this settlement with this tribe of Indians.

Mr. GALLINGER made further inquiry.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say to the Senator that the committee has twice reported this favorably heretofore. This is the third time. I do not want to discuss it. It would take an hour or two.

Mr. GALLINGER. If this amendment should become law, it would be a final adjustment with these Indians?

Mr. TELLER. A final adjustment.

Mr. GALLINGER. The amendment provides that they shall relinquish all claims against the Government?

Mr. TELLER. Everything. I join with the Senator from Minnesota in saying that I think they would recover if they went into the court for three or four times this amount. I say that as a lawyer, having examined the case during the last four or five years.

Mr. GALLINGER. They would have rights in court if this was denied to them?

Mr. TELLER. They need something right now. It is a question of life or death. I shall be content if we can have a vote on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

In the statement filed by the House conferees explaining the amendment making the appropriation, which was a compromise on the amount as it passed the Senate, it is stated it is to be a full settlement, and I quote from the statement as follows:

Amendment No. 82 provides for the payment of $215,000 as a full and complete settlement of all differences growing out of all treaties between the United States and the Mexican Kickapoo Indians, and provides that the receipt of said money shall be a discharge in full of all claim and demand of said Indians against the United States.

If there was no other reason than what I have shown as to why these Indians should not now be paid further money, I think it will be admitted that this is sufficient. There are, however, other very good and sufficient reasons why we ought not to appropriate a dollar for the Kickapoo Indians residing in Mexico. They appear to be under the complete control of Martin J. Bentley. He had much to do in inducing them to remove from Oklahoma to the Republic of Mexico. That of the $215,000 appropriated in 1908 he received for his services $26,000, and then withheld the sum of $8,000 to reimburse himself for moneys that he claims to have expended for them. By the terms of the act making the appropriation the portion of the money that went to the Indians in Mexico was paid to Mr. Bentley, and he had the disbursement of it without being required to give any bond or account for the expenditure of the fund. As might be expected, the money is gone, and about all that the Indians have is a tract of land in Mexico, aggregating about 28,000 acres, and the title to that is in Mr. Bentley. I might say, however, that, at the instance of the conferees, he has now executed a proper declaration of trust, and the same will be filed with the Department of the Interior, so that the Indians will in the future be protected in their title to the land.

The statement filed in support of the $41,000 was not accompanied by any vouchers, and originally showed that practically the entire amount was expended before the appropriation of April 30, 1908; but when the attention of Mr. Bentley was called to the fact that the act stated that it was to be a final settlement, the statement was mutilated and dates were changed, showing many of the expenditures later than April 30, 1908, thereby destroying any value that it may have had as evidence; and before making an appropriation to pay any amount that might justly be due the Indians there should be a most careful inquiry and a full investigation of the whole subject, which could not be done in conference. The Indians are in distress; they owe $15,000, a portion of the amount being for taxes on their lands, and while I do not wish to be understood as favoring the payment of any money to Indians in a foreign country, I have reluctantly consented to the compromise that was arrived at by the conferees, and, as I have before stated, we have endeavored to provide that the money shall be expended for the purpose for which it is appropriated.

Another reason why I objected to the former conference report, and the principal reason, was because the Senate receded from its amendment appropriating $100,000 for district agents in the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma. I have discussed the subject at length in the House on several occasions, first when the bill was considered in the Committee of the Whole, and again the other day when the conference report was under consideration. I am not therefore going to discuss it at any length at this time, but I want to call the attention of the House to misleading statements that are being made from time to time relating to these district agents by the gentlemen on the other side of the House from Oklahoma; but I do not wish in doing so to in any way criticize or impugn their motives, because I believe that whatever they represent they say so believing that they are stating facts, and when making statements that are not facts or that are exaggerated they have been misinformed and imposed upon by some one, probably some of their constituents, who purposely deceive and mislead them from some selfish standpoint. I want to call attention to one or two statements made by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] the other day, and I hope to have his attention while I do so. He made the statement that it was impossible to get from the Interior Department a statement showing the moneys expended for the Five Civilized Tribes. There never has been any trouble to get such a statement, as there have been annual reports showing exactly the amount collected and disbursed, the source of the collections, and the purpose of expenditures. I want to call his attention to the fact that he will find in the RECORD a statement of all moneys expended for the Five Civilized Tribes for the years 1908, 1909, 1910, 1911, on page 11130 of the RECORD, in some remarks submitted by me on August 16, of this year.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. With pleasure.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I want to ask the gentleman if in that statement it shows or draws a distinction between the money expended, which was United States Government funds, and as between the funds of the respective tribes?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say it does show it in the minutest detail to a cent.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I will say this to the gentleman, that my statement was based upon a letter addressed to the Interior Department August 11, to which they replied that it would be impossible for them to give it; that it would take three months' time and very much work.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, this is not the matter that I wanted particularly to call the gentleman's attention to, but I was simply giving him this information in order that he may know where he can get a statement of the receipts and disbursements up to the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, so that hereafter he can not claim that no statement can be obtained.

Mr. DAVENPORT. If the gentleman will permit one further question I am through. Is it not a fact that the statement made by the Secretary of the Interior in 1908 to the Speaker of this House and the statement the gentleman incorporated in the RECORD are essentially different?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think not; I think they are substantially alike.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I think they are very different.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There was one item that was inadvertently carried in the statement as a debit, when it should have been a credit, but the statement was corrected almost immediately afterwards by the department.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will if I can have a little more time.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, these matters of district agents and expenditures of tribal funds have been repeatedly thrashed out, both in the committee room and upon the floor of this House, and there is nothing to be gained by taking up the time of the House in the closing hours of the session by rehashing these already fully discussed questions. They were discussed before the subcommittee making up the Indian appropriation bill and reported favorably to the general committee. After a discussion of several days before the entire committee, upon a full attendance of said committee, both matters were reported to this House by a substantial majority of the committee. When we first passed the Indian appropriation bill several days were given to the discussion of these two topics, and after this full and lucid debate the Committee of the Whole House sustained the action of the Indian Committee by a substantial majority. The House then adopted the report of the Committee of the Whole by a substantial majority. Two days ago, during consideration of the Senate's disagreement to our conference report, a separate vote was again taken upon this item of district agents, and the action of your committee was again sustained by eliminating that appropriation. On the same occasion the House again sustained the Indian Committee on the proposition of restricting the department in the use of tribal funds; and I now desire to ask only this one question of the gentleman from South Dakota and then I am through: Is it not a fact that the Interior Department has furnished to this House three distinct and separate statements as to the amount of expenditures made from tribal funds; and is it not a fact that those three statements all differed as to the amount which had been expended, not only from the tribal funds, but from the Federal funds, in the administration of the Five Civilized Tribes?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think not.

Mr. CARTER. Then I will again call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the first statement given to the subcommittee making up the Indian appropriation bill and placed in the RECORD by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] set forth that, in round numbers, $1,308,000 had been expended for this purpose from both tribal and the Federal funds. They then made another statement from the same office setting out something like $1,177,000 as the total amount expended from both funds; and a still more recent statement to our conference committee from the same source sets out, as I remember, $1,190,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As I stated before, I think there was an item of $90,000 which was erroneously charged as a debit when it should have been a credit. That, however, was corrected by the supplemental statement made to me and while the bill was being considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and when the first statement was put in the RECORD it was known that it had been corrected, and it was therefore unfair and misleading to have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CARTER. How do you account for the more recent statement of $1,190,000?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That was the corrected statement that was made that I have referred to, and it is a correct statement.

Mr. CARTER. But the fact remains that the three different statements of the same transaction for the same period of time by the same department differed as follows: First, $1,308,000; second, $1,177,000; and third, $1,190,000. Who can say which is correct?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That was on account of the error I referred to, of charging a certain amount as a debit instead of a credit. I do not recall ever seeing any statement showing the amount to be $1,117,000.

Mr. CARTER. Oh, yes; the three reports set out three different sums—$1,308,000, $1,177,000, and $1,190,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to obtain a statement at this time showing exactly what the expenditures have been for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1912, but that statement will be available in the very near future, and surely will be available by the time Congress reconvenes in December.

The particular thing that I want to call to the attention of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] is the statement that he made the other day when the conference report was under consideration. The gentleman stated that when a piece of land is sold they take every dollar of the expense out of the proceeds of the sale, and he cited one alleged instance where a tract of land was sold for $200, belonging to one Jim Daly, of Bartlesville, and $36 was taken out of the $200 to cover the expense of advertising. I have caused an inquiry to be made with reference to that transaction, and I have received a telegram from the superintendent of the Union Agency saying that this land which the gentleman from Oklahoma says was sold for $200 was sold for $780, and that instead of there being an expense of $36 the total expense and the only amount deducted from the proceeds was $2.50 for advertising.

It will be observed that the facts are quite different from what the gentleman from Oklahoma stated, and it certainly will be an easy matter for him to ascertain exactly what the facts are, and if he finds the statement of the superintendent is true he ought to acknowledge it, which I believe he will do.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, in that connection I want to ask the gentleman this question: If he has been so diligent in securing that information, why was he not diligent enough to get the Interior Department to answer my letter of April last, when I asked the department to furnish me with the information?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is a proper interrogation and the gentleman ought not to expect me to yield for such a question.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Somebody took $36 out of the money, whether it was $780 or $200 for which the land was sold.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say that, instead of somebody taking $36 from him, if he got the $780 it would all be taken from him very promptly if not protected by the Government, and because the district agents do protect the Indians is the principal reason why there is such a clamor to get rid of them.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I am talking about the $200 sale, not the $780 sale, and Long, the district agent, says he took out $36.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman made a further statement the other day and I will quote the substance of what he said. This is the substance of his statement: In the case of Jackson Barnett, a Creek Indian, who made a lease for 160 acres for $40 bonus, he states the Union Agency required an additional $200 bonus, making $240, which was recommended for approval. He further states that it was discovered that Barnett was a weak-minded Indian, not competent to make a lease, and that a guardian was appointed by the probate court, Judge Johns presiding, and that the lease sold for $2,400 bonus, and that when he was home a few weeks ago he was personally in Judge Johns's court and the district agent, Mr. Farrar, representing Barnett, claiming his right as the agent of the Government, appeared and offered a motion to set aside the proceedings and insisted that the first lease for $240 bonus should be approved, and that Jackson Barnett should lose $2,160, and that that was the way the district agents are proceeding, of which no mention is made.

That is substantially the statement made by the gentleman. Now, as to the facts: The superintendent advises me that the lease was for oil and gas; that said Barnett, who was an adult, made a first lease for $40 bonus early in March of this year, prior to discovery of oil in that immediate vicinity; that when the lease was submitted the oil inspector was directed to make an investigation, and considered the bonus value at that time should be $240; that subsequently a good well was developed in the same locality, which materially increased the demand for leases and the speculative value. It appears that on a showing of Barnett's incompetency made before Judge Johns, of the Okmulgee County court, a guardian was appointed, and another lease was made with the approval of the court on May 1 for a $2,400 bonus, the land having increased in value by reason of developments on adjoining lands since March, when the first lease was taken.

The superintendent further states that the relatives and friends of Barnett represented to District Agent Farrar that Barnett was competent, and prevailed upon him to ask the county court to discharge the guardian, which the court refused to do, and that the matter was carried up and litigation continued on appeal by lessees who had paid the $2,400 bonus, at which time Farrar withdrew from the case.

The district agent could not have insisted to the court that the first lease of $240 be approved, for the reason that the court would have no jurisdiction in the matter provided the guardian was dismissed, the Indian being an adult; but it would then be a question whether the superintendent would recommend to the department the approval of the original lease for a bonus of $240, which he certainly would not do in view of the great increase in value in the lease, and he apparently had no other purpose but to get the lease already made by the probate court disapproved in order that it might be leased at its actual value, which it appears was $4,600, as I will show.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. DAVENPORT. In that connection, to stop the argument, I should like to read these two telegrams——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I decline to let the gentleman read a telegram in my time. He can have the opportunity in his own time.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I should like the opportunity to show that the superintendent has secured for this Indian a bonus of $4,600.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I decline to yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like the gentleman's attention.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I am listening.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The superintendent further states that when considering the two conflicting leases, the first one made by Barnett in March for $240 bonus, and the subsequent one to another party for $2,400, he satisfied himself that a sufficient showing had been made to warrant the guardianship for Barnett; but as the land was located in Creek County, while the lease was approved by Judge Johns, of Okmulgee County, where the court had no knowledge or facilities for ascertaining the value of the property, but accepted $2,400 offered May 1, when in fact the lease was actually worth much more, subject to the approval of the department; and with the knowledge and approval of County Judge Johns, of Okmulgee County, the superintendent recently adjusted the controversy by the lessee agreeing to pay what should be considered a fair bonus at the date Judge Johns approved the lease for $2,400, and which, in the opinion of the superintendent, was worth $4,600 instead of $2,400, thereby saving $2,200 in cash to the Indian.

Mr. Speaker, the point I want to make is that in the very case cited by the gentleman, as the result of the activities and presence of the district agent in that locality, $2,200 was obtained for that Indian over what the county court would have obtained for him upon the lease which the court had approved.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Will the gentleman yield now for a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. DAVENPORT. The superintendent forgot to tell the gentleman that I immediately left Judge Johns's court room and filed a protest against the approval, did he not?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I know nothing about what the gentleman did, but presume he did what he states.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I did.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The statement made by the United States agent at Muskogee explains these charges or statements made by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT]. I stated at the outset that I had no intention of impugning his motives, for I believe he stated what had been represented to him as the facts in relation to this transaction. It simply shows that gentlemen are imposed upon; that they get up here and make extravagant statements, believing the facts to be as they relate them. I mention it in order that in future they may be more careful in what they say. One word as to the conference report. It carries a sufficient amount so that, in my judgment, the district agents, or most of them, will be continued for this fiscal year. Did I not believe so, I would not favor the adoption of the report. I would not have signed it, because I have repeatedly stated that I would not consent to any report that proposed to take away from these poor, helpless people—and when I say "helpless people" I refer to the 36,000 full-blood Indians who need all the protection it is possible for the Federal Government to give them. To take away the district agents would mean, in my opinion, that in a very few years they would be despoiled and robbed of what they have and would be paupers, and the State of Oklahoma, while being responsible for the support, would neglect them, refuse to care for them, but would come to Congress and ask for appropriations for their maintenance.

Oklahoma ought to understand that when the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes are finally concluded the United States will have nothing further to do with them, and that if they become paupers will not be responsible for their support any more than for other citizens of that State.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that in the consideration of this conference report the accusation and counter accusation that had heretofore been brought by the gentlemen who hold a different view from the Representatives from Oklahoma had ceased. The provisions of this bill were considered fully by the House before it went to conference, and this is the second time the conference report has been before the House for consideration.

In the presentation of the contention of the Representatives from Oklahoma the facts have been presented in a way which they believe to be right and fair to all parties interested. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] or the Interior Department, one or the other—and I know not which—has been freely using the wires at the expense of the United States Government for the last few weeks in order to get indorsements from the people in Oklahoma favoring the retention of the district Indian agents, and also to secure information presenting a different view from the facts submitted by the Representatives from Oklahoma. This is the first time, as disclosed by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that the Interior Department has gone to the extreme it has in order to try to save a number of its employees, and in their efforts to do so statements have been made upon the floor of the House without any facts to substantiate them.

A few days ago when I mentioned the Day and Barnett cases I stated the facts as I knew them and as the records disclosed them. To-day it is sought by the gentleman from South Dakota, backed up by the Interior Department, to discredit those facts and to show a different state of facts. I desire to say to this House, and upon my honor as a Member of the House, and as a man who has lived in the Indian Territory 22 years, and as a man whose family is of Indian blood, whose wife and children first saw the light of day and were reared in the Cherokee Nation, that there have been statements made by Members of this House on this floor with reference to the Oklahoma Representatives not being loyal to the Indians in Oklahoma which are untrue, and the gentlemen making them would have known they were untrue had they sufficiently investigated the facts and conditions in the Indian Territory.

The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] a few moments ago read what purported to be a telegraphic statement from the superintendent of the Indian agency at Muskogee, Okla., regarding the Jackson Barnett case, by which statement the superintendent, Mr. Kelsey, sought to show that he was responsible for the lease on the Barnett land, which lease had been taken by an oil company, the oil company agreeing to pay Barnett $40 bonus on the land, and which lease had been recommended for approval by the district Indian agent for the said bonus of $40. This statement and explanation read by the gentleman from South Dakota was evidently procured from the district agent at Muskogee since I called attention to the Barnett case in my remarks when the motion to send this bill to conference was being considered two days ago, and evidently they are trying to have the last say on this proposition and thereby lead the Members of this House to believe that the Representatives from Oklahoma are not stating the facts.

I desire to say that I was present in Judge Johns's court in Okmulgee County, where the district Indian agent filed his written protest to have the order appointing a guardian for Jackson Barnett set aside, and in the hearing upon the motion of the district Indian agent it developed that he was urging the approval of the lease, which had been taken on the Barnett land for a bonus of $40, and recommended for approval by this district Indian agent, and it also developed at the hearing that when the lease was sent in to the Union Agency at Muskogee the agent there had required the lessee to pay an additional bonus of $200, making a total of $240 which Barnett would have received had the original lease which the district Indian agent and the superintendent at Muskogee recommended for approval been approved. The guardian of Barnett had sold the lease through the court for a bonus of $2,400. When I saw what the district Indian agents were doing in this case I returned to Washington and filed a protest with the Secretary of the Interior asking him not to approve the first lease, and also asked him to furnish me a report showing the original lease and the recommendations of the district agent and the Indian superintendent at Muskogee, and to this good day he has not done so. He did send the original lease, with some other papers, to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House, and that is as far as they have gone with the case; but I believe had I not filed the protest with the Secretary of the Interior before this time the original lease would have been approved and Jackson Barnett would have been deprived of $2,400, which his lease sold for through the court. Yet with my protest pending before the Secretary of the Interior we are confronted with a message from the superintendent endeavoring to claim that he investigated the matter and is responsible for the increase of bonus Barnett received. This statement by the superintendent is not true and comes with bad grace at this late date, as his office had recommended the approval of the original lease. Not only did my protest prevent the approval of the original lease, but it has been the means by which the parties who hold the original lease and the parties who bought the same from the guardian getting together and agreeing to pay $4,600 bonus for the lease on the lands of Jackson Barnett.

I have just received from both parties a message to that effect.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the messages that I have received be read into the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

MUSKOGEE, OKLA., August 22, 1912.

Hon. JAMES DAVENPORT,
Washington, D. C.:

We have been representing Bartlett in Jackson Barnett lease contest. Have adjusted controversy satisfactory to Gooch and Cornelius. Would appreciate early approval of lease to Bartlett and assignment to Southwest Oil Co., which is Gooch's company. County commissioner of Okmulgee has approved settlement.

RAMSEY & THOMAS.

MUSKOGEE, OKLA., August 22, 1912.

Hon. JAMES DAVENPORT,
Washington, D. C.:

Jackson Barnett lease has been settled in a way entirely satisfactory to us. We want lease to Bartlett approved. Bartlett has assigned us sufficient interest. Have increased lease bonus to $4,600. Guardian has joined in Bartlett lease. We believe that nothing further should be said about this lease, and all we want is an early approval of lease to Bartlett. Lease and assignment will be forwarded in next few days.

IRA CORNELIUS.
H. B. GOOCH.

It seems to me that any fair-minded man who will examine into the affairs in Oklahoma can understand that the appropriation sought to be included in this bill for the district Indian agents is unnecessary. I can cite you case after case where the parties are compelled to buy teams by the district Indian agents that they have no use for when the agents would refuse to give them a dollar of the money which the agent had received by reason of the selling of the Indian's land. Neither the Secretary of the Interior nor the district agents in Oklahoma in the Five Civilized Tribes have any jurisdiction of the lands of any of the Indians in the Five Civilized Tribes, except the restricted Indians where the restrictions have not been removed under the provisions of the act of May 27, 1908. The Indian is an intelligent American citizen and has been relieved from the bondage cast upon him by reason of the treaty stipulations, and the would-be guardians and protectors of the Indians can only control the restricted Indians' property.

Anyone, by referring to the act of May 27, 1908, can see the class of Indians in the Five Civilized Tribes that are restricted. All Indians by blood of less than half blood are unrestricted as to all their allotment, and from half blood to three-quarter blood are unrestricted as to their surplus land, and therefore you will see that it is only the homestead of the Indian from one-half blood to three-quarter blood that is restricted and from three-quarter blood to full blood the entire allotment is restricted.

I desire now to repeat the statement I made on the 8th of April last when this bill was up for consideration, and that is, that the Indians in Oklahoma are as competent to manage their own affairs as are the district Indian agents sent into Oklahoma to manage the affairs of the restricted Indians. It is simply a question of a job for these employees and an effort by many of the Members to save their appointees in that country.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] referred to a conveyance of some Indian girl, wherein he claims she only received $15 for her allotment. He did not present to this House affidavits or records showing this to be a fact, but if he had done so, the answer could have easily been made, and that is, if the allotment was sold at all it was done in the face of the district Indian agents, as the sale could not have been made had not the district agents known of the transaction. If the gentleman from Kansas had investigated the matter he could have learned that none but restricted Indians were controlled by the district agents in the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, and I submit that the appropriation for the district agents is not needed and should not be included in the bill; that they are parasites, holding on to their jobs in the Five Civilized Tribes, and sucking the lifeblood from the restricted Indians' property that is under their control.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the other day when the Indian appropriation bill was before the House I asked for a separate vote on the motion made by the gentleman from Texas to disagree to all the Senate amendments, so that we might vote separately on Senate amendments 104, 110, 111, 112, 114, and 117. It was then in order for any gentleman of the House who desired to concur in any of these Senate amendments to offer a preferential motion to concur in the amendment. No one made such a preferential motion. We had a rising vote on the question of disagreeing to these Senate amendments.

I believe the vote was unanimous in favor of disagreeing to all of the amendments, no one having the hardihood to move to concur in any of them. I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman from Texas how many of these amendments have been disagreed to in conference and how many have been agreed to in conference.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to make a statement after the gentleman is through?

Mr. MANN. That is what I am trying to get.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Number 114 is with reference to the Fort Sill Reservation, known as the Apache prisoners of war.

Mr. MANN. I do not want to take time to discuss the merits of the different propositions. The gentleman knows what the amendments are, I think, perfectly well. Amendment 105 is agreed to, as I understand, in the conference report. Amendment 110 is agreed to in the conference report. Amendment 111 with some slight modification—I think a desirable modification—has been agreed to. I am not complaining about that. Amendment 112 is agreed to with a modification as previously agreed to, and amendment 114 is agreed to a little more expensively or a great deal more expensively than it was provided for in the Senate amendment. Amendment No. 117 is agreed to. I would just like to know the attitude of mind—the frame of mind—of the House conferees, who, having risen on their feet and voted to disagree to the Senate amendments on a rising vote, on six of them, then go into conference, notwithstanding the virtual instruction of the House, and agree to all of the six amendments, when they did not dare to make a motion in the House to concur in any of them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the gentleman that my only desire was to have a full and free conference, so as to send the bill back to conference. It was for that purpose that the motion was made and sustained by the House.

Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss at length Indian legislation with reference to Minnesota, and as I would not have the time to do that now, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon that subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. CLAYTON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I think I ought to object to that request, as the other day the gentleman got rather miffed over some request that was refused him and denied all of us the right to extend our remarks in the RECORD upon the question of the Coosa Dam.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it will not hurt my feelings if the gentleman objects.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. But out of personal consideration for the gentleman——

Mr. MANN. Not at all. The gentleman can object if he wants to.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Seeing that it is who it is, I will not make any objection. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs a question.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The Indian appropriation bill as it came from the Senate carried an appropriation to pay the confederated bands of Ute Indians a judgment of the Court of Claims amounting to three million three hundred and five thousand and odd dollars. The conferees have agreed upon the sum of $100,000. For public information and for the purpose of the record I wish to ask the chairman of the committee upon what, if any, information the conferees acted in agreeing upon this sum, with reference to its sufficiency for the needs of the Utes, until such time as they can be further provided for at the next session of Congress?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman that there had been an annuity of $50,000 granted these Indians, reimbursable by treaty, for several years. Two years ago or a little more, as has been shown by the debates in this House recently, a judgment was rendered for something over $3,000,000, and that was carried in the Senate amendment. That amendment was disagreed to in the House, and the conferees refused, at the instance of the House, to accept the Senate amendment. But we restored to these Indians the gratuity that had been given them for several years, which is $50,000 a year for two years, and which makes $100,000, with the statement that whatever amounts shall be found due them in claims against the Government shall be taken from the amount we give them as a gratuity this year.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It is the opinion of the Indian Office that this amount, $100,000, will carry the Utes over until the next Congress?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the supplemental estimate submitted to the committee in regard to this matter. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] 10 minutes and I will couple with that the request that at the end of the 10 minutes the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand the gentleman from Oklahoma desires five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. I am not sure I shall use that much time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can move the question at any time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I will modify my statement and yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, these are days when nearly every individual has a platform of his own, composed of planks of his own manufacture, nailed down by nails of his own selection with a hammer that he favors. In harmony with that independence common to this hour I conclude it is possible for me to agree to some and disagree with other features of this report and proper to express my views. However, I am not going to take this occasion to express disapproval of any items in the bill. I desire to discuss with approval certain features that have attracted criticism. I feel it is only just to some of us who have been fairly active in support of these items and an act due to the items themselves that a statement should be made in reference to their character. I refer to the items criticized to-day and on former occasions by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. The first one to which I desire to call attention is amendment No. 105—that which provides an appropriation of $17,500 to aid in the building of a sewer at the Platt National Park in Oklahoma. The fact that there have been repeated statements made upon the floor of this House that this is not an Indian project, has no place in an Indian bill, and that any expenditure of Government money in its support can not be justified under any circumstance, may lead some to believe this appropriation is not possessed of real merit. This item is an eminently proper one, and should have been passed years ago. They tell us this is not Indian soil, not on an Indian reservation. Mr. Speaker, it is in the very heart of the Chickasaw territory and is identified—perhaps to a greater extent than any other spot in the South—with Indian lore, Indian history, and Indian song. Indian life has centered there for three-quarters of a century, and the spot is hallowed in Indian thought.

The Wichita Mountains, rolling to the eastward, gently fade into the landscape at Sulphur. From near the summit of a hill gushes forth a great spring, and the stream there formed leaps down the valley, forming rapids and cataracts and pools of surpassing beauty. When well down the slope it passes by other springs of marvelous medicinal value. The sulphur springs and the bromide spring of that place in their power to bring departing health back to man are the equal of any of the celebrated springs of the world. By reason of the moderate elevation climatic conditions at this spot are particularly good.

Platt National Park embraces these springs and the upper part of the valley. The city of Sulphur had its limits defined, as far as this park is concerned and its location in that vicinity, by the Government. The contour of the land is such as to drain directly from the city into the stream in the park and above several of these health springs. If the Government is to own this park, then the Government must do something to relieve present conditions, for much of the flowage is over Government land. The estimate for the work is $35,000, and this item provides that Sulphur and the Government shall each pay half, an eminently proper arrangement, it seems to me.

And I am one of those, Mr. Speaker, who believes that the Government should own, develop, and beautify this park, not for its scenic qualities, but for its health-giving powers. Conservation of the elements of wealth is to-day most popular; the program has to do with material wealth—lands and forests and mines.

How infinitely more important is the conservation of the sources of health. What are water power and coal mines compared with life and health? Such springs as these should never get into the hands of private ownership, to be exploited for private profit. They should be developed by the Government and offered free to suffering humanity.

This is an ideal spot upon which to construct a sanitarium, to which can be sent convalescing soldiers and sailors from the Tropics. Such an institution is emphatically needed, and here is the place to build it.

In reference to amendment numbered 111, I think the gentleman from Illinois will agree with me that this is not the amendment to which the objection was raised the other day. No. 111, which is here in the conference report for our agreement or disagreement this morning, is not at all similar to that to which objection was raised the other day by the gentleman and other Members of the House. This does not propose to reimburse the Kickapoo Indians in any way for anything they may have suffered in the past along the line then discussed. It simply provides a gratuity of $15,000 to the Kickapoos now in Mexico. The question now is, Do they need it? That is certain. Whatever may have been the history of the Kickapoos, or the branch thereof that now lives in Mexico, they are in an extremely precarious condition at the present time. They are surrounded by fighting federals and fighting rebels, and their lives and property are jeopardized. The natural resources of these people have been curtailed, and they find themselves in a position of want. The money which heretofore was paid to them one way or another has been exhausted. As I understand, this particular branch of the Indians has not received a gratuity from the hands of the Government in a large number of years. This simply provides that $15,000 may be expended by the Secretary of the Interior to aid these Indians in their present pressing condition, to pay for farmers in doing their work, teaching them in their work, aiding them in the completion of the irrigation ditches they have constructed and nearly completed, and for other matters.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman if he wishes to be understood as favoring a policy of making gratuity appropriations in the aid of an Indian tribe that does not reside in the United States?

Mr. MILLER. As a policy I answer immediately, no; I do not. But I do think that the present condition of these Indians requires some assistance, and this is probably the easiest way out of the difficulty. I would not want to consider this as a precedent at all; not in any sense of the term.

Now, a word or two in respect to amendment No. 112. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], when this measure first came up from the other legislative body in this Capitol, used pretty strong language against amendment 112, based upon the fact that the money would be paid to a bank in Douglas, Ariz., and payment to the bank would be a receipt in full, as far as the Indians were concerned, whether they ever got it or not. His criticism was absolutely sound. There was no adverse opinion here, and there could have been none at that time. Recognizing the correctness of the gentleman's position, the conferees have so redrafted and so reframed this that it appears to me to be a perfectly feasible proposition and one that can be carried out without injuring the Indains at all. There is due to a large number of these Indians certain sums, arising as a usufruct of lands in Oklahoma and other parts of the country, and the money should be paid to them in some way. It is a positive governmental crime that Indians on the verge of starvation or in pressing want have funds sleeping in the Government Treasury and which they can not get. The thing to do here and now is to get this money to these Indians, whose money it is, and who need it very badly. It would be practically impossible to send the money into Mexico, under the difficulties there existing, and pay it to them there. Douglas, Ariz., is on the border line, the nearest American point to the Indians, and the method of payment here devised is not open to any of the objections heretofore urged.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BULKLEY). The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. RAKER, Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, Mr. MILLER, Mr. CARTER, Mr. FERRIS, and Mr. SMALL were granted leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the following statements in reference to this bill:

The department sent in estimates as follows:

Original estimates	$8,517,440.00
Supplemental estimates (H. Doc. No. 432)	281,174.95
Fort Sill supplemental estimate (S. Doc. No. 695)	250,000.00
Chippewas (Turtle Mountain Band)	100,000.00
Total	9,148,614.95

This bill as it passed the House carried an appropriation amounting to $8,149,359.90.

The bill as it passed the Senate, including appropriations out of trust funds and all, carried $16,383,039.34.

The bill as it was agreed to by the conference committee carries $9,854,184.46, which said sum is $6,528,854.88 less than the bill carried when it passed the Senate; we have saved that sum of money to the taxpayers of this country. During the preparation and consideration of this bill the House committee held the most extensive hearings ever before held on an Indian appropriation bill, having had before it Commissioner Valentine, E. B. Meritt, law clerk of the Indian Bureau; also Director Newell, of the Reclamation Service, the latter appearing with reference to irrigation projects on Indian reservations.

It has been the policy of our committee to go carefully into each item of expense and to require a full and complete justification therefor. Extensive hearings have been held on each item where any question arose in the minds of our committee that the Federal Government was expending money for which adequate returns were not received and where a saving might be made in the appropriation.

This bill, with but few exceptions, is the same as was passed in the last Congress.

After extensive hearings as to schools, our committee decided to adopt an amendment excluding children of less than one-fourth Indian blood where adequate school facilities exist in their own State, thus permitting Indian children now deprived of school facilities an opportunity to secure an education under the laws of the State wherein they live.

Extensive hearings were also held as to the administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, and, after careful consideration, it is the opinion that the requirements specified in this bill as to future appropriations of money should be adopted. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs stated in the hearings that approximately $1,177,000 was expended for all purposes at the one agency at Muskogee, Okla. There being no Indians in Oklahoma for which rations are issued, this sum is entirely too large to be justified. Only $275,000 of the above amount was carried by the last appropriation bill. Only about $217,000 of this sum was used for equalization purposes, leaving approximately $1,000,000 that was expended for salaries and expenses. The subcommittee of our committee interrogated Commissioner Valentine closely on this item and it was the commissioner's opinion that a marked saving could be made in the administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes at that office. It was also developed in the hearings that practically a duplication of work was going on at the Muskogee Agency and that the office was too highly organized and too expensive for the services rendered. It developed also in the hearings, and is a fact, that the rolls were closed March 4, 1907, hence no expense of administration is now imposed for that purpose. It was also developed in the hearings, and is a fact, that the unallotted lands of the Five Civilized Tribes have been twice offered for sale during the last year and all of the unallotted lands of the Cherokee, Creek, and Seminoles, except 1,280 acres, have been sold, hence avoiding the necessity of immediately again offering the same for sale, and this feature of expense has been dispensed with.

What is known as the segregated coal-land bill, which became a law at this session of Congress, contains an item for a $50,000 appropriation for the disposition of that tract and the establishment of a temporary land office at the town of McAlester to transact the business, thus relieving the Muskogee office from any additional burdens and really obviating some of their present duties and expense in this way.

Inasmuch as practically all of these moneys are to be taken from the funds of the Indians and used for salaries and expenses, our committee was of the opinion that hereafter no expenditures of money from the funds of the Five Civilized Tribes should be made until estimates were filed and specific appropriations given therefor. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs was asked the specific question, "Would havoc or any disaster result if the committee should take this course?" and his answer was, "I think not." The expenditure of such an enormous sum annually for salaries and expenses, either from the Federal Treasury or Indian funds, can not longer be justified, and certainly not without specific appropriation by Congress.

This bill also eliminates the appropriation for district agents in connection with the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma. This bill appropriates $125,000 for special agents, which are under the full control of the Secretary of the Interior and may be detailed to any part of the United States. It was deemed not necessary or right to appropriate the further sum of $100,000 for such district agents designated for Oklahoma. The State has been admitted five years, the conditions which made the appointment of these agents necessary at the start has entirely passed away, most of the business of the Indians has been closed up, the Indians themselves are fully equal if not superior in competency to any other Indians in the United States, and inasmuch as such district agents are not maintained on any other reservation in the United States, they are and should be discontinued, and the appropriation was left out of the bill, thus saving $100,000 to the Treasury on this one item.

The appropriation for the Hampton Institute, Va., is stricken from the bill. There are adequate facilities provided for the higher education of the Indian pupils now being educated at Hampton on or near their reservation. Some of these non-reservation industrial schools, similar to the Hampton School, have been closed for want of patronage, the department recommending this year that another school, the Bismarck School, should be closed. Several of these industrial schools have less pupils enrolled than can be accommodated at the present time. A considerable saving to the Government can be made by educating these children in Government schools already provided for the higher education of Indians, thus saving the needless expense in the transportation of these pupils and otherwise incurred in taking them from their reservations in the West and educating them at the farthest point in the East, and paying $167 per capita for their education at that point, while it is shown that schools with equal facilities and advantages are educating pupils similar to these being educated at Hampton at much less than $167 per capita. The bill has been carrying an appropriation for 120 pupils, when there are but 83 enrolled at this school, thus showing that there are no great demands for this school among the Indians themselves. Your committee therefore decided to eliminate this item from the bill, and by so doing we have eliminated the contract-school system from the Indian Service.

We have also eliminated the court adjudication of all claims from this bill, and the bill as presented carries no unnecessary amounts of money known to us; on the other hand, we have appropriated as much money as we thought would meet the demands of the Indians for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

Mr. Speaker, amendments Nos. 98, 99, and 100 relate to the salaries and expenses of the administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma. Amendment of the Senate No. 99 carried an appropriation of $100,000 for salaries and expenses of district agents for said tribes. We have eliminated that item from this bill for the reason that we believe that these agents are wholly unnecessary and useless, and we restore the law as it was before these agents were provided for and as it had existed for 14 years before their appointment. To prevent crippling this service by striking out the district agents and their appropriation of $100,000, we have increased the amount carried in amendment No. 98 from $174,000 to $200,000, and for the same purpose we have increased the amount carried in amendment No. 15 of the Senate from $85,000 to $125,000, making an increase of $66,000 in these amendments Nos. 98 and 100.

This will recompense in part for the $100,000 stricken out for the salaries of district agents, and is as much money as can be legitimately used in properly administering the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes.

These amendments, Nos. 98 and 100, are adopted by the conference committee and are as follows, viz:

Amendment numbered 98: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 98, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the amendment, after the word "employees," strike out the words "one hundred and seventy-four" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two hundred."

Amendment numbered 100: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "sale" at the end of said amendment insert the following: ": Provided, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, no moneys shall be expended from the tribal funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes without specific appropriation by Congress, except as follows: Equalization of allotments, per capita and other payments authorized by law to individual members of the respective tribes, tribal and other Indian schools for the current fiscal year under existing law, salaries and contingent expenses of governors, chiefs, assistant chiefs, secretaries, interpreters, and mining trustees of the tribes for the current fiscal year, and attorneys for said tribes employed under contract approved by the President, under existing law, for the current fiscal year: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to continue the tribal schools of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations for the current fiscal year."

Mr. Speaker, Senate amendment No. 111 relates to the Mexican Kickapoo Indians now residing in Mexico but owning lands in Oklahoma, and now being supervised by the Indian Bureau of this Government. After a full hearing on this question by the conferees, we have unanimously agreed upon the following provision as a substitute for all of the amendments proposed for said purposes. Said amendment is as follows, viz:

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay for the relief of the Kickapoo Indians in Mexico the sum of $15,000, to be expended in the payment of taxes, salary of farmers, maintenance and repairs of irrigation ditches, indebtedness for supplies already furnished, court costs, and obligations heretofore incurred in settlement of land titles, said sum to be paid to the treasurer of a corporation to be known as the Kickapoo Community of Mexico, to be organized under the laws of the State of Arizona; the organization of said corporation shall be authorized by a majority of the members of the Mexican Kickapoo Indians now residing in the State of Sonora, in the Republic of Mexico, in council assembled."

Amendment No. 112 relates to the same subject, and is as follows, viz:

Amendment numbered 112: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be sent to the First National Bank of Douglas, Ariz., checks payable to the order of the individual Indian owners who are members of the band of Mexican Kickapoo Indians now resident in the Republic of Mexico, for and in the amount of all moneys known as lease money now on deposit with or in any manner under the control of the agents and officers of the Interior Department and all like money due or becoming due or collectible by them prior to the 1st day of January, 1914, and belonging to any of the said Mexican Kickapoo Indians."

Mr. Speaker, amendment numbered 114 has been a subject of much controversy between the two Houses of Congress, as well as between the Interior and the War Departments of this Government, and your committee have agreed upon the following amendment as a solution of this vexed question. The amendment is as follows, viz:

Amendment numbered 114: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For the relief and settlement of the Apache Indians now confined as prisoners of war at Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., on lands to be selected for them by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War, $200,000, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War may prescribe."

Mr. Speaker, the following letter from the War Department fully justifies the action of your conference committee in adopting said amendment. The letter is as follows, viz:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
Washington, August 20, 1912.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. STEPHENS: I understand the matter is now up in Congress of making some suitable disposition of the Apache Indian prisoners of war now at Fort Sill, Okla. I wish to lay before you the great desirability of taking some final action on this matter during this session of Congress. It is a question which the War Department has been striving for years to settle, but without success. The Department's principal consideration has been to do justice to the Indians and to relieve them from the thoroughly unsatisfactory situation in which they now find themselves. Only a very few of these Indians ever lived in Arizona. Most of the original members of the band are dead. The greater proportion of the present band have been born in captivity. Being held as prisoners of war, they are still kept together as a band, and their affairs are managed by an officer of the Army. Their surroundings have been made as favorable as the circumstances would permit, but the Indians are dissatisfied, because they see other Indians allotted lands and allowed to take care of their own affairs. It is the department's principal wish to meet this desire of the Indians, to relieve them from the status of prisoners of war, and to place them under conditions most favorable to their happiness and comfort.

Another consideration is that the reservation on which the Indians are now held is needed for military purposes. Over a million dollars, has, within recent years, been spent in providing quarters for troops there. A school of fire for Field Artillery has been established, and it is desired to place there a school of musketry for the Infantry. But it is entirely impracticable to reconcile the proposition of keeping the Indians on this reservation and at the same time utilizing it for the military purposes contemplated. As the military use proposed is that of target practice on a large scale for both Infantry and Field Artillery, this necessitates most careful measures to prevent accidents to people moving about in the different parts of the reservation. While the Indians and their cattle are there the value of the land for these military purposes is most seriously restricted. It would not be practicable to divide the reservation, giving one part to the Indians and assigning another part for military purposes, for the reason that only a small proportion of the reservation is well adapted for agricultural purposes. This part lies in the valleys of the two small streams; the large proportion is available for grazing purposes only.

In view of the large expenditure of money for the construction of the regimental Field Artillery post at Fort Sill and the urgent necessity for the use of this reservation for the purpose of Field Artillery and Infantry schools of fire, it is most important that the Indian question should be disposed of on the general lines previously and herein indicated.

The effort of the department has been to arrive at a solution which would meet the needs of both parties and which would be fair to the interests of both the Indians and of the Federal Government. Many consultations have been had with the Indians and their representatives, and the solutions now proposed appears to meet with general approval, namely, to send those Indians to the Mescalero Indian Agency, in New Mexico, who desire such a transfer, and to provide for those who do not care to go by purchasing the allotments of deceased Indians on the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Reservation, in Oklahoma.

I fully believe that this affords a satisfactory solution of this most vexed problem. I regard it as of the utmost importance to settle the matter now, and I would urge that if it meets with your views you will do what you can to have the legislation now proposed enacted before Congress adjourns. The Indians want to be freed, their representatives are continually besieging the department to have this done, and the solution proposed, in my belief, offers the most happy settlement of the problem which, if not settled now, will continue to vex us for years to come.

Very sincerely, HENRY L. STIMSON,
Secretary of War.

Mr. Speaker, the amendments I have discussed are all of the amendments that have been questioned by any Member of this House, and the reasons for the adoption of this conference report are very apparent to every Member of the House. I therefore move the adoption of the report as a whole, and on that motion I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas moves the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was adopted.

On motion of Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted was laid on the table.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that the statement be read in lieu of the report? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the statement.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1234).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 9, 11, 12, 13, 16, 17, 18, 21, 22, 25, 28, 29, 30, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 46, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 55, 57, 60, 61, 64, 65, 66, 68, 74, 75, 78, 80, 95, 96, 100, 101, 103, 104, 109, 113, 114, 123, 125, 127, 136, 137, 138, 140, 141, 142, 143, 147, 149, 150, 151, 153, 160, 164, 166, 167, 170, 173, 174, 177, 182, 184, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 193, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 205, 210, 212, 213, 214, 217, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 229, 231, 233, 234, 235, 240, 241, 242, 249, 250, 251, 259, 261, 262, 263, 264, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 274, 275, 277, 280, and 284.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 7, 8, 15, 19, 20, 23, 24, 26, 31, 39, 40, 41, 44, 56, 58, 59, 62, 67, 71, 72, 79, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 94, 99, 105, 106, 107, 110, 112, 115, 117, 118, 119, 121, 129, 130, 131, 132, 139, 145, 152, 154, 156, 162, 165, 168, 169, 171, 175, 176, 180, 181, 185, 192, 194, 195, 201, 202, 203, 204, 206, 207, 208, 209, 211, 215, 218, 219, 227, 230, 237, 243, 244, 245, 247, 248, 252, 253, 254, 265, 266, 278, 279, 281, 282, 283, 285, 286, 287, and 289, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 17 of said amendment, after the word "building" and before the semicolon, insert the following: ": Provided, That the additional work herein authorized on the said old building, together with the cost of the addition to the heretofore authorized building, shall all be done within the limit of $250,000 fixed in the above-mentioned act of June 25, 1910"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$144,770"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,500,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$17,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,658,845"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$300,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$412,500" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senated numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"Hereafter all plans and specifications for the construction of buildings in the National Zoological Park shall be prepared under the supervision of the municipal architect of the District of Columbia, and all plans and specificataions for bridges in said park shall be prepared under the supervision of the engineer of bridges of the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$225,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Transpose line 1 on page 54 of the bill to precede the matter inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 63: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Cave Hill Cemetery, Louisville, Ky., purchase of additional land: For the purchase of additional land in Cave Hill Cemetery, at Louisville, Ky., for the burial of soldiers of the Union Army in the late Civil War and in the War with Spain, $25,000: Provided, That the amount of land herein authorized to be purchased and the price paid therefor shall be within the discretion of the Secretary of War."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended as follows: On page 62 of the bill, in line 1, after the word "occurring," insert the following: "by death or resignation"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 70: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum first proposed insert "$100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$50,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 76: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 76, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$35,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 77: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$5,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 93: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"International Waterways Commission: For continuing until December 31, 1912, the work of investigation and report by the International Waterways Commission, authorized by section 4 of the river and harbor act approved June 13, 1902, $10,000: Provided, That report as to the progress of the work be made by the American commissioners to Congress at the beginning of the next session."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 97: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 97, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$45,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 98: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 98, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$437,360"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 102: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$421,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 108: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 108, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,995,660"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For repair of roof and skylights on the Pension Office Building, $4,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 120: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "To enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to temporarily employ additional clerks as follows: Eight clerks, at the rate of $1,200 per annum each; eight clerks, at the rate of $1,000 per annum each; eight copyists, at the rate of $900 per annum each; in all, $21,700, or so much thereof as may be necessary"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 122: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 122, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 124: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 124, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 126: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 1 and 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: ", nineteen hundred and twelve and nineteen hundred and thirteen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 128: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 128, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$700,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 133: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 133, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, and on page 98 of the bill, in lines 18 and 19, strike out the following words: ", the sum hereby appropriated to be"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 134: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 134, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For temporary employment of clerks for the purpose of bringing up arrears of work upon the returns of surveys in the General Land Office: Four clerks, at the rate of $1,200 per annum each; three clerks, at the rate of $1,000 per annum each; two copyists, at the rate of $900 per annum each; four copyists, at the rate of $720 per annum each; in all, $10,920, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 135: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 135, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed, at the earliest practicable date, to make a survey of the sewer system of the city of Hot Springs, abutting the Hot Springs Reservation, Ark., and to prepare plans and estimate of the cost of increasing the present storm drainage system as well as the present sanitary sewer system of the city of Hot Springs; the report of survey, including estimate of cost of the work, to be submitted to Congress as soon as practicable after the 1st day of December, 1912. The expenses incurred hereunder shall not exceed $10,000; one half of such expenses shall be paid out of the revenues derived from privileges and otherwise on the Hot Springs Reservation, and the other half shall be paid by the city of Hot Springs, Ark."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 144: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 144, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For inquiries and investigations into the mining and treatment of ores and other mineral substances, with special reference to safety and waste, $50,000: Provided, That no part thereof may be used for investigation in behalf of any private party, nor shall any part thereof be used for work authorized or required by law to be done by any other branch of the public service"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 146: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 146, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum last named in said amendment insert "$3,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 148: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 148, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$583,100"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 155: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 155, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "of" in said amendment insert the word "actual"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 157: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 157, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$80,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 158: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 158, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 159: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 159, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 161: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 161, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$75,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 163: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 163, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 172: That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate numbered 172, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$92,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 178: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 178, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the words "one year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 179: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 179, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 6 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "prevent," insert the words "or authorize"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 182: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 182, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "including not to exceed $10,000 for necessary employees at the seat of government"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 216: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 216, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$193,120"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 228: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 228, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$335,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 232: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 232, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$90,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 236: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 236, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,525,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 238: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 238, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$15,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 239: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 239, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$30,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 246: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 246, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Joint Committee on Printing, as provided for in an act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents, approved January 12, 1895, and acts amendatory thereof: Clerk, $3,000, to be paid by the Secretary of the Senate"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 255: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 255, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$132,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 256: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 256, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,252,880"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 257: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 257, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,949,900"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 258: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 258, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$145,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 260: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 260, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$290,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 273: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 273, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$500,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 276: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 276, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$28,980,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 288: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 288, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 10. That section 8 of the District of Columbia appropriation act, approved June 26, 1912, shall not take effect or be operative during the fiscal year 1913 except to the extent that it prohibits the payment of membership fees or dues in societies or associations: Provided, That during the fiscal year 1913 expenses of attendance of officers or employees of the Government at any meeting or convention of members of any society or association shall be incurred only on the written authority and direction of the heads of executive departments or other Government establishments or the government of the District of Columbia; and a detailed statement of all such expenses incurred from June 30 until December 1, 1912, shall be submitted to Congress on or before January 1, 1913."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
SWAGAR SHERLEY,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

F. E. WARREN,
GEO. C. PERKINS,
C. A. CULBERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement was read as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations to provide for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1913, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended as to each of the said amendments in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment No. 1: Strikes out the modification, proposed by the Senate, of the appropriation for the Economy Commission, permitting payments at greater rates of compensation than $4,000 per annum.

On amendment No. 2: Strikes out the appropriation of $225,000, proposed by the Senate, for the continuance of the so-called Tariff Board.

On amendments Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17, relating to public buildings: Appropriates for the public building at Greenville, N. C., $1,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $15,000, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out the appropriations proposed by the Senate of $10,000 for the public building at Huron, S. Dak., $5,000 for rent of temporary quarters pending completion of the public building at Kansas City, Kans., and $15,000 for a new roof on the mint building at Philadelphia, Pa.; strikes out the provision for removing the Board of Appraisers to the second floor of the Appraisers' Stores in New York; authorizes necessary alterations in the old portion of the public building at Winston-Salem, N. C., within the authorized limit of cost for the addition to said building; appropriates $625,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $650,000, as proposed by the Senate, for repairs and preservation of public buildings; appropriates $440,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $465,000, as proposed by the Senate, for mechanical equipment for public buildings; appropriates $17,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $20,000, proposed by the Senate, for electrical protection to vaults in public buildings; increases the maximum pay of computers and estimators in the Supervising Architect's office from $2,200 to $2,500, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, authorizing details of employees on public buildings throughout the country to temporary duty in the Supervising Architect's office; and restores to the bill the provision, proposed by the House, repealing the so-called Tarsney Act.

On amendment No. 18: Appropriates $1,960,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $2,031,620, proposed by the Senate, for pay of crews of surfmen, etc., of the Life-Saving Service.

On amendments Nos. 19, 20, 21, 22, and 23, relating to the Revenue-Cutter Service: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, for two civilian instructors and for temporary leases and improvement of property for revenue-cutter purposes; appropriates for the service $2,260,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $2,280,000, as proposed by the Senate; restores the provision, proposed by the House, prohibiting additional appointments as cadets in the Revenue-Cutter Service; and appropriates $175,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $165,000, as proposed by the House, for repairs to revenue cutters.

On amendment No. 24: Inserts the provision, proposed by the Senate, with reference to the use of power presses in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

On amendment No. 25: Appropriates $140,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $150,000, as proposed by the Senate, for detecting and bringing to trial persons guilty of violating internal-revenue laws.

On amendment No. 26: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $1,565 for a special witness of the destruction of United States securities.

On amendment No. 27: Appropriates $2,500,000, instead of $2,450,000, as proposed by the House, and $2,570,000, as proposed by the Senate, for operating force for public buildings.

On amendment No. 28: Appropriates $800,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $900,000, as proposed by the Senate, for furniture and repairs to furniture for public buildings.

On amendment No. 29: Appropriates $1,550,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,600,000, as proposed by the Senate, for operating supplies of public buildings.

On amendment No. 30: Strikes out the proposed authority for purchase and exchange of typewriters under the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes.

On amendment No. 31: Appropriates $10,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the expenses of the International Irrigation Congress.

On amendments Nos. 32, 33, and 34: Appropriates $4,650,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $5,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, for expenses of collecting the revenue from customs; repeals, as proposed by the House, the permanent appropriation for expenses of collecting the customs; and restores to the bill the provision, proposed by the House, authorizing the President to reorganize the Customs Service.

On amendments Nos. 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, and 42, relating to the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service: Appropriates $200,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $225,000, as proposed by the Senate, for pay of acting assistant surgeons; strikes out the provision for expenses of medical officers in attendance at meetings of associations; appropriates $17,000, instead of $14,900, as proposed by the House, and $20,000, as proposed by the Senate, for maintaining the Hygienic Laboratory; appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $4,000 for the sanatorium at Fort Stanton, N. Mex., and $35,000 for the quarantine station at Hawaii; and appropriates $200,000, instead of $100,000, as proposed by the House, and $500,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the prevention of epidemics.

On amendments Nos. 43, 44, and 45: Appropriates $300,000, instead of $250,000, as proposed by the House, and $350,000, as proposed by the Senate, for preservation of exhibits in the National Museum; and authorizes, as proposed by the Senate, the purchase of a fireproof and burglar-proof safe for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

On amendments Nos. 46 and 47: Excludes payment of architects' fees or compensation out of the appropriation for the National Zoological Park and restores to the bill the provision requiring plans and specifications for construction work in the Zoological Park to be made under the supervision of the municipal architect and engineer of bridges of the District of Columbia.

On amendment No. 48: Appropriates $225,000, instead of $200,000, as proposed by the House, and $250,000, as proposed by the Senate, for expenses under the so-called boiler-inspection act.

On amendments Nos. 49, 50, 51, 52, and 53, relating to armories and arsenals: Strikes out the appropriations proposed by the Senate, of $5,100 for the Augusta (Ga.) Arsenal, $23,000 for the Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa., and $250,000 for the Rock Island (Ill.) Arsenal.

On amendments Nos. 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, and 61, relating to military posts: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $250,000 for accommodations for the seacoast artillery in the Philippine Islands and $70,000 for additional land for Fort Sam Houston, Tex.; inserts the provision, proposed by the Senate, authorizing the exchange of land with the State of Wyoming in the military reservation at Fort McKenzie, Wyo.; strikes out the appropriations, proposed by the Senate, of $50,000 for the Keithley-Overton Railway in the Philippine Islands; $50,000 for a bridge at Fort Riley, Kans.; $25,570 for purchase of land for Vancouver Barracks, Wash.; and $50,000 for Fort Taylor Military Reservation, Fla.; and inserts the provision, proposed by the Senate, authorizing the expenditure of $175,000 out of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for "Water and sewers at military posts," fiscal year 1912, for the construction of the water system for the military reservation and post of Schofield Barracks, in Hawaii.

On amendments Nos. 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, and 67, relating to national cemeteries: Authorizes the sale of China or White Hall Cemetery, Pennsylvania; appropriates $25,000 for additional land for burial of soldiers in the Cave Hill Cemetery, Louisville, Ky.; strikes out the appropriation of $5,000, proposed by the Senate, for a rostrum in the Florence Cemetery, South Carolina; strikes out the provision authorizing the removal of the remains of Col. George Pomutz from St. Petersburg, Russia, and the provision to reimburse the Government of the Philippine Islands for expenses incurred in disinterring and transporting to San Francisco the remains of a soldier; and appropriates $1,000, as proposed by the Senate, for monuments or tablets in Cuba and China.

On amendments Nos. 68 and 69: Reappropriates, as proposed by the House, the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the Union naval monument in the Vicksburg National Military Park for bronze portraits of brigade or division commanders and inserts a provision prohibiting the filling of vacancies occurring by death or resignation in the membership of the several commissions in charge of national military parks.

On amendments Nos. 70, 71, 72, and 73: Appropriates $100,000, instead of $70,000, as proposed by the House, and $150,000, as proposed by the Senate, for maintenance and repair of improvements in the Yellowstone National Park, and $77,000, as proposed by the Senate, for widening and improving certain roads in said park, and appropriates $50,000, instead of $100,000, as proposed by the Senate, for Crater Lake National Park, Oreg.

On amendments Nos. 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, and 79: Appropriates $27,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $30,000, as proposed by the Senate, for improvement and maintenance of various reservations in Washington; appropriates $35,000, instead of $25,000 as proposed by the House and $75,000 as proposed by the Senate, for grading, soiling, seeding, and planting Potomac Park west of the railway embankment; appropriates $5,000, instead of $10,000, as proposed by the Senate, for improvement of Montrose Park; strikes out the appropriation of $25,000, proposed by the Senate, for commencing the improvement of Meridian Hill Park; and appropriates $500, as proposed by the Senate, for care and repair of the telegraph line connecting the Capitol with the departments.

On amendment No. 80: Appropriates $5,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $8,800, for the Commission of Fine Arts.

On amendments Nos. 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, and 92, relating to river and harbor contract work: Appropriates $160,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $31,400, as proposed by the House, for the harbor of refuge at Point Judith, R. I., and makes certain verbal changes in the text of the appropriations for rivers and harbors work, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 93: Appropriates $5,000, instead of $10,000, proposed by the Senate, for the International Waterways Commission to continue its work until December 31, 1912.

On amendment No. 94: Inserts the provision, proposed by the Senate, requiring plans and specifications for a new building for Columbia Hospital, in Washington, D. C., to be prepared under the supervision of the president of the board of directors of the hospital and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds.

On amendments Nos. 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, and 108, relating to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers: Strikes out the appropriation of $7,500, proposed by the Senate, for a chapel at the Eastern Branch, Togus, Me.; appropriates $45,000, instead of $40,000, as proposed by the House, and $48,000, as proposed by the Senate, for repairs at the Western Branch, Leavenworth, Kans.; appropriates $20,000, as proposed by the Senate, for sewage-disposal plant, and strikes out the appropriations, proposed by the Senate, of $8,500 for repairs to barracks and $3,000 for improving the water supply, at the Pacific Branch, Santa Monica, Cal.; appropriates $40,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $42,000, as proposed by the Senate, for current expenses at the Mountain Branch, Johnson City, Tenn.; appropriates $24,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $23,000, as proposed by the House, for current expenses at the Battle Mountain Sanitarium, Hot Springs, S. Dak.; and strikes out the provision prohibiting the filling of vacancies occurring in the membership of the board of managers of the home.

On amendments Nos. 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, and 114, relating to buildings under the Interior Department: Limits the amount to be used out of the appropriation for "Repairs of buildings" for personal services to $7,500, as proposed by the House, instead of $10,000, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $20,000 for renewing plumbing and repairs in the Pension Office Building, $3,500 for construction of the conduit connecting the Patent Office Building and the old Post Office Department Building, and $4,000, instead of $25,000, as proposed by the Senate, for repair of the roof of the Pension Office Building; strikes out the appropriations, proposed by the Senate, of $220,000 for an interior court building in, and $50,000 for repairs and improvements of, the Patent Office Building.

On amendment No. 115: Appropriates $3,725 for pedestals for statues in the Capitol Building.

On amendments Nos. 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, and 127, relating to the public-land service: Appropriates $560,000 for salaries of registers and receivers, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $280,000, as proposed by the House, for salaries only of registers of district land offices; strikes out the provision, proposed by the House, abolishing the office of receiver of public moneys for land districts; appropriates $410,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $490,000, as proposed by the House, for contingent expenses of land offices; provides for 24 temporary clerks in the General Land Office; inserts the provision, proposed by the Senate, with reference to the failure of homestead entrymen to give notice of election of making proof as required by the act of 1912; authorizes the expenditure of not exceeding $25,000 additional out of the appropriation for preventing depredations on the public timber, etc., for expenses of hearings held by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; strikes out the appropriation of $5,000, proposed by the Senate, for the purchase of a motor boat for Alaska; appropriates $20,000, instead of $2,000, as proposed by the House, and $25,000, as proposed by the Senate, for advertising incident to restoration of land in forest reserves; strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, authorizing the use of an unexpended balance for extension of the drainage survey to the Red Lake Diminished Reservation; appropriates $28,000, as proposed by the Senate, for examination of selected lieu lands in California; and strikes out the appropriation of $5,000, proposed by the Senate, for the protection of national monuments.

On amendments Nos. 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, and 135, relating to the survey of public lands: Appropriates $700,000, instead of $450,000, as proposed by the House, and $850,000 as proposed by the Senate, for the survey and resurvey of public lands; strikes out the provision making the appropriation available until expended; authorizes the employment of 13 temporary clerks to bring up arrears of work on returns of surveys; and inserts a provision for survey and plans for a sewer system for the city of Hot Springs, Ark., the cost not to exceed $10,000 and one-half of the expense to be borne by the city of Hot Springs.

On amendments Nos. 136, 137, 138, 139, and 140, relating to the Geological Survey: Strikes out the increases proposed by the Senate.

On amendments Nos. 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, and 148, relating to the Bureau of Mines: Appropriates $320,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $347,900, as proposed by the Senate, for investigation of causes of mine explosions; strikes out the authority to employ personal services under said appropriation at Washington and the provision for attendance at meetings; limits the authority to employ personal services in the District of Columbia out of the appropriation for testing coal to those employed in the Bureau of Mines; appropriates $50,000 instead of $100,000, as proposed by the Senate, for investigations into the mining and treatment of ores and other mineral substances with the restriction that no part thereof may be used for investigations in behalf of private parties or for work authorized or required to be done by other branches of the public service; provides for one mine inspector for duty in Alaska, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, authorizing the acceptance of land or building at Pittsburgh, Pa., for the Bureau of Mines.

On amendment No. 149: Strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, authorizing under the Bureau of Education expenses of attending meetings or conventions.

On amendment No. 150: Strikes out the appropriation of $30,000, proposed by the Senate, for investigation and detection of violations of the law against the introduction of alcoholic liquors into the portion of Oklahoma formerly known as Indian Territory

On amendment No. 151: Strikes out the appropriation of $70,000, proposed by the Senate, for the medical relief of the natives of Alaska.

On amendment No. 152: Inserts the provision proposed by the Senate, authorizing the lease of property at Hot Springs, Ark.

On amendments Nos. 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, and 163, relating to national parks: Appropriates $5,500, as proposed by the House, instead of $10,140, as proposed by the Senate, for expenses of administration of Yellowstone Park; extends the limit of the cost of buildings in the national parks to $1,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $500, as proposed by the House; strikes out the provision, proposed by the House, restricting the expenditure of the revenues derived from national parks to construction and improvement of roads, trails, and bridges; appropriates $80,000, instead of $50,000, as proposed by the House, and $100,000, as proposed by the Senate, for Yosemite National Park; appropriates $15,000, instead of $7,500, as proposed by the House, and $27,500, as proposed by the Senate, for Mesa Verde National Park; appropriates $20,000 instead of $5,400, as proposed by the House, and $48,500, as proposed by the Senate, for Mount Rainier National Park; strikes out the appropriation of $3,100, proposed by the Senate, for the Wind Cave National Park; appropriates $75,000, instead of $50,000, as proposed by the House, and $100,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the Glacier National Park; and appropriates $8,000, instead of $5,000, as proposed by the House, and $10,000, as proposed by the Senate, for Platt National Park.

On amendments Nos. 164, 165, and 166, relating to the Government Hospital for the Insane: Strikes out the appropriation, proposed by the Senate, of $55,209 for a cement wall and for shop and storehouse building, and $50,000 for new barns, piggeries, and silo; and appropriates $20,000, as proposed by the Senate, for tubercular cottages.

On amendment No. 167: Appropriates $5,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $10,000, as proposed by the Senate, for repairs to buildings at the Columbia Institution for the Deaf.

On amendments Nos. 168, 169, 170, 171, and 172, relating to Howard University: Appropriates $60,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $57,400, as proposed by the House, for payment of part of the salaries of officers, teachers, and employees; appropriates $2,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $2,500, as proposed by the Senate, for use in the laboratories of the new science hall; and inserts the provision, proposed by the Senate, authorizing a conduit under W Street in Washington, D. C., to connect the buildings of the university with the power plant of Freedmen's Hospital.

On amendments Nos. 173 and 174: Appropriates $32,040, instead of $33,040, as proposed by the Senate, for salaries for Freedmen's Hospital.

On amendments Nos. 175 and 176: Strikes out the limitations, proposed by the House, restricting the payment of architects' fees for the penitentiaries at Leavenworth and Atlanta to $3,500 each.

On amendment No. 177: Strikes out the appropriation of $25,000, proposed by the Senate, for continuing the construction of the penitentiary at McNeil Island, Wash.

On amendments Nos. 178 and 179: Modifies the provision, inserted by the House, prohibiting the payment out of certain appropriations under the Department of Justice to persons previously employed under the Government, by restricting such payments to persons so employed within one year instead of two years, as proposed by the House, and six months, as proposed by the Senate, and the further provision that such inhibition shall not apply except in cases where the persons shall have previously rendered service in connection with the same subject matter or to prevent or authorize transfers not involving increases of compensation.

On amendments Nos. 180 and 181: Appropriates $35,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $30,000, as proposed by the House, for special attorneys for the conduct of customs cases.

On amendment No. 182: Authorizes the expenditure of not exceeding $10,000 for necessary employees at the seat of Government out of the appropriation for detection and prosecution of crimes.

On amendment 183: Appropriates $200,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $300,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the enforcement of the antitrust laws.

On amendment No. 184: Appropriates $10,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $25,000, as proposed by the Senate, for enforcement of acts to regulate commerce.

On amendment No. 185: Appropriates $500, as proposed by the Senate, for indexing the judicial code.

On amendments Nos. 186, 187, 188, 189, and 190: Strikes out all of the appropriations, amounting to $146,340, proposed by the Senate, to supply law books for courts and court officials.

On amendment No. 191: Appropriates $75, as proposed by the House, for 15 copies of volume 56 of the Lawyers' Cooperative Edition.

On amendments Nos. 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, and 204, relating to the United States courts: Makes the appropriations for United States marshals available for certain cases in Oklahoma; appropriates $550,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $568,000, as proposed by the Senate, for United States district attorneys; appropriates $325,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $315,000, as proposed by the House, for assistants to United States attorneys; inserts the provision, proposed by the Senate, providing for the compensation of the clerk of the district court for the northern district of Illinois as other clerks are compensated; strikes out the increases, proposed by the Senate, in the appropriations for the United States penitentiaries at Leavenworth, Kans., and Augusta, Ga.; and provides, as proposed by the Senate, for a chief clerk at $1,000 and an increase in the pay of the secretary and treasurer from $600 to $900, in the National Training School for Boys.

On amendment No. 205: Strikes out the appropriation of $115,000, proposed by the Senate, for the Cape St. Elias Light Station, Alaska.

On amendments Nos. 206, 207, and 208: Readjusts, as proposed by the Senate, amounts appropriated for certain items under the Lighthouse Establishment without changing the sum total thereof.

On amendments Nos. 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, and 217, relating to the Coast and Geodetic Survey: Makes the appropriation for special surveys available for aid to the shellfish commission of Maryland; strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, making interchangeable to the extent of 10 per cent the amounts of the appropriations; appropriates $20,000, as proposed by the Senate, for repairs to the steamer Pathfinder; strikes out the changes proposed by the Senate in the salaried force, except that provision is made for one additional employee at $600; and appropriates $50,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $55,000, as proposed by the Senate, for office expenses.

On amendments Nos. 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, and 232, relating to the Bureau of Fisheries: Strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, for a terrapin and fish culturist at $900 and a fish pathologist at $2,500, the increase in the salary of the warden of Alaska from $1,200 to $1,500 and 4 deputy wardens in Alaska from $600 to $900 each; provides for the purchase of reference books; appropriates $335,000, instead of $325,000, as proposed by the House, and $340,000, as proposed by the Senate, for propagation of food fishes; strikes out the appropriation of $40,000, proposed by the Senate, for repairs of the steamer Albatross; appropriates

$5,000, as proposed by the Senate, to investigate the method of fishing known as "beam or otter trawling"; strikes out the provision making interchangeable to the extent of 10 per cent the appropriations for the bureau; and appropriates $90,000, instead of $75,000, as proposed by the House, and $100,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the Alaskan Fisheries Service.

On amendments Nos. 233, 234, and 235: Strikes out the appropriations, proposed by the Senate, for the immigration station at Ellis Island, amounting to $170,000.

On amendments Nos. 236 and 237: Appropriates $2,525,000, instead of $2,500,000, as proposed by the House, and $2,575,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the expenses of regulating immigration, and $200,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $185,000, as proposed by the House, for the Division of Naturalization.

On amendments Nos. 238 and 239, relating to the Census Bureau: Appropriates $15,000, instead of $25,000, proposed by the Senate, for collecting statistics concerning leaf tobacco, and $30,000, instead of $57,250, proposed by the Senate, for securing information of cotton production.

On amendment No. 240: Strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, for the employment of counsel at $4,000 per annum for examination and preparation of cases before the International Joint Commission on Boundary Waters between Canada and the United States.

On amendment No. 241: Strikes out the appropriation of $5,000, proposed by the Senate, for the International Conference on Maritime Law.

On amendment No. 242: Strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, reappropriating the unexpended balance of the appropriation made for expenses of the arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain.

On amendment No. 243: Reappropriates, for use during 1913, the appropriations heretofore made for removing the fence around the Botanical Gardens.

On amendment No. 244: Appropriates $1,500, as proposed by the Senate, for indexing for use by committees of the Senate.

On amendment No. 245: Appropriates $5,000, as proposed by the Senate, for compiling the Biographical Congressional Directory.

On amendment No. 246: Authorizes the employment of a clerk for the Joint Committee on Printing, at $3,000, and strikes out the provision for an assistant clerk, at $2,500.

On amendment No. 247: Appropriates $2,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the inspector to the Joint Committee on Printing.

On amendment No. 248: Appropriates $46,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the Senate Office Building.

On amendment No. 249: Strikes out the appropriation of $250,000 for a pneumatic-tube system to connect the Capitol the Senate and House Office Buildings, the Congressional Library, the Union Railroad Station, the new post-office building, and the Government Printing Office.

On amendments Nos. 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, and 272, relating to the Government Printing Office and printing and binding: Increases the compensation of 11 clerks from $720 to $840 each and of one clerk from $720 to $900; strikes out the proposed increase in the salary of one clerk from $1,800 to $2,000 in the office of the Public Printer; appropriates for public printing and binding $4,949,900, instead of $4,878,400, as proposed by the House, and $5,046,600, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out the proposed increases in salaries of certain clerks in the office of the Superintendent of Documents; and strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, authorizing an expenditure of $1,000 for inspection of libraries.

On amendments Nos. 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, and 278, relating to the Panama Canal: Appropriates $500,000, instead of $300,000, as proposed by the House, and $563,520, as proposed by the Senate, for salaries of officers and employees other than skilled and unskilled labor in the department of civil administration; appropriates $15,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $20,000, as proposed by the Senate, for skilled and unskilled labor, and $75,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $110,000, as proposed by the Senate, for materials and supplies in that department; restores to the bill the provision, proposed by the House, prohibiting payment of allowances for longevity service; and inserts a provision authorizing the establishment of a division of records.

On amendments Nos. 279 and 280: Strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, excepting from the operation of section 6 requiring certain comparative information to be submitted with the estimates, the estimates for United States courts, rivers and harbors, and fortification work.

On amendments Nos. 281, 282, 283, and 284: Modifies section 7 of the bill, specifying what shall constitute permanent continuing appropriations, so that said section shall apply only to appropriations made hereafter, and strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, excepting from the operation of the section surveys and resurveys of public or Indian lands, increase of the Navy, public works of the Navy, and fisheries stations.

On amendments Nos. 285 and 286: Enlarges the number of officers or employees of the Government, as proposed by the Senate, who may administer oaths to accounts for travel or other expenses against the United States.

On amendments Nos. 287, 288, and 289: Corrects the numbering of the sections; inserts a section providing that section 8 of the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1913, approved June 26, 1912, shall not be operative during the fiscal year 1913 except to the extent that it prohibits the payment of membership fees or dues in societies or associations.

JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
SWAGAR SHERLEY,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the sundry civil appropriation bill, when submitted to the House by the Committee on Appropriations, carried $109,577,414.40. The estimates considered by the committee in the preparation of the bill footed up $151,991,106.87, and as reported to the House the bill was $42,413,692.47 under the estimates, and a reduction of $33,060,629.74 under the appropriations for the current fiscal year. The bill as it passed the House carried $109,567,974.40. The Senate struck out $75 and added $6,764,830.80. As passed by the Senate, the bill carried $116,322,730.20. Between the time the bill passed the House and the time it was passed by the Senate supplemental estimates, aggregating in the neighborhood of two and one-half million dollars, were transmitted from the various departments. In the adjustment of the differences between the two Houses the Senate conferees yielded upon items aggregating $4,283,620.80. The House conferees receded on items aggregating $2,171,210, and the House itself concurred in an amendment which appropriated $300,000.

The bill, Mr. Speaker, is $30,225,859.74 less than the bill for the last fiscal year. The bill, as now before the House carries some very important legislation, which will result in important reforms, which will result in improved efficiency and greater economy in the public service.

Within a day or two I expect to place in the RECORD a comprehensive review of the appropriations made by Congress, together with a review of the legislation which will tend to promote efficiency and economy in the public service. I shall not therefore take up further time of the House at this time.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the gentleman?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In a moment. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] wishes to make a request.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I find in the RECORD on pages 12677–12680, inclusive, what purports to be the conference report made by the conference committee on the Post Office appropriation bill. This is a substantial copy of the conference report, varying, perhaps, a million dollars. It was not put here by authority of the conference committee. They have not put in a report up to this time, and I ask unanimous consent that it be stricken from the RECORD in order that the committee may make the report which they intend to make.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] moves to strike from the RECORD what purports to be the conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object—which, of course, I shall not do—I understood that there were some clerical mistakes in the conference report.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The mistakes are clerical. The report was not finally completed until this morning. As the gentleman knows, the conferees often sign the report, but the clerks go over it and make up the statement and corrections.

Mr. MANN. All I wished to ask was whether in fact or in substance in the main a conference report was agreed upon.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It was all agreed upon, and is now.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. This is not a motion to correct?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No. This is simply a motion to strike from the RECORD what purports to be a conference report and which is not a conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FINLEY. On yesterday afternoon Mr. Speaker CLARK asked the question, "The Chair will inquire if anyone knows anything about the conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill." After the statement was made that the conference report was not quite ready I asked unanimous consent that the report might be printed in the RECORD. Afterwards I endeavored to call up the chairman of the committee, Mr. MOON of Tennessee, and then somebody at the Government Printing Office called me up, and I directed them not to print the report unless they got the authority from the chairman of the committee, Mr. MOON of Tennessee.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I am not complaining of anybody. It is just an error that ought not to have occurred.

Mr. FINLEY. It was plainly stated here that the conference report was not ready, and the request for unanimous consent for its printing was made in order to expedite the business of the House.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I understand that. It was not finally ready until this morning. Let me say that a similar mistake was made at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman is the purported conference report as printed in the RECORD substantially correct?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It is substantially correct. There is a difference of a million dollars on footing up. It is substantially the report which I now present.

Mr. MANN. It is information. I am glad it was printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It was agreed upon to be reported when the details were finished up. It was simply prematurely presented, that is all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Is it not to be acted upon until it is printed?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. By unanimous consent it may be acted upon to-day, if the Senate first acts. The Senate has the papers.

Mr. MANN. If the Senate acts on the conference report on the Post Office bill and messages that action over to the House, does the gentleman expect to ask unanimous consent to consider it in the House?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed consideration of the conference report on the bill H. R. 25069, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to two amendments in the sundry civil appropriation bill. The first is Senate amendment numbered 4, on page 9. That is the appropriation for the commencement of the public building at Greenville, N. C., for which the House made an appropriation of $1,000, which was increased in the Senate to $15,000. The Senate amendment was stricken out by the conferees. I desire to know why that was stricken out, my purpose being to ascertain if it was because no money could be used until after the next session.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The House made an appropriation in accordance with the recommendation of the Supervising Architect's Office of the amount required between now and the 4th of March. The Senate increased the appropriation from $1,000 to $15,000, but as there was no recommendation from the Supervising Architect's Office that that amount of money would be required the managers on the part of the House insisted that that particular building should be treated as every other one had been, and only the sum allowed which could be used until the 4th of March.

Mr. SMALL. Did your committee get any affirmative information from the Supervising Architect that he would not be able to use any more money before the 4th of March?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We had no information from him at all after we passed the bill. Those representing the Senate and interested in the amendment had no information from him that he would need the money. In the absence of that information the managers on the part of the House declined to accede to the amendment.

Mr. SMALL. I did not desire any appropriation unless it could be used. My information was that it could not be used before the 4th of March, but I desired to know specifically.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The sum agreed upon is all that can be used between now and the 4th of March.

Mr. SMALL. I will say to the gentleman that the Senate did not insert it at my request.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I so understand.

Mr. SMALL. Now I call attention to another amendment, No. 239, on page 173. The Senate inserted an amendment to secure information for census reports of cotton, regarding production, stocks of baled cotton on hand, and domestic and foreign consumption.

Under a recent act approved June 22, 1912, there was appropriated $57,250, which the conferees have reduced to $30,000. I desire to inquire if that amount is sufficient to enable the Bureau of Census to carry out the provisions of the recent act?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The conferees believe it will be sufficient. This appropriation is supplemental to the regular appropriation for the conduct of the Bureau of Census, and there is a force there now which is engaged upon reports of a certain character. The conferees believe that with this additional money they can fully comply with the law.

Mr. SMALL. That is a very important act, and the bureau ought not to be crippled in its execution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no danger of the Census Bureau being crippled, but there would be danger of the Treasury being completely depleted if estimates of bureau chiefs were accepted by Congress.

Mr. SMALL. I understand that as a general statement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The conferees endeavored to give what they honestly believed would be sufficient in the light of all the information that could be obtained and with the knowledge of the condition of the office and the organization that exists there for work of this character.

Mr. SMALL. Did the conferees investigate and reach the conclusion that the sum of $30,000 was sufficient to carry out the provisions of the act?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was the deliberate judgment of the conferees.

Mr. MILLER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to ask the gentleman something in regard to amendments 136 and 137, on page 114. I call attention to the fact that the Senate increased the appropriation for surveys in amendment 137, $100,000. The House having passed it at $300,000, the Senate voted $400,000, and the additional $100,000 was stricken out. I do not suppose it is of any value to myself or anybody else to make objection to the failure on the part of the conferees to accept the Senate amendment, but I would like to call attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that a large appropriation for the Geological Survey is eminently needed in certain sections of the country. We have lately come to the belief that all the lands allotted to the Indians in the Northwest, and all homesteads before final proof, should be examined by the Geological Survey. I believe that ought to be done in order that there may not be water-power sites and mineral lands acquired. But the Geological Survey, by reason of the increased work, is getting behind. For instance, certain allotments in Minnesota; it has been three years since the allotment was authorized, and they have not been made because the Geological Survey has not got around to make the surveys.

A large forest fire went through the Northwest a year ago, seriously damaging pine timber on the public domain. Large quantities of it were on lands that were in the process of being acquired by private individuals. Very likely delay in the transmission of the title to the individual may not result in any injury except in the rapid decay of the burnt timber. I am informed that unless an increased appropriation is given none of these surveys can be expected within a reasonable future. In other words, there is going to result a large loss of pine timber by reason of the land having been burnt over a year ago, and that this timber will be spoiled in six or eight months.

Now, the matter of the allotment of Indian lands and the matter of the disposition of homestead applications for final proof is being held up by reason of the deficiency in this appropriation.

I thank the gentleman for the opportunity to make the statement, and I hope next winter some careful consideration will be given to these facts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should say something in view of the statement that has just been made by the gentleman from Minnesota. The sundry civil bill as it passed the House carried as large sums for the various works of the Geological Survey as have ever been appropriated. I have not obtained this information officially, but I gathered it from other sources similar to those from which Members get information of different matters, that those interested in the work of the Geological Survey were so surprised and gratified at the liberality of the Democratic House that they felt there should be an organization in Washington to suppress anybody who complained that Congress was niggardly in appropriations for the public service.

The Geological Survey, like other services, has been for a great many years endeavoring to get as large appropriations as possible. Congress deemed it wise to give it for the present year as large an appropriation as it has had at any other time. The committee believed in so doing that it had done all that could reasonably be expected.

It may be that some of the force of the Geological Survey should be diverted from some work it is now doing to this work which the gentleman says is so pressing. I know that for some years the Committee on Appropriations was engaged in the difficult task of compelling appropriations for the Geological Survey to be expended upon the public domain rather than in some sections of the country where it benefited private enterprises almost exclusively. I think that result has been brought about, and much greater results are now being obtained with the same appropriations than some years ago.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I remember the gentleman severely criticized an appropriation bill because the sums in it were lumped and not itemized, and I think he very properly criticized it. That was some time ago. In that connection, does not the gentleman think it would be advisable, as long as the Geological Survey is really performing a dual purpose, that of making investigations to determine mineral deposits and things of that kind for the general mining world and also the work of testing the public land to determine whether it is of the character that should be passed to private ownership under the laws of the United States, to divide in future appropriation bills that item and set aside so much for the examination of public lands about to be transferred, so that that work would be carried on even if the other had to be halted for a time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee appropriates in this way in the hope that the pressure will be sufficient to compel all of this money to be expended upon the public domain, where I think properly it should be expended.

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman could suggest any way in which I could help in that matter, I would be very glad to cooperate with the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Whatever influence I have I shall be very glad to join with that of the gentleman in exerting that pressure. That is where the money should be expended, and that is where it is practically expended now.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the gentleman's attention to amendment No. 52, on page 56. I notice the conferees have stricken out the amendment put on in the Senate carrying an appropriation of $250,000 for the production of field artillery at the Rock Island Arsenal. I would like to know from the gentleman upon what information the conferees based their action in striking out that amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. On the same information the conferees had at the time the matter was discussed in the House, when they convinced the House that it should not be put in.

Mr. PEPPER. By a very narrow majority, I may say.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The reason is this: This appropriation was requested by Gen. Crozier, because when the Army bill passed the House the first time it carried $600,000 for the manufacture of small arms instead of $700,000, estimated by him to be necessary. He thereupon communicated to Congress that if that reduction of $100,000 remained, in the interest of economy he would concentrate that manufacture at the Springfield Arsenal, and in order to prevent the discharge of men employed at the Rock Island Arsenal he thought it would be necessary to obtain certain equipment to enter upon another line of manufacture. When the Army bill passed the Senate and was agreed to by the conferees it contained $700,000 for small arms instead of $600,000, so that there would be no diminution of the amount of work done in both arsenals during this year. I may say, speaking for myself and, I think, reflecting the views of others who have gone into the matter, the belief is that, according to the statement of Gen. Crozier, next year the manufacture of small arms will fall off very considerably and will necessitate this appropriation. The committee expects that provision for this equipment will be made at the next session of Congress so as to prevent the conditions that are feared.

Mr. PEPPER. The gentleman recognizes, of course, that the main argument of Gen. Crozier was not the laying off of men, but in the saving of money to the Government in the economic manufacture of field artillery.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think both arguments were combined. At any rate, the excuse taken advantage of for the transmission of the estimate was to prevent the laying off of the men at the Rock Island Arsenal.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the force of the point presented by the gentleman. However, I think we had a very good case, based on the actual saving to the Government in the installation of this plant.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no difference of opinion as to the necessity of making provision for it at the next session of Congress.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to an item on page 109 of the bill. The Senate inserted an amendment—125—making available the unexpended balance of the acts of April 13, 1908. I would like to ask the gentleman on what ground the conferees disagreed to that amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the managers on the part of the House refused to agree to that amendment, because it did not belong in this bill. If it belonged any place, it belonged in the Indian bill. The Senate had shown such great liberality in putting every conceivable thing in the Indian bill that the managers felt if there was any merit whatever or any suspicion of merit in the item it surely would have gone into the Indian appropriation bill.

The House and its conferees on a bill of this character should have a sufficient opportunity to inform themselves about matters which properly may be inserted in this bill without being compelled to pass upon matters connected with other departments of the Government with which they are not expected to be as familiar as members of committees who have to do with those departments.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to ask if this rule has been uniformly adhered to?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is a great misfortune that that rule has not been uniformly adhered to. The members of the Committee on Appropriations are doing their best to bring about such a condition that it will be adhered to.

Mr. STEENERSON. Why did not they adhere to that rule in another instance?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We did it to relieve the pressure, which was so great we could not resist.

Mr. STEENERSON. That might be a reflection upon Representatives who did not bring pressure to bear in these other cases.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I think not. It is a matter that did not belong in this bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. I recognize that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This bill has nothing to do with the question of making surveys for irrigation of Indian lands.

Mr. STEENERSON. I recognize that, and the only question for the item being on the bill is it did not come in from the Indian council until after the Indian appropriation bill had passed, so it was too late to insert it. Of course, if it is the uniform rule to exclude all items that do not strictly belong to the sundry civil appropriation bill but belonged to another bill——

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the rule of the committee, but occasionally, without realizing it, the committee may slip.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman does not think that they complied strictly to the rule in all these items?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It endeavors to do so, because it believes it results in much better legislation. The Committee on Appropriations has had this experience during the progress and preparation of bills during this session. After having thoroughly investigated and rejected items, they have been put by the Senate on five different appropriation bills over which other committees have had jurisdiction. The committee is endeavoring to compel the placing of items which belong on bills not under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations on such bills, and it is endeavoring to bring about a condition where items of appropriation belonging upon bills over which the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction shall be confined to those bills. In that way the Members whose duties in the House require them to obtain special information about various matters will be in a position to pass upon them and much better results will be obtained.

Mr. STEENERSON. As I understand the gentleman, it is simply because it applies to another bill.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to get some information from the gentleman from New York relating to Senate amendment No. 238, allowing in this bill $25,000 for the purpose of carrying into effect the bill which was passed this session of Congress known as the tobacco census bill. The House conferees have reduced that amount to $15,000. The information I would like to get from the gentleman is this: The Director of the Census, in a communication to the Senate Appropriations Committee, claims it will take $25,000 to carry this bill into effect. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if, in his opinion, this $15,000 that has been agreed upon in conference will enable this bill to be put into effect in all of its provisions? The bill requires a report to be made by the Director of the Census the 1st of October of this year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have a great deal of doubt whether there should have been any appropriation. One of the misfortunes of the Government is that we have great departments organized to do certain kinds of work and whenever any additional duties are devolved upon them which could well be performed by them as organized, the legislation is made the basis for a request for an additional appropriation to furnish a largely increased force not always necessary. An organization like the Census Office can do a much greater amount of work than it now does under the law, and the committee believes, in view of that organization and the appropriations made for it and the fact this is supplemental to the regular force, that it would be ample to do the work required in the most effective manner possible.

Mr. CANTRILL. And in no manner will it affect the carrying out of the proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We think there is not the slightest danger but that we have given the amplest means with which to carry on the work.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, this bill carries, in round numbers, by the conference report $112,000,000, and carries many of the branches of the public service. The House passed the bill. After all, I think in many respects the House did not adequately provide for the public service.

I voiced my opinion of this bill upon its consideration in the House in part, but the majority of the House overruled the minority and passed the bill. That is behind us, and I am not seeking to revive it except to call attention to it at this time. The bill went to the Senate. The Senate has power to amend, and the Senate did amend. The House disagreed to the Senate amendments. It went to conference. In the conference the Senate receded on many amendments and the House receded to some extent. My judgment is that the House might have agreed to some Senate amendments that the House conferees did not agree to, and some of them very important and far-reaching. My judgment is that this conference report does not adequately properly provide for the public service all along the line. But when an irresistible force meets an immovable body, unless the force prevails or the body prevails, or unless both move, or one moves, or the other moves at times, there would be no report at all. And, therefore, I have again discovered, as I have known for many years, that the Senate could not have its way or the House its way in all matters, it resulted, as all legislation, in a compromise. And, if I had a free hand, I would restore some of the Senate amendments entire. I would make a more liberal appropriation in many instances for the public service, but, of course, a minority member in a conference committee kicks if he desires to kick and presents his views to the majority members, but they, being a majority, are independent of the minority member. So, when the end came, I signed the conference report. It did not make any difference whether I signed it or not. Two can sign a conference report, but I ordinarily do sign unless there is something so outrageous, some sin of omission or commission, that I can not as a conferee sign a report without doing violence to my conscience. That is one way of protesting. But, having signed the report, I thought so far as it is important to protest somewhat at this time and make the statement that I have made.

A little later on the gentleman, possibly during consideration of the deficiency conference report if there is one, or without it if there is none, will ask unanimous consent, as is usual, that he may make his statement of appropriations. If he does I shall also ask unanimous consent that I may make a statement for the minority, or at least for myself, and that the same may be printed in the RECORD at an early day. I apprehend, following the usual course in similar cases at the close of a session, that the unanimous consent will be given, and that the statements will be made simultaneously.

Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] want?

Mr. MANN. Just a moment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill carries items of appropriation for the Panama Canal, and I rise only for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to a condition which I hope we managed to take care of. Under the existing law, where accidents occur on the canal construction work, the Isthmian Canal Commission is authorized to pay the amount of compensation allowed under the general law, in other cases the general law being enforced through the Secretary of the Interior; but, on the canal, through the Canal Commissioners. The utmost that is allowed is one year's pay. In the recent Panama Canal bill, which has passed both Houses and has gone to the President, there is a provision authorizing the President to devise a method for the determination and adjustment of claims arising out of personal injuries to employees on the canal, with the further provision that such claims when allowed shall be paid out of the money hereafter appropriated for that purpose. And the further provision that when the President does provide the method of adjustment, then the existing law providing for the payment for injuries on the Canal Zone shall cease to be of effect as to injuries occurring thereafter. I am informed by the President, although I do not make the statement officially, that his expectation is to sign the Panama bill, if it has not already been signed, and put into effect under this power in the bill a scheme of adjustment similar to the compensation act which has passed the Senate as to employees in interstate commerce, and also similar to the bill which has been reported into the House from the Committee on the Judiciary as to Government employees. This situation would then arise: There would have been no money appropriated out of which any claims could be paid between the time the President put the scheme into effect and when Congress meets and makes an appropriation hereafter. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], with whom I have talked upon the subject, whether he thinks it would not be practicable when the deficiency bill comes back to the House with Senate amendments, to agree in the House by unanimous consent, if unanimous consent can be obtained, that the conferees when appointed in the conference on the general deficiency bill shall have the authority of the House, so far as the House is concerned, to insert in that bill a provision authorizing the payment of the amounts which may be found due between now and the 1st of January, say, out of the appropriations already carried in the sundry civil bill for the Panama Canal.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think that could possibly be done, and I would be very glad to cooperate in any way possible to bring it about.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, we are about to pass the largest supply bill of the Government, a bill that deals with more matters of varied importance than any other, and it is a matter of gratification to me, as one of the conferees on the bill, to be able to repeat the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], that this bill, while carrying an adequate sum for the proper conduct of the Government bureaus that are sustained by appropriations made in it, yet carries a sum $30,225,859.74 less than the sundry civil bill that passed in the last session of the last Congress.

The bill as it passed the House carried something like $42,000,000 less than the total of the estimates. There were submitted to the Senate additional estimates of about two and one-half millions dollars. The Senate added $6,754,830.80, and the conferees agreed to $2,471,210 of that sum. So that, despite the criticism of the gentleman from Illinois, we find that, although the bill carried as it passed the House a sum in round figures $42,000,000 under the estimates, there was added in all only a little over $6,000,000 by the Senate, and there has remained on the bill of that sum a little over $2,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. The appropriations for the construction of the Panama Canal are continuing, as I understand it. The appropriation made last year, a year ago last winter, for the past fiscal year for the Panama Canal was how much larger than the amount that was expended? From six to ten million dollars, as I recollect.

Mr. SHERLEY. About $6,000,000, as I recall.

Mr. CANNON. So that that $6,000,000 is available for this year, and in that item alone the gentleman's statement is misleading.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman points out a particular instance.

Mr. CANNON. Six million dollars—that is a big child, and it counts twelve millions.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, it is big, but it is not nearly as big as the $30,000,000 of savings. But the gentleman will find, if he goes on that basis, that it is possible to take the bill of last year and show how the Republican Congress, extravagant though it was, made its showing by taking over something from the year before. I will not go into the details of it, but the fact remains and the individual items will warrant the statement that there has been a saving of $30,000,000 made without harm to the Government. Of course it follows that some of that is the result of changed conditions, but it also follows that some of it has resulted from a proper scrutiny of the estimates and a proper pruning of those estimates as submitted to the Congress.

I do not desire to undertake now to anticipate the statement that will be made by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, touching the appropriations, but in passing I want to say that, as one of those who have served with him in the majority, I feel that the House of Representatives and the country owe to him a vote of cordial thanks for the efficient and diligent manner in which he has performed his very arduous services. [Applause.]

No man not in intimate touch with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations can know the tremendous pressure to which he is subjected by Members of Congress, by those outside, but in the Government service, and by the public generally, for appropriations for objects of all kinds, some meritorious, and many not meritorious; and that he has shown the firmness and the courage to resist the unfair and the unwise demands is a matter of congratulation to the party to which he belongs and should be to the country and to the membership of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. I desire simply to add that I think that it is a source of congratulation not only to the majority, but to the entire membership of the House and the country, and I personally am very glad to congratulate the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and also the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] [applause] upon the ability which they have shown in the responsible charge of the appropriations, in connection with the other gentlemen on the Committee on Appropriations. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, in concluding my brief remarks I desire to call the attention of the membership of this House to the unscientific way in which we appropriate public moneys and to emphasize, if I can, the need of a real budget system in our national affairs. We are within 24 hours of the close of the first regular session of this Congress [applause], and yet there is no human being who now knows how much money will be appropriated by this Congress, even in round figures.

Some of us who have watched are enabled in a general way to estimate what the total will be, but it is an illustration of the unscientific method. Nearly every really serious trouble that has arisen in connection with appropriations in this Congress has come about by virtue of the fact that we consider the individual bills separately and apart from their relationship to the whole expenditure. I hope that this Congress will be the last one that will ever appropriate the vast sums that we do for the conduct of the public business without having presented to it at the beginning of its labors a statement of proposed expenditures that when approved by the Congress shall represent the total that may be expended for the ensuing fiscal year, leaving the details to be worked out by the various committees, as they now are.

I shall not undertake at this time to elaborate the plan that I have proposed to the Congress for the concentration of appropriating power. I have no desire to enhance the power of the committee of which I happen to be a member; but I realize that unless you have somewhere one central authority dealing with the general subject of appropriations you can not have that proper consideration of the relative value of appropriations that ought to be had. In the beginning of a Congress we ought to consider how much we propose to expend for war purposes, for what might be called national insurance; how much we propose to spend for the ordinary machinery of government; how much we propose to expend for the administration of justice; how much for internal improvements; and those are questions that can only be considered properly when considered in relationship to each other. A debate on a naval appropriation bill by itself is necessarily an inadequate debate. A debate on a river and harbor bill by itself is necessarily an inadequate debate. If we could have presented to the people of America a real budget program, letting the party in power here defend and the party in opposition criticize, you would then present to the American people the real issues upon which parties should be formed, instead of many of the false, transitory issues that come up from day to day.

You would then have the attention of the American people directed to the tremendous expenditures that are going on in public affairs. You would then have the American people understand that very salutary lesson that you can not have governmental activity without paying for it. Under our system of raising a very large portion of the public moneys through indirect taxation, so that the individual citizen is not aware of the fact that he is paying the tax even at the very time that he is paying it, you constantly have an invitation toward extravagant appropriations. If men had to pay their Federal taxes as they pay their State taxes by walking up to the wicket and paying the tax bill, there would then be a proper inquiry as to whether the particular governmental activity that required the additional expenditure was worth the price or not. But you can not get the attention of the American people upon the matter of a budget as long as the debates in the House of Representatives consist largely in sharpshooting at particular items without any survey of the whole matter. We are the only great Nation on earth that undertakes to appropriate these vast sums without a consideration of the matter as a whole. And when you think that the Congress of the United States appropriates annually a thousand millions, and yet we bring in from various and sundry committees bill after bill, and no one, except as he may gain by private conference, has any knowledge of what the totals may be, you can see the absolutely unscientific character of the method. The wonder is that with such a method the expenditure is not even more than it has been in the past.

It is always difficult to make people change their habits. A Government is very much like the individuals that compose it. It has its habits. We dislike to give up power. A committee having charge of a bill does not want any supervision over it. Yet I appeal to this House, that we ought to rise above the question of our own particular power as members or chairmen of certain committees and bring about a system whereby there can be presented to the House at the beginning of the session a real budget, and to that end I shall propose in the near legislative future a concrete program. I have made this statement in order that the attention of the House and of the country might again be drawn to this situation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 22871) to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to aid in diffusing among the people of the United States useful and practical information on subjects relating to agriculture and home economics, and to encourage the application of the same, there may be established, under the direction of the college or colleges in each State now receiving, or which may hereafter receive, the benefits of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," and of acts supplementary thereto, a department to be known and designated as an agricultural extension department: Provided, That in any State in which two or more such colleges have been or hereafter may be established the appropriations hereinafter made to such State shall be administered by such college or colleges as the legislature of such State may direct.

The following committee amendment was read.

On page 2, line 7, after the word "two," insert the words "or more."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the fact that I had an amendment that was offered yesterday and is pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What section does it relate to?

Mr. RUSSELL. Section 1, page 2, line 8.

Mr. LEVER. Let the Clerk read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "established" in line 8, page 2, the following:

"And normal schools or colleges that receive state appropriations to promote the diffusion of information in agriculture and home economics."

Mr. LEVER. To that, Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to speak briefly upon this amendment. I have not offered it as one unfriendly, but as a friend to the bill, and I will vote for it whether the amendment is agreed to or not. [Applause.]

The purpose of this bill is to carry practical education and information to the farmers of the country through the State agricultural colleges that were given land grants by Congress, and this amendment proposes to extend its provisions to the agricultural colleges of the different States that have been established and are maintained by appropriations from the several States.

In my own State we have five State normal schools that have been established by the State, and annually the State legislature appropriates money for the purpose of maintaining the agricultural departments in these normal schools. One of them is located in the district I represent. This normal school has an agricultural department with ample equipment in land, farm machinery, and laboratories for giving the best of instruction, and is now giving instruction to many boys of that section of the State.

I am opposed to monopoly in any form, whether it be religion, politics, business, or education. The purpose of this bill is to extend education to farmers of the country; and that being true, I believe that it can be done by agricultural colleges located in different parts of the State better than by one agricultural college located in the center of the State.

Under the present Republican administration postmasters are selected upon the indorsement of Members of Congress, and I presume after the 4th day of next March that will be the policy of the Democratic administration. That wise policy has been adopted and is followed because the Member of Congress or the defeated Member of Congress of the dominant party knows the people of his district and knows who is best qualified for the place better than the appointing power.

If that is a wise policy, it would seem that it would be a wise provision to adopt this amendment and bring the agencies that are to render this service to the farmers nearer to the people they are to serve, so that they may be better acquainted with those to be appointed to render the service.

We all know that usually a large part of every appropriation made by Congress is consumed in expenses, and oftentimes in traveling expenses. Under this bill as now written the one agricultural college in Missouri that will send out instructors is located 300 miles from my district, but the agricultural department of the State Normal School is within its borders, from which the proposed educational work upon the farms could be carried on more conveniently and with much less expense.

I am not only a friend of this bill, but I am a friend of the farmer. I do not pose as a practical farmer to-day, even for political purposes, yet I came from the farm, and for more than 35 years I have caused to be produced annually upon the old farm where I was born several thousand bushels of corn and wheat. By the way, it now occurs to me, as I speak of this, that it was 58 years ago to-day that I was born upon that farm. [Applause.] I know of no way that I could better celebrate that, to me, important event than in raising my voice in this House in support of a bill like this that is intended to, and I believe will, prove to be a great benefit to the farmers of the country. I realize, as every sane man must realize, that agriculture is the most important vocation among men.

George Washington once said:

Agriculture feeds and to a great extent clothes the human race.

That was true when it was spoken, and it is as true to-day as it was a century and a quarter ago, when it was uttered by the Father of his Country. The United States, and principally the Mississippi Valley, from which I come, produces the corn and wheat that feeds the great majority of people of this country and sends a large surplus every year to foreign countries that are less fortunate than ours. I desire, however, to call attention to this fact: The surplus in farm products shipped to foreign countries is being rapidly reduced. The wheat exported from this country in 1900 was 215,990,073 bushels. In 1910 we shipped abroad only 69,311,760 bushels. In 1900 we exported 181,405,473 bushels of corn, and in 1910 only 65,614,522 bushels. In 1851 82 per cent of all of the exports to foreign countries were the products of the farm, but 60 years later, in 1911, only 51 per cent of our exports were produced upon the farm. This falling off may be accounted for in several ways. In the first place the public domain is almost exhausted, and the tillable acreage of land in the country is not keeping pace with the increase in population. Again, land as it grows older, unless it is fertilized or is kept up by a rotation of crops, becomes less productive, and then we know that a great many farmers have left the farm and gone into the cities and towns. All these things but serve to convince us of the importance of this bill or some measure that will aid our farmers in acquiring the knowledge that will enable them to produce more upon each acre of land.

There is another thing to which I desire to call attention: We have often heard statesmen and students of economics say that when the balance of trade is in our favor the vaults of the United States Treasury are swelling with gold, that we have a large amount of money per capita in circulation, and that we have good times. If that is true, to the farmers of this country much of the credit is due, for even under the relatively reduced exportation of farm products, as now, they still produce a majority of the exports that go to foreign countries which gives to our country the balance of trade, and that helps to bring this prosperity of which we boast.

I desire to call attention to the further fact that the appropriations of Congress for the benefit of agriculture are always less than 2 per cent of the total annual appropriations made for all purposes, while about 60 per cent is expended by Congress every year to maintain the military arm of the Government even in these years of profound peace. Congress expends more annually to construct, to man, and to maintain one single battleship than all of the money that is appropriated the same year to promote the cause of agriculture in the United States.

We often to-day hear the cry of "back to the farm," and I confess that it is an important theme to agitate and a desirable result to encourage, but if we desire those who have left the farms to return or to induce those now there to remain, we can best do it by making life more tolerable upon the farm, by making it more convenient and more comfortable, and by carrying more contentment and more happiness to the boys and girls upon the farm than they have enjoyed heretofore.

This House has done more in that direction than has been done by any preceding Congress in the history of this country.

Some of the bills, however, have failed to pass the Senate, and some have failed by reason of the President's vetoes. We have passed a bill extending aid for the construction and the improvement of post roads in the several States. We have passed a bill the purpose of which is to make cheaper the transportation of necessary articles to and from the farm.

We passed bills reducing the tariff taxes upon cotton and woolen goods and other necessaries of life to all the people.

We passed a bill known as the "farmers' free-list bill," that proposed to put upon the free list more than 100 articles that are necessary upon every farm and in every home in the land, but it was vetoed by the President.

I hope this amendment will be agreed to, believing, as I do, that it will improve the bill and make it more beneficial to the farmers of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I renew the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. LEVER. That it is not germane to this section of the bill. The bill provides for and is applicable to land-grant colleges.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I can not understand why this should not be in order. Here is a bill providing for the expenditure of a certain amount of money for the purpose of educating farmers of certain States, and it is conditioned on the fact that the States are to spend an equal amount before this appropriation is operative. Now, then, my State has appropriated not only money for a State college of agriculture at Columbia, where the university is located, but every year the legislature is appropriating for normal schools of the State, and it seems to me that this would be in order and along the line of the purposes of the original bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The matter is so close that I think the House ought to have the right to vote on the matter, and the Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON] shall not lose any of his rights as to his amendment. I do not know to what part of the bill he expects to offer it, but I ask unanimous consent if we pass the section to which he expects to offer it that we may return to it when he comes in.

Mr. LEVER. As I understand, his amendment is pending and is in print in the RECORD.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Has he been sent for?

Mr. TRIBBLE. We have sent for him.

The Clerk read section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall be the object and duty of said agricultural extension departments to give instruction and practical demonstrations in agriculture and home economics to persons not resident in said colleges in the several communities, as may be provided by the States accepting the provisions of this act, and to convey and impart to such persons information on said subjects through field demonstrations, publications, and otherwise.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MORGAN. I just came into the Hall. I offered an amendment yesterday which applies to section 2. Would not that come in before amendments offered to-day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Oklahoma presently. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by adding at the end of section 2 the words "Provided, That the demonstrator shall have not less than five years of practical and successful experience in farming and home economics and shall be over 27 years of age."

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I understand the chairman of the committee will accept that amendment and consent to its being adopted.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Georgia and myself are not far apart as to the objects of this bill and what it ought to contain. I have not seen his amendment, so do not know just what it contains, but I doubt the advisability of putting in the bill the requisite that a man shall not be appointed until he has reached a certain age.

I think the judgment of the department and the officials of the agricultural colleges ought to be trusted in that matter. I have just come into the Chamber and do not now recollect the other provisions of the amendment. The experience required may be all right, but I doubt very much the advisability of putting into cold print, into the law, that a man shall not, under any circumstances, regardless of his qualifications, be appointed unless he has reached the age of 27 years. I trust the gentleman will modify his amendment in that respect, and if he does not I shall feel compelled to vote against it.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this amendment. It makes years and not ability a qualification. I have always understood that in every department of life it was ability and not years that made the person competent for the discharge of prescribed duties. This provides that a person must not be less than 27 years of age and must have had so many years of successful experience. There are some men who in 1 year will have more and better knowledge of a given subject than other men will acquire in 20 years. Ability must control those things and not the age of the individual or the five or six years of experience. It depends upon ability, upon application, upon the study of an individual, and, therefore, to fix a qualification of 5 years of experience and 27 years of age for a demonstrator it seems to me will be to ignore the most essential qualification of a good instructor or demonstrator. In our farming districts we do not judge qualifications according to the number of years a man has farmed. Many men have farmed for 50 years who are not as good farmers as those who have farmed for less than 10 years. It is the application that the individual has given to the work and the study that makes him the competent person. I hope that this amendment will be voted down, as it is unjust and unfair. If it be adopted, it might prevent the best qualified person from taking part in the educational promotion of this great work. I therefore hope that the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, some of the qualifications of a demonstrator, as I undertook to explain in my speech two or three days since, are practical, successful experience in farming, thorough understanding of the people with whom he is to come in contact, a fine sense of native shrewd business tact, and a personality that will call men to him. My first amendment provided that the trustees of the college should appoint the demonstrators. I struck that section, and Mr. LEVER agreed to the amendment. If you permit this fund to go to these agricultural schools and turn it over to the faculties to select the demonstrator and let them send the beardless youths, as they will do—the leaders of the class—I fear for the usefulness of this bill in its operations. The teacher naturally prefers his pupil, and if they select boys 19 or 20 years of age the farmers will not hear them as freely as they would a man of successful experience as a real farmer. Many farmers would tell the boys that they would starve to death on their farms and would refuse to hear liberally the beardless youth talk about scientific farming. Certainly, to be a graduate of an agricultural school would better qualify a demonstrator, provided he possessed other necessary qualifications. I deny most emphatically that it is necessary to have a college education, and I do assert that he should have experience. Let the graduate get experience first and then the appointment.

The Page bill provides for agricultural school education. I stated yesterday that I favored the passage of the Page bill. I desire to qualify that statement. When I made that statement I had not read the bill, but had read part of Senator PAGE'S speech. There are certain provisions in the Page bill to which I am opposed, not necessary to now mention. I noted them while the bill was being read as a substitute to the Lever bill.

The Lever bill is proposed to reach the farmer. I talked to Dr. Knapp about this question and others have talked with him, and he will tell you that unless you send a man with personality, a man of some age, a man with experience in farming, a man who knows how to reach the farmer, this fund may not succeed. The farmer knows that a youth without experience, who has never farmed, who has never had any practical experience, can not teach him how to farm. He must have practical experience, and, if we would make this a success, let us go at it in a practical way. This is a reasonable provision. Twenty-seven years of age is not old. I would remind gentlemen that our Master, the Great Teacher, was 30 years of age before He went into the world to teach men. There are professions that young boys can enter and succeed, but this is one calling in which men of experience are required, and I want to see this fund succeed.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It occurs to me this amendment ought not to be adopted because it puts unnecessary and I think altogether unreasonable limitations on the discretion of the authorities in choosing competent men for the work. The fact that a man is 27 years old is no guaranty whatever that he will be a good farmer and it is no guaranty whatever that he will not be a good one. The fact that a man has not had five successive and successful years as a farmer does not necessarily mean that he would not be a good teacher. Now, here is what this amendment says, "that the demonstrator shall not have had less than five years of practical and successful experience in farming and home economics." What is successful experience? What is a successful farmer? What does it take to constitute five years of success as a farmer? Does it mean that the man who gets good crops is a successful farmer, or a man who at the end of five years is a prosperous man? If a man has demonstrated his ability as a teacher and as an instructor, what difference does it make whether he has gone on a farm and for five years has made money out of it? It says "successful experience in farming," and I take it that a man who goes on a farm and who goes broke has not had any successful experience in farming.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. Who is to determine whether he has been successful or not and what is the standard by which the success is to be measured? Is it that one man has farmed 20 acres and done fairly well, or is it that a man has cultivated 200 acres in different crops and done exceedingly well? Who is to fix the standard under which the amendment works?

Mr. TRIBBLE rose.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I can not yield now. I think perhaps we could designate the man to make the selection, but what standard he would likely erect in making them passes my comprehension. He must not only have had successful experience as a farmer but he must have had it for 5 years. I do not know whether it is 5 successive years or 5 years out of the 30 he has been engaged in it, but in addition to that he must have 5 successful years of home economics. What a successful year in home economics is I am unable to say. I think that we ought not to burden this bill with an amendment which, I venture the opinion, nobody on this floor can tell the meaning of, and I hope that the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 13, after the words "economics to" add the words "enrolled scholars and."

Mr. LEVER. I reserve a point of order on the amendment, and I ask that the amendment be read as it will appear when amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the language of the bill as it would appear when amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

That it shall be the object and duty of said agricultural extension department to give instructions and practical demonstration in agriculture and home economics to enrolled scholars and persons not residents of said colleges, etc.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the amendment is to provide that those colleges to which appropriation is made shall teach boys in the college as well as those who are not residents of the college. It seems to me to be a perfectly fair proposition that if we are going to make appropriations by the Government in conjunction with the States for the employment of teachers we also ought to require the boys to be educated to be teachers. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I very much hope that this amendment will not be agreed to by the House for the reason that this bill does not undertake to teach the boys agriculture in the schools in the various States. The main object of the bill is to demonstrate to the adult farmer and to his boy upon the farm the best methods of agriculture. To adopt this amendment would absolutely destroy the symmetry of this bill and place it upon a basis that has not been agreed to or thought about by the men who have considered it. I trust it will be voted down.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman says that the object and duty of said agricultural extension department are to give instructions and practical demonstration in agriculture and home economics to persons not residents in said colleges. Now, who are persons resident in said colleges that the bill has in mind?

Mr. LEVER. We have in mind the expression "resident in said colleges" the students of the college, and this bill is drawn for the purpose of preventing the use of this money in giving lectures, and so forth, and that aid can be given to the demonstration work in the field and teaching of home economics away from the colleges.

Mr. ALEXANDER. And teaching it to the farmer.

Mr. LEVER. To the farmer, the man on the farm away from the colleges and not a student of a college.

Mr. ALEXANDER. My understanding of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is if that amendment is agreed to the teachers in the colleges can go to the various communities who organize the boys into classes and teach them, and that that is not the purpose of this bill?

Mr. LEVER. Not at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As I read this section it provides, in substance as well as in fact, that the college shall merely be the agency through which a trained man shall go to the farmer.

Mr. LEVER. I think that is entirely correct.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If we should make an appropriation to a college to be an employment agency, should we not also require that college to teach a boy to qualify as a tutor?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that the purpose of this bill is not pedagogic—to teach how to teach—but to teach farmers how to farm. As a matter of fact, under the Nelson amendment, we are now teaching a great many men how to teach agriculture, and this bill does not propose to teach boys how to teach agriculture, but, as I said a moment ago, to teach the farmer upon his own farm the best method of agriculture.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It does seem to me the amendment should be supported. The purpose of the bill, as it stands, is to provide qualified teachers to instruct the farmer, and that could be as well done under a more economical basis as it is being done through the Department of Agriculture. That is the reason I want the scholar to get something out of this appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, agricultural colleges do have students, all that can be procured to come, where they take a course in agriculture. They are not suffering from a lack of that kind of instruction. This is not to supplement that work but is to go into a new field.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will permit, this bill seeks to supply the missing link between the colleges and the man on the farm.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I am so thoroughly in accord with the gentleman's bill that I want to ask some questions in order to be better acquainted with it. Why do you employ this language in section 2, "Not resident in State colleges"? I understood from the answer to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER], the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] said it referred to the students at the college. Why does not the gentleman use the language "students enrolled in a college"? I never knew of a student as a resident of a college. The gentleman does not intend that the student at the college shall in any way be included within those who are to receive the instruction?

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] that that matter was looked into very carefully, and we have followed the language of some other bill, language that has been passed upon and agreed to as being the proper language to convey the idea. I do not think it will make a great deal of difference.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, I will suggest that I think the term "resident student" is a very common term in nearly all colleges.

Mr. BUTLER. It has been settled otherwise in Pennsylvania.

Mr. MANN. Pennsylvania is a very exceptional State in many respects.

Mr. BUTLER. We are largely engaged in agriculture, and I will remind the gentleman right now that if he will read the report on this bill he will find we are far ahead of all others in rural population in Pennsylvania, and thus we are very much interested in this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania is one of the greatest agricultural States in the Union.

Mr. MANN. This demonstration work shall be done at the farm, and the expression in the bill is to prevent people coming as resident students at the colleges to employ this money. The money is to go to them and they not come to the money.

Mr. BUTLER. This language is plain to the other gentlemen, but I want it to be plain to me. As I understand the purpose of this bill it is to assist people engaged in agriculture who are not connected in any way with State colleges? I would like it to be made plain. And if the gentleman who drew this bill is satisfied that it does not in any way include students at State colleges, it will satisfy me.

Mr. LEVER. It does not, I can say very definitely.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. LEVER. I do.

Mr. CULLOP. As I understand it, the intention is to make plain the distinction of the purpose. Instead of having the pupil go to the college to be taught, the instructor goes to the community for that purpose?

Mr. LEVER. That is the proposition, and that is the intention of the bill; and we feel that this language more nearly covers it than any we could find.

Mr. CULLOP. I think the gentleman is correct about that, because the word "resident" there means the pupil attending the college.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

I am opposed to this amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and also to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN], which I understand will be offered next, and I would like to discuss both of them briefly together.

The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] seeks to add the words "and enrolled scholars" to the language defining those among whom this demonstration work is to be done. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] seeks to enlarge it so that it will be extended to "students in graded public schools in districts not less than 25 square miles in area," and to other persons not resident in said colleges, and so forth.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the idea has already been expressed several times, but it may not be amiss to emphasize the purposes of this bill. As has been stated, we have in each State some college, either separate or in connection with other colleges, in which agriculture is taught; also many of the States have progressed so far as to require the teaching of elementary agriculture in the public schools. The purpose of this act is to get away from the agricultural college, which so small a proportion of farmers' sons attend; to get away even from the public schools, without in the least minimizing agricultural instruction in the public schools; to get out into the field, to teach the farmer by actual demonstration better farm methods; to get into the homes of the farmers, where the farmer's family resides, and teach home economics. In other words, the purpose of this bill is to supply a class of instruction in the betterment of agriculture in the United States which is not supplied in any other way except one, and that one method is what is known as the farmers' cooperative demonstration work, instituted by Dr. Seaman A. Knapp.

And in connection with that, I think all of us who have given the slightest attention to that work will agree to the statement made yesterday afternoon by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], eulogizing it as perhaps not only the most radical, but the most useful departure in the introduction of improved farm methods of reaching the average farmer who can not be reached by any other method, which has ever been devised or introduced into agricultural teaching in the United States.

And while upon that subject I wish to say that, in my opinion, gentlemen who are jealous of that work—the farmers' cooperative demonstration work, and I think no one estimates its value more highly than I—need have no fear that it will be seriously jeopardized by this bill. As great a work as is being accomplished by this farmers' cooperative demonstration work in the South, as valuable as it is esteemed in every section of the country——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMALL. May I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I move that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. I say, Mr. Speaker, that as highly esteemed as this farmers' cooperative demonstration work may be in the results which it has wrought in the Southern States and as evidenced by the fact that the agricultural appropriation bill for the current year, which I have before me, carries an appropriation of $325,000 for the extension of similar work in States other than in the South—I say, no matter how valuable it may be, it does not reach all of the farmers which it was intended to reach.

Take my State of North Carolina, for illustration, where it is extremely popular and where for its introduction counties are required to cooperate to the extent of appropriating $1 for every dollar that is supplied by the Department of Agriculture. Out of 100 counties in the State, it has been introduced into only 48 counties, and that in the face of the most diligent efforts made by the State, the Department of Agriculture, and through other instrumentalities.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that it is a most remarkable showing, considering the fact that this cooperative demonstration work has been in vogue only for the last 10 years?

Mr. SMALL. I agree entirely with the gentleman in that opinion, but I doubt not, Mr. Speaker, that in several of these Southern States, at least, the proportion of the counties in which it has been introduced has not been so great.

The point I was making was not in the slightest to minimize the work of the farmers' cooperative demonstration work, but to wish it Godspeed and to join in all the eulogies which have been passed upon that work by other Members of the House. Yet I wish to repeat that the passage of this bill will not in the least jeopardize that work. Ultimately, in the future, at a date which none of us can anticipate, it may be that that work will be undertaken entirely by cooperation between the United States and the several States under the provisions of this bill, or this bill as it may be subsequently amended. I call attention to the fact that even as it is this farmers' cooperative demonstration work is to some extent precarious. We appropriate $300,000 for this work and for the control of the boll weevil. That alone does not represent the amount expended in that work in the South. Not only do the counties and the local agencies cooperate by appropriating money in the establishment of this work in the South, but the general education board makes an appropriation, the amount of which I do not now recall; and, added together, these three agencies constitute a very much larger sum—three times as large, perhaps—as is appropriated by the United States.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If this bill is enacted into law, will it be practicable for the general educational board to do the work that they have been doing through the agencies of the Bureau of Farm Demonstration Work in the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. SMALL. There is certainly nothing in this act which will prevent them from continuing their contributions, and in my opinion they will not so construe it.

[The time of Mr. SMALL having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended two minutes.]

Mr. SMALL. In the two minutes which I have remaining, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that, having read this bill very carefully, in my opinion, it is admirably suited to the purposes for which it was intended. In connection with these two amendments which I am discussing, I will call attention to the language in the latter part of section 2, which provides that in the extension of this work it is to convey and impart to such persons information on such subjects through "field demonstrations, publications, and otherwise"; and the point I make is that the agricultural colleges in the States, which are to administer this fund under such general supervision as is provided in the bill, and which does not affect the details, may, if they choose to do so, within the limits of the act, extend it, so that it shall not only embrace instruction of adult farmers in the field, and not only demonstrations and instruction in economics in the home, but also, if the limitations of the act permit, such instruction and demonstration may include the public schools. There is sufficient provision in the bill already to give to the States the power to extend it, in so far as it ought to be extended for demonstration and field work, in the field and in the home, and in such other ways as may be desired.

Mr. LEVER. I ask for a vote on this amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment, which was offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after the word "to," in line 13, on page 2, the following: "students in graded public schools, in districts of not less than 25 square miles in area, and to other," so that the section when so amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That it shall be the object and duty of said agricultural extension departments to give instruction and practical demonstrations in agriculture and home economics to students in graded public schools in districts of not less than 25 square miles in area, and to persons not resident in said colleges in the several communities, as may be provided by the States accepting the provisions of this act, and to convey and impart to such persons information on said subjects through field demonstrations, publications, and otherwise."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr Speaker, I wish to make the following supplemental statement to that made by me under date of August 15, and published in the RECORD of August 21, entitled "Review of work of Democratic House of Representatives, Sixty-second Congress, first and second sessions":

This Congress has made provision in the Post Office appropriation bill for a parcel post, whereby delivery shall be made at fixed postal rates within a period reasonably required for transportation and delivery of fourth-class mail matter, which shall embrace farm and factory products not now embraced by law in either the first, second, or third class mail matter, not exceeding 11 pounds in weight nor greater in size than 72 inches in length and girth combined, nor in form or kind likely to injure the person of any postal employee or damage the mail equipment or other mail matter, and not of a perishable character.

The House has, in its legislation touching the Panama Canal, incorporated an antitrust feature and provided for free ships, free shipbuilding materials, and for the joint and independent operations of ships and railroads.

A bill has been passed reconstructing the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, which establishes a comprehensive and most efficient health service.

A bill has been passed strengthening the pure food law so as to conform to the decisions of the Supreme Court since the passage of the original pure food law.

A bill has been passed for the improvement of the Lighthouse Service.

Measures are pending before the House which look to the betterment of facilities of commerce through provisions for bridges, dams, and the proper encouragement of the development of water powers and private navigation, the investigation of the physical values of property of all public carriers, and the status of their stocks and bonds; also providing for much-needed life-saving and quarantine stations and for greater efficiency in the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I have offered this amendment, not with any unfriendly feeling toward this bill and its provisions, so far as it goes. I am heartily in favor of it, but I believe that this bill may be improved. I believe its benefits may be extended. I believe that by adding the amendment, which I have offered, it will be perfected. The proposed amendment will extend the benefits, advantages, and usefulness of the act.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] says in his remarks with reference to this amendment that the object and purpose of this bill is to provide education or instruction by demonstrators or by demonstration. However, section 2 especially provides that this information may be given on subjects through field demonstrations, publications, and otherwise. So that section 2 is broad enough to include the provisions of my amendment.

But, Mr. Speaker, the object of this amendment is not to make the public schools generally come within the provisions of this act. You will observe that my amendment provides simply that this instruction shall be given in district public schools, or any graded public schools in districts with 25 square miles of territory. I do not know what the condition of all the States of the Union are in regard to graded district schools, but I am certain that throughout the country generally the number of graded district schools are, comparatively speaking, very limited.

I believe that there is nothing, absolutely nothing, so important to the interests of this country as the public schools of this Nation. We talk about doing something in the interest of the farmer. The very object and purpose of this bill is to do something in the interest of the farmer. What is the condition of the farmer's boys and girls? They are to-day absolutely without adequate provision for education. Ninety-eight per cent of the farmer's boys and girls of the United States absolutely have no means of education, except in the one-room country schoolhouse. The boys and girls that live in the towns and cities have ample facilities afforded them in the high schools, but the boys and girls in the country do not have those facilities.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks that his time be extended five minutes, is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, now to come to the point I wish to get before the House, and I am very much in earnest in this matter. I have two objects in offering this amendment. First, I want to encourage the establishment of the graded country school. In my State there are about a thousand district schools, and we have to-day 86 graded district schools, where four or five districts have been combined, and have graded schools where the boys and girls of the farmers have a reasonable opportunity to get the fundamentals of education, and thus in a way start out in life so that they may become intelligent farmers and understand and appreciate what is scientific farming.

So if this amendment is adopted and these $3,000,000 are to be appropriated from year to year in this cause, it will give great encouragement to the farmers of the United States to consolidate their district schools into graded schools so that they can have the benefit of this appropriation.

My amendment does not contemplate giving instruction in lectures or through books, but in graded schools where you have 40 or 50 boys and girls from 14 to 16 years of age, where this demonstrator can go and establish his farm in order that he may, through demonstration and otherwise, give this information to the people. The boy and girl from 12 to 16 years of age will comprehend this information and grasp it perhaps more readily than would the adult farmer. If you leave the bill as reported by the committee and leave out the graded schools in the country district, you are limiting and restricting this great fund which we are about to appropriate for the encouragement of agriculture.

It will not be a very important change in the bill when you simply include the district graded schools. It does not require this instruction to be given in one-room schoolhouses, but only graded schools. It seems to me that we may well extend the instruction to be given to graded-school districts. I hope the gentleman who has charge of the bill will see that there can be no more appropriate place to give instruction in scientific farming than in a graded country school. It will not take any large part of the fund. It will not restrict the provisions of the bill. The demonstrators can go out among the farmers individually and also reach the graded district schools, where there will be gathered 40 or 50 embryo farmers, the very best persons to whom this instruction could be given.

I ask you to support this amendment, to broaden the field and the scope of the work to be done under this bill so that it may give an impetus and encouragement to the people of the country to improve their country schools. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I have here a letter, which I wish to publish as a part of my remarks, from the Hon. John Field, editor of the Oklahoma Farm Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I submit a letter on this subject from the Hon. John Field, editor of the Oklahoma Farm Journal. Mr. Field is authority upon all matters pertaining to agriculture.

The letter is as follows:

[From the Oklahoma Farm Journal, Oklahoma City.]

OKLAHOMA CITY, May 16, 1912.

Hon. DICK T. MORGAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I cordially indorse the bill (H. R. 20282), which you have introduced in the House. As you know, I regard all of these things from an Oklahoma standpoint, but believe that anything which is good for the farmers of Oklahoma will be good for the farmers of the entire country and for every line of business.

The provision in section 2, "That it shall be the object and duty of said agricultural extension departments or divisions to give instruction and demonstrations in agriculture and home economics to students in graded public schools in districts of not less than 25 square miles in area," will, if the bill is adopted, place instruction in agriculture and home economics in the public schools on a basis where real instruction will be possible. As you know, our State constitution provides that these things shall be had in the common schools, and three State legislatures have cheerfully assumed that this constitutional provision will qualify teachers who know nothing of agriculture and home economics, and care less, so that they can impart useful instruction along these lines.

The effect of your bill, if adopted, would be to cause the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College to take an active interest in the development of graded public schools. The employees of the extension department of the college would have as their job the teaching of agriculture and home economics in such schools. If there were no such schools there would be no jobs. If there were 1,000 such schools there would be many jobs.

While a great deal of talk is indulged in concerning the beauties of higher learning, and all of that, the fact remains that the jobs in sight are the important things to those who manage State institutions.

The chief cause for the general movement from the country to the cities and towns is, I am convinced, the difference between the character of the school system of the country and of the towns.

Vast sums have been expended for the development of agricultural colleges and district agricultural schools, and the former have done a large amount of very useful and necessary work. The great educational problem which is, as yet, unsolved is the improvement of the system of schools where 98 per cent of the children get their only education. Money from the State and Nation has worked a great improvement in facilities for higher education. Money from the State and Nation properly applied will work a similar improvement in the system of schools for elementary education—and such improvement will not come without it.

Of the various measures before Congress which I have examined, looking toward an extension of knowledge concerning scientific agriculture among the people of the country, none except your bill strikes at the root of the difficulty. Farmers with a thorough elementary education find no difficulty whatever in obtaining from the published results of the investigations of experiment stations and through farm papers the information which they need to make their business increasingly profitable. The ignorant man who had no opportunity for education and who has not the natural ability or the training to think connectedly can not make a success of farming any more than of any other business.

I sincerely hope that your bill will be substituted for all of those now pending, and am confident that the expenditure of funds along the lines indicated in your bill will be of vastly more benefit than if spent for any other purpose than the improvement of elementary schools.

The last Oklahoma Legislature passed a law which, in effect, promised $2,500 toward half the cost of a building in each rural graded-school district of not less than 25 square miles in area. Notwithstanding the fact that none of this money has yet been paid to such districts, the number of districts of this character has increased from 30 to 86 in less than a year. This means that 10,000 more country children have the same chance for elementary education that all town children have. There is the big educational problem and your bill is drawn along exactly the right lines to reach it.

Faithfully, yours,

JOHN FIELDS, Editor.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I insist on the point of order. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this bill proposes to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with the agricultural colleges of the several States, receiving the benefit of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and acts supplemental thereto. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Oklahoma would broaden this appropriation to go to district or graded schools, a proposition not contemplated in the bill at all, and is not germane to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina is it not a fact that the bill and amendment refer to the qualifications of persons who are to receive the instruction? The amendment extends the qualifications, and that is entirely for the House to pass upon, whether it will extend or limit those to whom the instruction shall be given.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the amendment offered by the gentleman is a very great broadening of the purposes of the bill, and carries it away from the main object of the bill, the main object being that the agricultural colleges shall do a certain kind of work with a certain class of people.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, while I am in favor of the amendment, I do not think it is subject to the point of order. The gentleman from South Carolina has entitled his bill—

A bill to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress, etc.

But the title to a bill does not control amendments which may be offered to the bill. The purpose of this bill is to provide agricultural extension and development and demonstration work. It can not be said that because a Member who draws a bill covering certain subjects attempts to limit it by the title he can thereby prevent the House, upon consideration of the bill, from adding amendments to it relating to the subject matter of the bill. The subject matter of this bill is plainly agricultural extension. It is wholly within the power of the House, on amendment, to provide for agricultural instruction in one way or another, regardless of the title to the bill, and when the House is through amending the bill it has the power to change the title to correspond to the bill as amended.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I had desired to make an observation on the point of order, but the gentleman from Illinois has so completely and thoroughly covered the subject, as he always does, that I think my observations are unnecessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the gentleman is of the same opinion as the gentleman from Illinois as to the point of order?

Mr. GARRETT. I am.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is overruled.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25531) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 25531) and ask that the report be read.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1235).

The committee of conference on the disagreeng votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25531) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 6, 7, 8, 12, 14, 15, 27, 28, 61, 64, 76, and 77.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 13, 16, 24, 25, 26, 30, 31, 32, 35, 38, 40, 42, 44, 45, 49, 50, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 63, 67, and 71; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert "airships"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert "airships"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert the following: ": Provided, That hereafter in time of peace whenever any officer holding a permanent commission in the line of the Army with rank below that of major shall not have been actually present for duty for at least two of the last preceding six years with a troop, battery, or company of that branch of the Army in which he shall hold said commission, such officer shall not be detached nor permitted to remain detached from such troop, battery, or company, for duty of any kind; and all pay and allowances shall be forfeited by any superior for any period during which, by his order, or his permission, or by reason of his failure or neglect to issue or cause to be issued the proper order or instructions at the proper time, any officer shall be detached or permitted to remain detached in violation of any of the terms of this proviso; but nothing in this proviso shall be held to apply in the case of any officer for such period as shall be actually necessary for him, after having been relieved from detached service, to join the troop, battery, or company to which he shall belong in that branch in which he shall hold a permanent commission, nor shall anything in this proviso be held to apply to the detachment or detail of officers for duty in the Judge Advocate General's Department or in the Ordnance Department, or in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal until after such canal shall have been formally opened, or in the Philippine Constabulary until the 1st day of January, 1914, or to any officer detailed, or who may be hereafter detailed, for aviation duty. And hereafter no officer holding a permanent commission in the Army with rank below that of major shall be detailed as assistant to the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs with rank of colonel, or as commanding officer of the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry, or as chief or assistant chief (director or assistant director) of the Philippine Constabulary, and no other officers of the Army shall hereafter be detailed for duty with the said constabulary except as specifically provided by law"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "sixteen million"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert as follows: "That no officer or enlisted man in active service, who shall be absent from duty on account of disease resulting from his own intemperate use of drugs or alcoholic liquors, or other misconduct, shall receive pay for the period of such absence from any part of the appropriation in this act for the pay of officers or enlisted men, the time so absent and the cause thereof to be ascertained under such procedure and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert "fifteen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert "Thirty-eight"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert "Seventy"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert "Seventy-one"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows. In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert "Sixty-five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "three hundred and seventeen thousand eight hundred and forty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment, after the word "enlist," insert the following: ": And provided further, That nothing in this provision shall be so construed as to forfeit credit for double time already accrued"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, after the word "man," strike out all down to and including the comma after the word "twelve," in line 2; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment, after the word "Panama," insert the following: ", or Hawaii or Porto Rico"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 7 of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment strike out the article "an" and insert in lieu thereof the word "any"; and in the same line, after the word "Army," strike out all down to and including the word "thereto" in line 9; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert:

"Equipment of Coast Artillery, armories, Organized Militia: There is hereby made available, and the same shall remain available until the end of the fiscal year 1913, the unexpended balances of any appropriations heretofore made for dummy guns and mortars; mounts for dummy guns and mortars; dummy ammunition; loading appliances; range and position finding equipment; aiming and laying devices; subcaliber tubes and mountings therefor; labor and material necessary to install dummy guns and mortars; and to provide appliances and devices for instructional purposes in armory buildings provided by States for Coast Artillery companies of the Organized Militia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "$8,797,080.42"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "seven million five hundred and fifty-seven thousand seven hundred and seventy-three"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "one million eight hundred and eighty-six thousand"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert: "Provided further, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to sell and convey to the State of Texas, on or before July 1, 1913, for the purposes of a State tuberculosis sanitarium, the military reservation of Fort Clark, Tex., or such portion of it as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be sold, at a price to be fixed by a board of three appraisers, one of whom shall be designated by the Secretary of War, one by the governor of Texas, and the third to be agreed upon by the two appraisers first designated: And provided further, That no part of the appropriations contained in this act shall be expended for permanent improvements at any Army post which has been abandoned or which may be ordered abandoned by the President of the United States, $1,700,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "ten million eight hundred and fifty thousand"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "nine hundred and twenty-five thousand three hundred and fifty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Beginning in line 1 of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, strike out all after the word "Provided" down to and including the words "Provided further," in line 9; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 51: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed by said amendment insert "five hundred"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "five million"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, after the word "hundred," strike out the words "and thirty-seven"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "eight hundred"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 65: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "$150,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed by said amendment insert "one million"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 68: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount as proposed at the end of said amendment insert "$100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of line 6 of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, after the words "may be," insert the words "hereafter specifically"; and in line 7 strike out the word "law" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Congress"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 70: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert as follows:

"SEC. 2. That, for the purpose of utilizing as an auxiliary to the Army Reserve hereinafter provided for the services of men who have had experience and training in the Regular Army, in time of war or when war is imminent, and after the President shall, by proclamation, have called upon honorably discharged soldiers of the Regular Army to present themselves for reenlistment therein within a specified period, subject to such conditions as may be prescribed in said proclamation, any person who shall have been discharged honorably from said Army, with character reported as at least good, and who having been found physically qualified for the duties of a soldier, if not over 45 years of age, shall reenlist in the line of said Army or in the Signal or Hospital Corps thereof within the period that shall be specified in said proclamation, shall receive on so reenlisting a bounty which shall be computed at the rate of $8 for each month for the first year of the period that shall have elapsed since his last discharge from the Regular Army and the date of his reenlistment therein under the terms of said proclamation; at the rate of $6 per month for the second year of such period; at the rate of $4 per month for the third year of such period; and at the rate of $2 per month for any subsequent year of such period, but no bounty in excess of $300 shall be paid to any person under the terms of this act.

"And that on and after November 1, 1912, all enlistments in the Regular Army shall be for the term of seven years, the first four years in the service with the organizations of which those enlisting shall form a part, and, except as otherwise provided herein, the last three years on furlough and attached to the Army Reserve hereinafter provided for: Provided, That at the expiration of four years' continuous service with such organizations, either under a first or any subsequent enlistment, any soldier may be reenlisted for another period of seven years, as above provided for, in which event he shall receive his final discharge from his prior enlistment: Provided further, That any enlisted man, at the expiration of three years' continuous service with such organizations, either under a first or any subsequent enlistment, upon his written application, may be furloughed and transferred to the Army Reserve, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, in which event he shall not be entitled to reenlist in the service until the expiration of his term of seven years: Provided further, That for all enlistments hereafter accomplished under the provisions of this act, four years shall be counted as an enlistment period in computing continuous-service pay: Provided further, That hereafter the Army Reserve shall consist of all enlisted men who, after having served not less than four years with the organizations of which they form a part, shall receive furloughs without pay or allowances until the expiration of their terms of enlistment, together with transportation in kind and subsistence as provided for by this act in the case of discharged soldiers, but when any soldier is furloughed to the reserve his accounts shall be closed and he shall be paid in full to the date such furlough becomes effective: Provided further, That any enlisted man, subject to good conduct and physical fitness for duty, upon his written application to that effect, shall have the right of remaining with the organization to which he belongs until the completion of his whole enlistment, without passing into the reserve: Provided further, That except upon reenlistment after four years' service or as now otherwise provided for by law, no enlisted man shall receive a final discharge until the expiration of his seven-year term of enlistment, including his term of service in the Army Reserve, but any such enlisted man may be reenlisted for a further term of seven years under the same conditions in the Army at large, or, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, for a term of three years in the Army Reserve; and any person who may have been discharged honorably from the Regular Army, with character reported as at least good, and who has been found physically qualified for the duties of a soldier, if not over 45 years of age, may be enlisted in the Army Reserve for a similar term of three years: And provided further, That in the event of actual or threatened hostilities the President, when so authorized by Congress, may summon all furloughed soldiers who belong to the Army Reserve to rejoin their respective organizations, and during the continuance of their service with such organizations they shall receive the pay and allowances authorized by law for soldiers serving therein, and any enlisted man who shall have reenlisted in the Army Reserve shall receive during such service the additional pay now provided by law for the soldiers of his arm of the service in their second enlistment period. Upon reporting for duty, and being found physically fit for service, they shall receive a sum equal to $5 per month for each month during which they shall have belonged to the reserve, as well as the actual cost of transportation and subsistence from their homes to the places at which they may be ordered to report for duty under such summons."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 72: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Change the numerical designation of section 4 so as to read "Sec. 3," and restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by this amendment with amendments as follows: After the word "occurred," in line 14, page 53, strike out so much of the next 15 lines as begins with the words "Provided, That every permanent officer" and ends with the words "in those grades," and insert in lieu thereof the following: " : Provided, That on and after the 1st day of January, 1917, any vacancies occurring among officers of the Quartermaster Corps with rank above that of colonel may, in the discretion of the President, be filled by selection from among officers who shall have served by detail in said corps for not less than four years: Provided further, That not to exceed six officers holding commissions with the rank of captain in the Quartermaster Corps and who have lost in relative rank through irregularities of promotion and the operation of separate promotion within the three departments hereby consolidated, may, in the discretion of the President and subject to examination for promotion as prescribed by law, be advanced to the grade of major in the Quartermaster Corps, and any officer who shall be advanced to said grade under the terms of this proviso shall be temporarily an additional officer of said grade but only until a vacancy shall occur for him on the list of officers of said grade as hereafter limited; and no officer shall be detailed to fill any vacancy on the list of majors of the Quartermaster Corps until after all additional officers authorized by the proviso shall have been absorbed"; after the word "Provided," in line 21, page 53, strike out the comma and the word "That" and insert: "further, That no details to fill vacancies in the grade of colonel in the Quartermaster Corps shall be made until the number of officers of that grade shall have been reduced by 3, and thereafter the number of officers in that grade shall not exceed 12; and no details to fill vacancies in the grade of lieutenant colonel in the Quartermaster Corps shall be made until the number of officers of that grade shall have been reduced by 3, and thereafter the number of officers of that grade shall not exceed 18; and"; in line 24, page 53, strike out the word "eleven" and insert in lieu thereof the word "nine"; in line 25, page 53, strike out the word "forty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty-eight"; in line 3, page 54, strike out the word "thirty-one" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-nine"; in line 4, page 54, after the word "hundred," insert the words "and two"; in line 20, page 54, after the word "perform," insert: ", but such regimental, battalion, and squadron quartermasters and commissaries shall not be required to receipt for any money or property which does not pertain to their respective regiments, battalions, or squadrons, and they shall not be separated from the organization to which they belong"; and in line 17, page 55, after the word "law," insert: ": And provided further, That for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this section the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the Chief of the Quartermaster Corps herein provided for immediately upon the passage of this act, and it shall be the duty of the said chief, under the direction of the President and the Secretary of War, to put into effect the provisions of this section not less than 60 days after the passage of this act"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Change the numerical designation of section 5 so as to read "Sec. 4," and restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by this amendment amended as follows: In line 1, page 56, after the comma which follows the words "rate clerks," insert "civil-service employees and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 5. That hereafter the General Staff Corps shall consist of two general officers, one of whom shall be the Chief of Staff, 4 colonels, 6 lieutenant colonels, 12 majors, and 12 captains or first lieutenants, all of whom shall be detailed from the Army at large in the manner and for the periods prescribed by law: Provided, That hereafter, except as otherwise provided herein, when any officer shall under the provisions of section 26 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, be appointed to an office with rank above that of colonel, his appointment to said office and his acceptance of the appointment shall create a vacancy in the arm, staff corps, or staff department from which he shall be appointed, and said vacancy shall be filled in the manner prescribed by existing law, but he shall retain in said arm, staff corps, or staff department the same relative position that he would have held if he had not been appointed to said office, and he shall return to said relative position upon the expiration of his appointment to said office unless he shall be reappointed thereto; and if under the operation of this proviso the number of officers of any particular grade in any arm, staff corps, or staff department shall at any time exceed the number authorized by law, no vacancy occurring in said grades shall be filled until after the total number of officers therein shall have been reduced below the number authorized by law; but nothing in this proviso shall be held to apply in the case of any officer who now holds a four-year appointment to an office with rank above that of colonel and whose return to the relative position that he would have held if he had not been appointed to said office is not possible under existing law."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 75: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert:

"SEC. 6. That hereafter the service of a cadet who may hereafter be appointed to the United States Military Academy or to the Naval Academy shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer of the Army."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JAMES HAY,
JAMES L. SLAYDEN,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. A. DU PONT,
F. E. WARREN,
JOS. F. JOHNSTON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on H. R. 25531 submit the following statement:

Amendment No. 1 gives the privilege to the Army War College of buying and exchanging typewriters, but does not increase the appropriation, and the House recedes from the amendment.

Amendment No. 2 struck out "air planes" and inserted "aeroplanes," and the House recedes with an amendment inserting "airships."

Amendment No. 3 reduced the appropriation from $375,000 to $350,000, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 4 increased the amount to be used for the purchase of airships from $75,000 to $100,000, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 5 is the same as amendment No. 2, and the House recedes with an amendment.

Amendment No. 6 provided for the reduction of tolls of the Alaska cable and telegraph messages to 50 per cent of the present rates, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 7 provided for $7,700,000 for pay of officers of the line, being $806,792 more than the House had appropriated for this purpose, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 8 provided $1,767,120 for additional pay of officers for length of service, being $243,000 more than was appropriated by the House, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 9 changed House provision providing for the nonpayment of money to any officer in cases in which he may have been detached for duty for more than four of the preceding six years from the organization in which he is commissioned, and the House recedes with an amendment which is fully set out in the conference report.

Amendment No. 10 provided $16,232,954 for pay of enlisted men, being $400,954 more than was appropriated by the House, and the House recedes with an amendment making the amount $16,000,000.

Amendment No. 11 provides for the withholding of pay from officers and enlisted men who are absent as a result of their intemperate use of drugs, alcoholic liquors, or other misconduct, and the House recedes, the House conferees believing that the language of the Senate accomplishes the purpose desired better than that of the House. This amendment also provides for a reserve to be used in time of war. This reserve can be used without any cost to the Government until it is called into active service in the Army during war and will cost the Government nothing except in the event of war.

Amendment No. 12 provides for $1,635,000 for additional pay for length of service of enlisted men, being $100,000 more than was appropriated by the House, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 13 strikes out the House provision for the abolition of five regiments of Cavalry, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 14 provides for $940,000 for pay of the enlisted men of the Hospital Corps, being $90,000 more than the House appropriated, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 15 provides $165,000 for additional pay for length of service to enlisted men of the Hospital Corps, being $5,000 more than the House appropriated, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 16 increases the number of clerks by one, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 17 increases the number of clerks by two, and the House recedes with an amendment making an increase of one clerk over the House provision.

Amendment No. 18 increases the number of clerks by five, and the House recedes with an amendment making an increase of two clerks over the House provision.

Amendment No. 19 increases the number of clerks by six, and the House recedes with an amendment making an increase of two clerks over the House provision.

Amendment No. 20 increases the number of clerks by two, and the House recedes with an amendment making an increase of one clerk over the House provision.

Amendment No. 21 increases the number of messengers by 11, and the House recedes with an amendment making an increase of 5 messengers over the House provision.

Amendment No. 22 changes the total.

Amendment No. 23 provides that in the future length of service for retirement for double time for foreign service shall not be given to those who hereafter enlist, and the House recedes with an amendment providing that nothing in this provision shall be construed to diminish the time of any soldier who has already received the benefit of the law as it now is.

Amendment No. 24 provides that the superintendent of the Nurse Corps shall receive allowance of quarters, subsistence, and medical care, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 25 reduces the amount appropriated by the House for contract surgeons from $18,000 to $13,000, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 26 provides that the age limit for the retirement of Army paymasters' clerks shall be the same as the age limit for the retirement of commissioned officers of the Army, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 27 provides $500,000 for commutation of quarters to commissioned officers and others on duty without troops, being $30,000 more than the House appropriated, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 28 provides for $900,000 for travel allowance for enlisted men on discharge, being $100,000 more than the House appropriated, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 29 provides that hereafter an enlisted man on discharge shall be entitled to transportation in kind and subsistence from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment. Or in lieu of such transportation and subsistence he shall receive, if he so elects, 2 cents per mile for sea travel. And the House recedes with an amendment which puts this provision of law into effect at once. It is computed by the Pay Department that this provision will save $500,000 annually.

Amendments Nos. 30 and 31 strike out quotation marks, and the House recedes on both.

Amendment No. 32 provides $266,000 for additional 10 per cent increase of pay of officers on foreign service, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 33 provides for $750,000 additional 10 per cent increase on pay of enlisted men on foreign service, and the House recedes with an amendment providing that hereafter the laws allowing increase of pay to officers and enlisted men for foreign service shall not apply to service in the Canal Zone, Panama, Porto Rico, and Hawaii.

Amendment No. 34 provides that section 3602, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of Congress of February 27, 1877, shall not be construed as precluding Army paymasters from drawing checks in favor of persons or institutions designated by indorsement made on his monthly pay account by an officer of the Army who is stationed beyond the continental limits of the United States, or in Alaska, or the Canal Zone, Panama, and the House recedes with an amendment which will include all officers of the Army wherever stationed.

Amendment No. 35 strikes out the appropriation for encampment and maneuvers, Organized Militia, because this appropriation has been provided for by a joint resolution.

Amendment No. 36 provides an appropriation for dummy guns and mortars and other appliances, and the House recedes with an amendment striking out the appropriation of $275,000 and providing that the unexpended balance of the appropriation made for this last year be reappropriated.

Amendment No. 37 provides $8,988,867.42 for the purchase of subsistence supplies, etc., being $383,594.42 more than was appropriated by the House, and the House recedes with an amendment reducing the appropriation by $191,787.

Amendment No. 38 provides that the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 30, 1906, shall not apply to the Subsistence Department, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 39 provides for $7,865,688 for regular supplies for the Quartermaster's Department, being $408,915 more than the House appropriated, and the House recedes with an amendment reducing the appropriation made by the Senate by the sum of $308,915.

Amendment No. 40 increases the appropriation for the equipment of officers' schools from $400,000 to $600,000, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 41 provides $2,000,000 for incidental expenses, Quartermaster's Department, being $263,663 more than the House appropriated, and the House recedes with an amendment reducing the amount appropriated by the Senate by the sum of $114,000.

Amendment No. 42 provides for $300,000 for horses for Cavalry, Artillery, etc., being $25,000 more than the House appropriated, and the House recedes because this sum is necessary, as the Cavalry is not to be reduced.

Amendment No. 43 strikes out the House provision making immediately available $25,000 of the appropriation, and also strikes out the House provision as to expenditure of money at certain Army posts, and the House recedes with an amendment which provides that no part of the money appropriated in this act shall be spent at any Army post which the President has decided or may decide to abandon. This amendment also provides for the purchase of a part of the Fort Clark Military Reservation, Tex., by the State of Texas.

Amendment No. 44 appropriates $10,000 for a building at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 45 strikes out the provision as to brigade and regimental posts, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 46 provides $11,250,000 for the transportation of the Army and its supplies, being $526,472 more than the House appropriated, and the House recedes with an amendment reducing the amount appropriated by the Senate by the sum of $400,000.

Amendment No. 47 provides for $994,600 for roads, walks, and drainage, and the House recedes with an amendment reducing the amount by $69,250.

Amendment No. 48 strikes out certain Army posts therein mentioned and the House recedes from that part of the amendment. This amendment also provides for the appropriation of $70,000 for the purchase of certain land near Fort Sam Houston, Tex., and the Senate recedes from that portion of the amendment. This amendment also provides $65,000 for two roads on Government property through the Arlington Reservation, and for the purchase of not to exceed 4 acres of land in order to extend said roads through said reservation; it also appropriated $25,750 for a target range for Vancouver Barracks, Wash., and $3,600 for completing roadway between the city of Vancouver and Vancouver Barracks; and the sum of $30,000 for draining and filling swamps within the Government reservation on Constitution Island, West Point, N. Y.; and $50,000 for filling ponds and lowlands of the Fort Taylor Military Reservation at Key West, Fla., and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 49 strikes out the House provision as to the expenditure of money at certain military posts, and the House recedes; it also provides for the expenditure of $1,000 for improvement of the Crow Creek Target and Maneuver Reservation, Wyo., and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 50 provides $125,000 for the construction and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails in Alaska, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 51 provides for $600,000 for barracks and quarters in the Philippine Islands, being $150,000 more than the House appropriated, and the House recedes, with an amendment cutting down the amount appropriated by the Senate by the sum of $100,000.

Amendment No. 52 provides for $5,431,700 for clothing and camp and garrison equipage, being $628,426 more than the House appropriated, and the House recedes, with an amendment reducing the amount appropriated by the Senate by the sum of $431,700.

Amendments Nos. 53, 54, and 55 provide for the payment of certain claims against the Government of the United States, making in all $50,862. These claims are due entirely to damages to and loss of private property occasioned by heavy gunfire and target practice of troops and for damages to private property during maneuvers and other military operations for which the Government is responsible. A part of this amount is due to Indians for the value of improvements made by them upon lands afterwards included in the Fort William H. Seward Military Reservation, and another part of the amount is due to an officer and certain enlisted men of the Army for the money value of clothing worn out by them in the summer of 1910 while fighing forest fires in the Northwest. Amendment No. 53 also provides for the ascertainment and adjustment of amounts which may become due on all claims for damages to and loss of private property when the amount of claim does not exceed the sum of $1,000, occasioned by heavy gunfire and target practice and other military operations for which the Government is responsible, and the House recedes from all of these amendments.

Amendment No. 56 is the insertion of a comma, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 57 corrects the spelling of a word, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 58 is the insertion of certain words left out by mistake in the item for the equipment and maintenance of the school at Washington Barracks, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 59 is the same as amendment No. 57, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 60 provides $337,118.30 for ordnance service, and the House recedes, with an amendment reducing the amount by $37,000.

Amendment No. 61 provides $350,000 for ordnance stores, ammunition, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 62 provides $875,000 for small-arms target practice, being $135,000 more than the House appropriated, and the House recedes with an amendment cutting down the appropriation made by the Senate by the sum of $75,000.

Amendment No. 63 provides for $700,000 for the manufacture of arms, being $100,000 more than the House appropriated, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 64 provides for $750,000 for ordnance stores and supplies, being $50,000 more than the House appropriated, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 65 provides for $200,000 for automatic machine rifles, being $100,000 more than the House appropriated, and the House recedes with an amendment cutting down the appropriation of the Senate by the sum of $50,000.

Amendment No. 66 provides for $1,250,000 for field artillery for the Organized Militia, being $480,000 more than the House appropriated, and the House recedes with an amendment cutting down the amount appropriated by the Senate by the sum of $250,000.

Amendment No. 67 strikes out the words "immediately available," and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 68 provides $500,000 for ammunition for the Organized Militia, and the House recedes with an amendment providing $100,000 for this purpose.

Amendment No. 69 appropriates $33,000 to reimburse the government of the District of Columbia for the site acquired for a reformatory, the title of which is now in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and giving to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the use of certain clay deposits, etc., and the House recedes with an amendment providing that the title to this site be transferred to the Secretary of War for such purposes as may be hereafter specifically authorized by Congress and striking out the two provisos in the Senate amendment. The conferees agreed to this amendment because of the representations made to them by the regents of the Mount Vernon Association.

Amendment No. 70 struck out the provision of the House providing for a term of enlistment in the Army of five years, and the House recedes with an amendment providing that after November 1, 1912, the term of enlistment shall be seven years, four years of which shall be with the colors and three years in the reserve.

Amendment No. 71 struck out the provision of the House which repealed the laws authorizing increase of pay of commissioned officers and enlisted men for foreign service, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 72 struck out the provision of the House providing for a Quartermaster Corps, and the House recedes with sundry amendments, as follows:

Providing that there shall be 1 major general, 2 brigadier generals, 12 colonels, 18 lieutenant colonels, 48 majors, and 102 captains in the Quartermaster Corps, and providing further that regimental, battalion, and squadron quartermasters and commissaries shall not be required to account for property when they are ordered away with their commands, and that after January 1, 1917, the chief of the corps may be selected from the detailed as well as the permanent officers of the corps; and providing for the promotion of six captains in the Commissary Department.

Amendment No. 73 struck out the provision of the House for a service corps, and the House recedes with an amendment, on page 67, line 18, by inserting after the word "clerks" the words "civil service" and after the word "employees" the words "and employees."

Amendment No. 74 struck out the provision of the House providing for the consolidation of the office establishments of The Adjutant General ,Inspector General, and the Chief of Staff of the Army, and the House recedes, striking out all of section 6 and inserting in lieu thereof the amendment as it appears in the conference report. These changes provide that there shall be 4 colonels, 6 lieutenant colonels, 12 majors, and 12 captains or first lieutenants, in the General Staff Corps. And that Chiefs of Staff Corps may return to the position they would have held in their respective corps after they have served four years unless they shall be reappointed.

Amendment No. 75 strikes out the provision of the House for the reduction of general officers, and cadet service in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer of the Army, and the House recedes with an amendment providing that hereafter service as a cadet at West Point or Annapolis by anyone who may be hereafter appointed as such shall not be counted hereafter in computing length of service.

Amendment No. 76 strikes out the provision of the House providing that the appropriation provided for for the several departments consolidated shall be available, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 77 strikes out the repealing clause of the bill, and the Senate recedes.

The bill as it passed the Senate appropriated	$94,128,380.98
The Senate receded from items amounting to	4,994,977.72
And the bill now carries	89,133,403.16
Amount appropriated for fiscal year 1912	92,587,785.97
Reduction over amount appropriated for fiscal year 1912	3,454,382.81

Legislation is agreed to by the conferees which will result in a very large saving in the future. This legislation embraces a four-year term of enlistment, the consolidation of the Supply Departments, the Service Corps, the reduction of travel-pay allowances to enlisted men on discharge, the abolition of double time for purposes of retirement, and other minor features, which, it is conservatively estimated, will effect in the future an annual saving for the maintenance of the Military Establishment of not less than $10,000,000 annually.

JAMES HAY,
JAMES L. SLAYDEN,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, unless some gentleman desires to discuss the matter, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, in order to correct an error, I offer the following House concurrent resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 64.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the conference reports on the Army appropriation bill be changed to this extent: That amendment 11 of the Senate be changed so as to read "after the words 'aviation duty' insert a comma and the words 'any student officer in attendance at the service school at Leavenworth, Kans.'"

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend. section 2, page 2, lines 14 and 15, by striking out the word "communities" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "counties of such States."

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to provide that this work will be done in all the counties of the State. The amendment is to require the college or colleges to do this work in all the counties. Under the provisions of this bill it provides that it shall be done in the different communities, and I do not think that "communities" is equivalent to counties. In other words, it might be that the officials of the college would determine to do this work in localities contiguous to the place where the college is situated. I propose that this work shall be done all over the State, in each county of the State, and it seems to me there can be no objection to this amendment. It certainly makes it clear that the work shall be done in all the counties. I therefore insist upon the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would modify his amendment to some extent, I think we could accept it without any further discussion. If the gentleman will add after the word "communities" the words "counties or parishes in such States," I should have no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BLACKMON. I will accept that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment as amended.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I am quite familiar with the gentleman's comprehensive and very interesting report on this bill, but in the report made on this section it is not clearly stated what is meant by the use of the word "communities." As I understand, the object of this bill is to teach agriculture and home economics to all those engaged in agriculture not residents of State colleges. Now, is it proposed to exclude persons engaged in agriculture in the counties in which the State college is located?

Mr. LEVER. No; the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Alabama is the very point in question, and his proposed amendment is to clarify this language and make certain which counties shall have this demonstration work.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, I understand persons engaged in agriculture in the counties where State colleges are now located, if they are not residents of the State colleges, will have the benefit of this act?

Mr. LEVER. Undoubtedly. I think there is no question of that.

Mr. BUTLER. I wanted to have that entirely clear in my mind.

Mr. LEVER. I think there is no question.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what is the object and necessity of using the word "communities." Is there any place in the United States where the term "county or parish" would not cover the proposition?

Mr. LEVER. Well, we use the word "community," in the first place, because we thought that particular term would cover county or parish. I have no objection to the word "community" going out. I do not see that it makes any difference one way or the other.

Mr. PEPPER. I think it does. I think there might be a doubt as to the unit to be followed if we use the word "community," and I think that the unit ought to be a municipal unit—for instance, a county or parish. For instance, some township might want to use that as a unit, which I think would be a great mistake, and therefore I would like to ask the amendment be modified by striking out the word "community."

Mr. BLACKMON. I have no objection.

Mr. LEVER. I am willing to that. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. How would it read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 14, strike out the word "communities" and insert in lieu thereof the words "counties or parishes in such States," so it will read, "persons not residents in said colleges in the several counties or parishes of such States."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, now this section will provide as follows:

That it shall be the object and duty of said agricultural extension department to give instruction and practical demonstrations in agriculture and home economics to persons not residents in such colleges in——

Mr. LEVER. "In the several counties and parishes of such States."

Mr. BUTLER. Would not that exclude them?

Mr. LEVER. I do not think so.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us make plain that which to me is not yet plain. It is not intended to give instruction to any resident in said colleges. It is not proposed, if this amendment is adopted, to give instruction to residents of these counties or parishes in which these colleges are located?

Mr. LEVER. No; the idea is——

Mr. PEPPER. There should be a comma.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it the intention to exclude a certain class of people located in the parishes or counties in which these colleges are located?

Mr. LEVER. What we do try to do is to exclude that class of people who are residents of the college communities—students of the colleges, people who are living upon the campus, those connected with the college—professors, wives of professors, laborers, and students in the college.

Mr. BUTLER. But the word "county," you know, may include a large tract of land. It may be a parish, and there may be many people living in the county or parish not in any way connected with a college. They may be people residing near it.

Mr. LEVER. I do not think the amendment will exclude any but those who are directly connected with the college.

Mr. PEPPER. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the need of excluding anybody?

Mr. LEVER. The need of excluding students of the college is that we fear the college authorities may divert these funds from the purposes for which they are appropriated and spend them in employing teachers and experts, and the like of that, to deliver lectures.

Mr. BUTLER. Why not add the words "connected with the colleges"?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to the gentleman if he would just transpose the language now "to persons in the several counties and parishes not resident in said colleges," it will make it then perfectly plain and free from all ambiguity. Just transpose the language.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. It is perfectly clear by using the language "as may be provided by the States accepting the provisions of this act." That requires a State to name the unit, and so I do not see any particular necessity of saying "counties and parishes," when the State legislatures themselves would have the power to pass upon the unit. That matter could be left with entire safety to the States.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the language "in the several communities" does not mean a limitation upon the word "colleges" at all, but upon the word "persons." It would possibly make it plainer to put a comma after the word "persons" and after the word "colleges," making it read "home economics to persons, not resident in said colleges, in the several communities."

Mr. BUTLER. Or add the word "or" there.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Leaving it to the power of the State to determine the size of the community.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a modification of the amendment by the transposition of the language, so that it will read as follows:

To persons in the several counties and parishes not resident in said colleges.

The transposition clears the section of the ambiguity which has been an objection raised to it.

Mr. CANNON. I suppose that would include anybody who did not reside inside the college walls or on the campus.

Mr. LEVER. I did not hear the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

Mr. CULLOP. Modify, as I suggested, by the transposition of the language.

Mr. MANN. It is all right as it is in the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Let it go in the bill the way it is.

Mr. LEVER. I think we might as well stand by the language in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Did the gentleman make his motion to amend?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, the amendment was agreed on, and the Chair put the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's motion is in order. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is the proposition before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is pending an amendment by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON] as amended by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP]. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 14 and 15, strike out the word "communities" and insert in lieu thereof "counties or parishes in such States."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Now, will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] restate his amendment?

Mr. CULLOP. It is simply a transposition of the language of the amendment, so as to read:

To persons in the several counties or parishes not resident in said colleges.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the Chair was in doubt.

Thereupon the committee divided; and there were—ayes 9, noes 21.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON] just what is the purpose of his amendment?

Mr. BLACKMON. I have already stated it, but I will restate it. My idea is that the bill should state clearly that it is the intention of Congress that this work shall be done in each county of the State where the work is proposed to be carried on. It is in the nature of a direction to the legislature of the State that in the attempt to deal with this question it is the intention of Congress that the work shall be done in every county of the State.

Mr. MANN. But suppose the legislature for very good reasons should not provide for it in every county in the State? I live in a county in which I do not know just how much agricultural-extension work will be done. There may be some, but there would be very little, if any done in the county of New York. Now, does the gentleman mean that no portion of this money shall be paid to a State unless the State legislature provides for demonstration in every county in a State, when it is impossible to do that, for instance, in the county of New York, in New York State, and thereby deprive that State entirely of the advantage of this work?

Mr. BLACKMON. That may be an exceptional case, but I want the law to declare that there shall be no discrimination as to any county entitled to the provisions of this act. That may be an exception, but there can be no good reason, I will say to the gentleman, in any other State in the Union that I have knowledge of where this work should not be carried on.

Mr. MANN. I have given the gentleman an instance of where it is impossible to do it in every county of the State.

Mr. BLACKMON. I imagine that would be an isolated instance. Perhaps they would not do a great deal of farming in the county of New York, but in other States it might be that a small county would not be entitled to this work in the opinion of the college authorities.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. I wanted to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the point he makes would indicate that he thought it would compel the legislature to provide for agricultural extension work in every county, when, as a matter of fact, the language of the section provides that it shall be done in the several communities and counties and parishes, as the case may be, as provided by the State. That would leave it open to the legislature to except such counties or parishes as might not have any use for the work.

Mr. MANN. That is the point I was trying to get at. If it is not obligatory on the State to require that it shall be done in every county or parish, then it is still left to the discretion of the State legislature. And if it is obligatory on the State legislature, what is the object of changing the language? The State legislature has the power under the bill to provide for this work, either by counties or at half a dozen places in one county. I am inclined to think that if the gentleman's amendment were agreed to it would forbid the State having demonstration work at more than one place in a county.

Mr. BLACKMON. I think the gentleman is so clearly wrong on that that it is evident he does not understand what this farmers' cooperative demonstration work is.

Mr. MANN. I understand it as well as does the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BLACKMON. What is it?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have seen it in operation.

Mr. BLACKMON. You can send an agent to any county in the United States that I know of. You do not limit him to one farm. He may cover 40 farms or more in one county.

Mr. MANN. Certainly; you do not limit him to one farm or one county, nor to one person in a county. It seems to me the change proposes to affect something that is already in the bill as it now stands. The State legislature now has the power to provide for demonstration work in as many counties as it pleases, and as to as great an extent in any county as it pleases. If the gentleman's amendment is not obligatory as to each county, it does not accomplish anything, and if it is obligatory it would shut out New York State entirely from receiving any benefit from the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BLACKMON. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 21.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, I have another amendment pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks, under the agreement last night, we had better dispose of the other amendment pending to this section, and then the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin for an amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, section 2, line 18, by striking out the period after the word "otherwise" and adding the following: ": Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed or held to in anywise interfere with the demonstration work now being conducted by the Department of Agriculture of the United States of America and known as the 'farmers' cooperative demonstration work.'"

Mr. BLACKMON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I observe that our brethren here are extremely technical and are bitterly opposed to the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t" unless they do the dotting and the crossing themselves. But this amendment can not be construed in a technical sense.

And, briefly, I want to put these gentlemen on record whom I have listened to so long in this House; they almost weep when you touch a question affecting the poor downtrodden farmer. They are thoroughly in love with him, and you can not discuss any question but what a number of distinguished gentlemen in this Chamber have to inject something about their love and affection for the farmer.

Now, it has been demonstrated conclusively that the Department of Agriculture, under the able management of the lamented Knapp and under the present management of this department, has done a great and lasting good to the agricultural interests of this country. I make this charge, that to-day, when this work is in its best condition, when we are going forward with it at a rapid rate, it is now determined to change it and turn it over to untried hands. What is the purpose of it? As I said last night, I have no objection to your making this appropriation for some of the land-grant agricultural schools. I will support that; but when a Member votes against this amendment he goes on record as being opposed to the demonstration work as it is now being conducted by the farmers' cooperative demonstration department here in Washington.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Farm management work.

Mr. BLACKMON. Yes; as opposed to it. If so, why are you opposed to it?

Mr. PEPPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACKMON. Yes; I do.

Mr. PEPPER. I have heard the statement made several times that this bill will interfere, and the report seems to indicate that it might ultimately. I should like to have the gentleman's opinion as to just how the interference will come about.

Mr. BLACKMON. It will come about in this way: In the first place, in my judgment, when you take this work out of the hands of the men who know how to farm, and who do farm, you are going to render it, in a measure, unpopular. Then you are going to come up against this proposition: Congress is not going to have two separate and distinct departments dealing with this question. If you start it with the colleges, will they consent that it be taken from them?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLACKMON. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I want to ask the gentleman if he finds much sympathy among the farmers in his State for these agricultural schools sending out boys to teach the farmers how to farm?

Mr. BLACKMON. So far as I know, there is not any great sentiment in favor of it; but I do know this, that in my State there are nine agricultural schools that are being kept up by the State government, and not one dollar of this money goes to these agricultural schools in Alabama, but it goes to the land-grant schools.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACKMON. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACKMON. In the State of Alabama this money would go to Auburn, a white school, to the University of Alabama, a white school, and to Normal, a colored school.

But my objection to the bill is this, that you are taking this work that is now successful out of the hands of the farmers themselves.

Mr. PEPPER. Right there, is it not a fact that under the present plan of the Farm Management Bureau they take graduates from the agricultural colleges, men who have considerable acquired knowledge—book learning—and put them into these counties and allow them and authorize them and direct them to instruct the farmers, and is not that now being carried on by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. BLACKMON. My personal observation is that that is not the fact, because the salary paid is not sufficient.

Mr. PEPPER. The salary being paid is from $1,800 to $2,200 a year, which I think will catch a great many of the graduates of agricultural colleges.

Mr. BLACKMON. Does this bill provide that?

Mr. PEPPER. I am talking about the work that is being carried on now under the direction of the Farm Management Bureau in the Department of Agriculture, by which they are using the graduates of agricultural colleges by making them county agents and agricultural inspectors in the various counties.

Mr. BLACKMON. I know of no such salaries to county demonstrators being paid in my section as the gentleman speaks of.

Mr. PEPPER. So far as I am informed, practically every man that they are employing is a graduate of an agricultural college.

Mr. BLACKMON. That is true as to the office work.

Mr. PEPPER. The three counties in my State where we have employed agricutural experts, they are every one of them a graduate of the college of Ames, and receive a salary of $1,800 to $2,000.

Mr. BLACKMON. Your State is supplementing the work.

Mr. PEPPER. That is a part of the plan, the counties raise half and the Government furnishes the other half.

Mr. BLACKMON. My point is that under the present plan there is not a county so poor in the United States that they can not find a man, a farmer, that will accept the salary of $75 a month, and he goes out among the farmers and teaches them how to farm. He does not write bulletins or various kinds of letters, but he goes out and teaches the people how to farm. That is why I object to your killing the farm-demonstration work.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACKMON. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It is not my desire to interfere with the farm-demonstration work carried on in the South.

Mr. BLACKMON. I yielded for a question.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I am going to ask the question. Will the gentleman modify his amendment so that neither the farm-demonstration work nor the farm-management work shall be interfered with by the men who are employed under this bill? If the gentleman does not understand the difference, or just what that means, permit me to state that the farm-demonstration work is the kind of work being carried on in the South under the appropriation that was originally made for combating the ravages of the boll weevil.

Mr. BLACKMON. I think I would agree to that amendment. Does the gentleman suggest the change?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I suggest a change or modification, so that it will include farm-demonstration work in the South and a similar work, farm-management work, in the North, East, and West.

Mr. BLACKMON. I am perfectly willing to do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN and Mr. GARRETT asked unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Alabama be extended for five minutes and there was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that this farm-demonstration work is in the South alone.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman from Alabama will yield and permit me I want to say that the demonstration work of the South is known as the farmers' cooperative demonstration work, while the same character of work in the North and East and West is known as farm management work. The appropriations for these are carried in different items and known under different items. I was about to suggest to the gentleman from Alabama this amendment: After the word "work" in his amendment insert "farm management." If he will accept that amendment I am willing to adopt it.

Mr. CANNON. So that it will read——

Mr. LEVER. So that it will read "provided that nothing contained in this act shall be construed or held to in any way interfere or prevent demonstration work now being conducted by the Department of Agriculture of the United States of America and known as farm cooperative demonstration work or farm management work."

Mr. CANNON. Then the appropriation that the agricultural bill carries will be devoted to farm demonstration and farm management?

Mr. LEVER. Exactly.

Mr. CANNON. Then the appropriation, according to the gentleman's view, that is provided for in extension work would be worked out through the agricultural colleges and their superintendents?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman had ever called on the Department of Agriculture for men to do farm-demonstration work, he would have learned that the appropriation is to be used only in the cotton States where work is done in combating the ravages of the boll weevil. That was the only place where the work is done under the demonstration work. But similar work is done generally, largely in the Northern States, under the appropriation providing for farm management. That is done in the North largely for the very reason that all of the work done under farm demonstration is done in the South.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by inserting the suggestion of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACKMON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I notice that the amendment of the gentleman reads "Department of Agriculture or the United States of America." What is the purpose of providing that the work should be done by the United States of America?

Mr. BLACKMON. It is being done now.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman means Department of Agriculture of the United States of America, I do not think it is necessary to use those words.

Mr. BLACKMON. I am willing to cut that out.

Mr. LEVER. I think the language would be better.

Mr. MANN. I can not see the point of saying that the work should be carried on by the Department of Agriculture or the United States of America.

Mr. BLACKMON. That is wrong. It is undoubtedly a typographical error. It should be "or the United States of America."

Mr. MANN. That either ought to be corrected or left out.

Mr. CULLOP. Leave out "or the United States of America."

Mr. MANN. The Department of Agriculture is quite a sufficient description.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment, and the Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modify the amendment by striking out the words "or the United States of America."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I think the amendment is wrong in including the words 'farmers' cooperative demonstration work." There is no appropriation for that kind of work, and work done under that name is not recognized by the Government. It is simply farm-destruction work.

Mr. LEVER. I have the agricultural appropriation bill for the current year before me.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. If I am wrong I will be glad to be corrected.

Mr. LEVER. It contains this language:

For farmers cooperative demonstrations and for the study and demonstration of best methods for meeting the ravages of the cotton-boll weevil, etc.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. There have been some amendments to the law. Evidently I am wrong in some respects, and I presume the amendment of the gentleman is all right.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee one question. Was it contemplated by this act to destroy the work or to interfere with what is known as farm-demonstration work?

Mr. LEVER. I have answered that question several times, but will be glad to answer it again. My judgment is that in the course of 8 or 10 years, when this bill has ripened, and all of the appropriations have become available, the management of the Department of Agriculture over the matter of the appointment of local demonstrators or agents will be transferred from the Department of Agriculture to the agricultural colleges of the several States, and wherever work is done through the two bureaus now doing cooperative demonstration work, and what is known as farm-management work, will be work of a much broader character, dealing more largely in fundamental ideas, gathering together scientific truths and disseminating those truths to the local agents under the control of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding to section 2, page 2, the following:

"Provided, That the respective States accepting the fund herein appropriated may cause the instruction herein provided to be given also to students in graded public schools in districts having not less than 25 square miles in area."

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this amendment could not do any harm, and that the gentleman in charge of the bill should accept it. Under this bill the States are required to make an appropriation that equals the appropriation received from the National Government. We are anxious, of course, that all of the States should accept the provisions of this bill and receive the benefit of its supervision. I know in my own State there are many persons who are deeply interested in agricultural education, men of large experience, men who have manifested a great deal of interest in the success of this bill, who are anxious that the State shall have the authority to give instruction in graded district schools, because they believe that that will have a tendency to increase the number of graded schools in the State. This amendment will not interfere—could not interfere materially, at least—with the general instruction that will be given under the bill as reported from the committee. For instance, in my own State we have over 1,000 school districts.

We have but 86 consolidated or graded school districts. We want the privilege of instructing our boys and girls in the graded public schools in the country. We do not want to accept this bill if we can help it, unless we can use this fund to improve our country schools. We do not object to this fund being used to instruct adult farmers. We favor instruction being given to farmers in any way that will improve agriculture and add to the profits of the farming industry. But we believe the most effective way to give proper instruction in scientific agriculture is to give this instruction in the graded district schools to the rising generation of farmers. Oklahoma has a splendid system of public schools. Our district schools compare favorably with the best in the country. But we are not satisfied with our country schools. The boys and girls in the country do not have the facilities to acquire an education offered to the boys and girls in the towns and cities. The crying need of the hour is better schools for the country districts. My State has made ample provision for instruction in our colleges and universities.

We have over 500,000 persons of school age. Less than 4,000 of these are in our higher institutions of learning. There is a movement in our State, led by able, intelligent, and forceful men, animated with a noble purpose to contribute to the public welfare, to give to the boys and girls on our farms facilities for education that shall, in measure, compare with the high-school privileges of the towns and cities. In due time we hope to set all the States of the Union an example of what may be done in the way of improving country schools. We want the National Government to aid us in this cause. We want this bill amended so that this fund, appropriated by the National Government to encourage agriculture, may be used to improve our country schools. No great improvement can come to the conditions on the farm without better school facilities for the boys and girls on the farm.

In passing this bill we are making history. We are entering upon a new movement, and a great movement. We ought to begin right. We will not begin right if we fail to provide that the funds appropriated in this bill may, in part at least, be used to impart to students in graded district schools instruction in home economics and scientific agriculture. Mr. Speaker, I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 13, after the word "to" add "residents of the State," and in line 14, after the word "colleges," strike out the words "in the several communities."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the defeat of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON] leaves section 2 stand as it was on the disputed proposition in regard to the "several communities." I take it that the purpose of this bill is to disseminate information throughout the State, and to limit the benefits of it to residents of the State. The term "communities" is confusing, as shown by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama suggesting counties or parishes. It is assumed that you did not propose to limit this education in the States to certain localities, but proposed to give it to the residents of all the State. Apparently, the intent of the drafter of the bill was to provide that the benefits of the act should be limited to the residents of the State. If that is so, it is not necessary to say "communities" or "counties" or "parishes," and I submit this amendment would correct the trouble that seems to have been in the minds of some gentlemen while the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama was under discussion.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I want to propound a parliamentary inquiry in my time, to begin with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise now?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I rise to offer an amendment to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is nothing pending.

Mr. MANN. The last word is the amendment which was adopted.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The last word of the paragraph

Mr. MANN. But we have just inserted an amendment, and the gentleman can not now move to strike that out.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment; I will send it up later on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will have to send it up now.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, line 12, page 2, afer the word "departments," by inserting the words "in cooperation with the United States Department of Agriculture."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 12, by inserting after the word "departments" the words "in cooperation with the United States Department of Agriculture."

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I offered that amendment in order to get the floor. Mr. Speaker, I may have been mistaken, but I understood yesterday that amendments to the bill offered then would be pending and to-day would be disposed of first, and, proceeding upon that theory, I thought that we were to wait until all those amendments were disposed of before any other amendments could be offered. For that reason I did not offer an amendment to section 1, where I wished to offer it. Now, the parliamentary inquiry which I wish to propound is, Was I correct?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the Chair understands it, he believes the gentleman, strictly speaking, has not the record as it appears.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Then I will ask, Mr. Speaker, in view of that mistake, unanimous consent to return to paragraph 1 for the purpose of offering this amendment. After the word "department," in line 6, add these words: "and to be conducted in cooperation with the United States Department of Agriculture."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that he may return to section 1 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I withdraw my first amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 6, by adding after the word "department" the words "and to be conducted in cooperation with the United States Department of Agriculture."

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I yield.

Mr. FOSTER. This bill is to give the States a certain amount of money to be used by the schools of agriculture. That is the object, as I understand.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, this paragraph requires they must do that work in cooperation with the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. This work is to be done in cooperation by the United States Department of Agriculture and the State institutions.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the intention—to do that work in connection with the demonstration work that is now being done?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; it is solely for the purpose of having this work done in cooperation with the Bureau of Farm Demonstration work.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I ask for five minutes more. It took me five minutes to get started.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. To what extent, in the gentleman's mind, will this cooperation contained in his amendment give to the Department of Agriculture the control over the funds carried in this bill?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I can not answer that question.

Mr. LEVER. That is the crux of the whole situation.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The crux of the whole situation, in my mind, is that this will preserve the present activities of this particular bureau, and it is for that reason only that I offer this amendment. The work which this bureau has done in my particular part of the moral vineyard has been crowned with most remarkable and gratifying success. It is the most popular and, I believe, the most important to that particular section of the country of all the activities of the Department of Agriculture. And if it is true, and if the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] will assure me that in his opinion it is true, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON], which has just been adopted, will save that bureau, then I will be satisfied. Just answer that briefly, because I have very little time.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Mississippi knows, as I know, that the only authority for the farm-demonstration work and farm-management work is carried each year in the Agriculture appropriation bill, and I suspect that if the gentleman from Mississippi remains here, as I hope he will——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I hope so.

Mr. LEVER (continuing). That there will not be much trouble about these annual appropriations for this work.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I congratulate the country on that prospect.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman says the work is a success at the present time. I challenge him in the three days he has in which to revise his remarks to put in the name of a gentleman in the State of Mississippi engaged in this work who is under 27 years of age.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I do not know the age of any of them. I know the department here has selected parties in the State of Mississippi to do the work.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Name them in your remarks.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. And I know when the Sultan, if he is a Sultan, the King or Emperor or Grand Mogul of Siam, called upon the Government of the United States to recommend an expert to send over to his domain, the President called on the Secretary of Agriculture——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi have five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The Secretary of Agriculture called on Dr. Knapp to name a young man, and he named a young man who was a graduate of the agricultural college of the State of Mississippi. That young man is now in charge of the agricultural department in Siam. He has sent a number of young men into my district, he has sent them into neighboring States, and while I can not testify as a witness on oath, I believe a number of those young men were less than 27 years of age. They looked the part, at any rate.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman will have plenty of time to get the information from the department here.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It is utterly immaterial. I would not burden the RECORD with it. The question is, Is he competent? The gentleman does not think that a man being under 27 ought to bar him from service in this House. Some of the most successful farmers in this country are young men, and some of the biggest failures are old farmers. There are a number of old farmers in Mississippi, just as in Georgia, and old lawyers, and old merchants, who think they know it all, but they do not know nearly as much as can be taught by the young men who are educated by the agricultural colleges of the country, and those young men have been selected by this bureau to do the work in the part of the country in which I live. And they have been so successful, as I stated yesterday and repeat now, that after Dr. Knapp died (and his work was done through these young men) a great movement was started throughout the South to raise funds and erect a monument to him because they believed the work he had done would redound to the good of that country through the years to come. They did not believe, as some gentlemen do, that the only man who should have a monument was "the man on horseback." This man had done his great work in times of peace, educated men in the arts of peace, and those are the sort of young men who are being sent out by this department now, and they are the ones who are doing the work now, and if this particular amendment is agreed to they will continue to do it. I hope, under the provisions of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON], which has just been agreed to, they will be continued.

I am sorry to have been led off into a discussion of young men and away from the merits of the proposed amendment. This bureau is not made up of young men nor of old men. The tests there is fitness, not age, just as it is here and everywhere else. My time is about to expire, and so I will simply repeat that I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON] will save this bureau. I will say frankly to the gentleman from Georgia and to the gentleman from South Carolina also that if I did not believe it I would vote against this bill, unless the pending amendment wins.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, it is entirely to the credit of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] and other Representatives from the Southern States that they are supporting the Agricultural Department in all the work that it is doing in the Southern States. I am glad of the fact that that work is successful. There is no opposition to its continuance. I do not think there is a Representative on the floor of this House who has ever opposed a dollar of the appropriation for this purpose or will ever do so. We are glad that the work is successful and would like to see it continued just as long as it brings good results to the vicinity in which it is being carried on.

I call attention to the fact that this work is done by annual appropriations. It is done under the terms laid down in the annual Agricultural appropriation bill, and so long as it is successful, that work will undoubtedly be provided for in this appropriation bill and will be continued. There can be no question about that. But this measure is a great national bill, and I ask the gentlemen who profess to favor it that they do not embarrass the work contemplated by introducing amendments which will interfere with the successful working of its provisions. There has been a decisive recognition of the farm demonstration work written in this bill by an amendment which was adopted by a unanimous vote to the effect that the work in which gentlemen of the South are particularly interested shall not be interfered with by the provisions of this measure. We ask the same recognition that we have given. We who come from other States, where the farm demonstration work has been carried on largely from State funds, earnestly hope you will not embarrass our work, but let us have this aid on such terms that we can all work together and make a great national bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman from Indiana should not misunderstand my purpose.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. We have a certain line of farm demonstration work done within our States, and we are just as jealous of our system as you gentlemen are of yours. We feel called upon to support as strongly the system which exists in our States as you are to support that existing in your States; and inasmuch as we concede that the work in your States which you are interested in shall not be interfered with, we ask simply the same concession in return.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will show to me how I am interfering with the work in his State or in States similarly situated, I will withdraw that interference. I want the work to go on in all the States. I would like to ask the gentleman in what respect he thinks I am interfering?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I will be very glad to make that matter plain. There are two amendments pending, one of which in direct terms provides that the work carried on in the States shall be placed under the control of the Department of Agriculture. There can be but one leadership in this work in a State, for instance, like Indiana, and because the agricultural workers of our State are enlisted under the leadership of our agricultural college we shall not be content that our agricultural extension work shall be placed under the leadership and control of the Department of Agriculture, thereby giving undue control to that department over the agricultural educational system of our State. We do not ask that it be so done in your States, and we will not submit to it in ours.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I have not suggested a domination over that work by the Department of Agriculture, but cooperation with it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss] asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I wish to call the attention of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] to the fact that whenever you establish a line of work that is being so successfully carried on as is this work in many of the Northern States it should not be sought to put it under a divided leadership. Perhaps the farm demonstration work is the best system in the gentleman's State. But we beg that you will not seek to ingraft upon this bill amendments which would embarrass the work in our State and bring it, to a great degree, under the control of the Department of Agriculture. Having established that work along our own lines, we ask that you do not interfere with it or embarrass it, inasmuch as we do not seek to embarrass yours. Let us carry on our work in our own way. For these reasons I am opposed to this amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I thoroughly agree with the proposition enunciated by the gentleman, from Indiana, and I trust this amendment will be voted down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 14, after the word "not" by inserting the words "attending or."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Where does that amendment come in?

We were back on section 1. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER] desires to offer an amendment to section 1. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Unanimous consent has been given to the gentleman from Mississippi to return to that section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is true. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized. His amendment has been reported and he is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, there is some misunderstanding and confusion as to the meaning of section 2 as it stands, some question as to the meaning of the words "persons not resident in said colleges." I offer as an amendment the two words "attending or" to remove the misunderstanding and to make it clear. If adopted, the clause will then read:

To persons not attending or resident in said colleges.

Mr. LEVER. I accept that amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to amend by inserting after the word "colleges" a comma, so as to make it perfectly clear.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. That is right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 1.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to section 1 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, amend by striking out all after the word "colleges" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "in such proportion as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine."

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is that as these colleges were first founded by the bounty of the United States, and in certain States several colleges have been founded, the proportion of this fund expended shall be divided between these colleges as the United States authorities shall direct. That will give uniformity of practice and not leave the division of the moneys to the legislatures of the States.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I trust that that amendment will not be adopted. It will absolutely destroy the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That all printed matter and correspondence for the furtherance of the purposes of this act issued from the agricultural colleges or by the agents of the said extension departments thereof receiving the benefits of this act shall be transmitted in the mails of the United States and dependencies free of charge for postage, under such regulations as the Postmaster General from time to time may prescribe.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word. This section provides that all printed matter and correspondence issued by the agricultural colleges or by the agents of the extension departments shall go through the mails free of postage. I am very much afraid that if this provision goes in, giving to the agricultural colleges and the extension departments the privilege of sending anything they wish in first-class mail, the result will be that all the circular matter that ought to be sent third class will go as first-class mail.

Mr. LEVER. If my friend from Illinois will yield, I thoroughly agree with him on that proposition. I have a substitute for this section, that I will read in the gentleman's time, if he will yield.

Mr. MANN. I shall be very glad.

Mr. LEVER. My amendment reads:

That all correspondence for the furtherance of the purposes of this act issued through the agricultural colleges to its agents or by the agents of the said extension departments thereof receiving the benefits of this act shall be transmitted through the mails of the United States and dependencies free of charge for postage, under such regulations as the Postmaster General from time to time shall prescribe.

By this substitute I seek to prevent the doing of the very thing that the gentleman suggests, and at the same time give to the agent in the field the right from time to time to send free of postage his reports to the man who may be stationed at the college, or vice versa. I think I have done so in this amendment.

Mr. MANN. I notice the gentleman uses the words "and dependencies." What is the object in carrying "and dependencies" in this section?

Mr. LEVER. That language is copied from some of the other acts—I think the Hatch Act. I took the language as I found it, believing that the language that had been passed upon was proper language.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the Hatch Act would mean if it said anything about "dependencies." We did not have any dependencies at that time. But no portion of this money goes outside of the States of the United States.

Mr. LEVER. That is true.

Mr. MANN. I do not see any object in using those words.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. When the matter was before the committee it was stated that some of the institutions in the Philippines or Porto Rico or Hawaii might wish to have the advantage of the information that was gathered in this country.

Mr. LEVER. I was about to make that suggestion, that some of the bulletins printed on extension work might be valuable in those islands.

Mr. MANN. If it is to be printed by the Agricultural Department, it will be sent from there.

Mr. LEVER. I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it is advisable for 48 States to start in to correspond with the Philippine Islands without any limit as to postage.

Mr. KINDRED. Does not the gentleman think that the verbiage employed in regard to correspondence is sufficient, and will there not be an enormous amount of printing?

Mr. LEVER. I would think that any printed matter in the form of a circular of information to the local demonstrator or agent would be proper. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following substitute for section 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for section 3 of the bill: "That all correspondence for the furtherance of the purposes of this act issued from the agricultural colleges to their agents, or by the agents of said extension department thereof receiving the benefits of this act, shall be transmitted in the mails of the United States free of charge for postage, under such regulations as the Postmaster General from time to time may prescribe."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The question was taken, and the amendment as a substitute was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of paying the necessary expenses of maintaining said agricultural extension departments and printing and distributing information on agriculture and home economics, as hereinbefore prescribed, and for otherwise carrying out the provisions of this act, the sum of $10,000 shall be, and hereby is, annually appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid, as hereinafter provided, to each State which shall by action of its legislature assent to the provisions of this act: Provided, That payment of such installments of the appropriation hereinbefore made as shall become due to any State before the adjournment of the regular session of the legislature meeting next after the passage of this act shall be made upon the assent of the governor thereof, duly certified to the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided further, That the additional sum of $300,000 shall be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, to be paid as hereinafter provided, and an annual increase of the amount of such appropriation thereafter for nine years by an additional sum of $300,000 over the preceding year, and the annual additional sum to be paid thereafter to the States shall be $3,000,000, to be used only for the purposes hereinbefore stated; these additional sums to be allotted annually to each State in the proportion which its rural population bears to the total rural population of all the States, as determined by the next preceding Federal census: Provided further, That no State shall be entitled to any part of its allotment of these additional sums unless its legislature has heretofore provided or until it shall provide for the establishment of an agricultural extension department in its college or colleges receiving the benefits of this act, and the additional amount to be paid in any year to any State under this act shall be a sum not exceeding the sum appropriated for that year by the legislature of such State or provided by State, county, college, or local authority for the maintenance of said agricultural extension department: And provided further, That in each State which shall assent to the provisions of this act there shall be expended each year for field instruction and demonstrations not less than 75 per cent of all moneys available under the provisions of this act.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 18, after the word "act," insert the following: "And provided further, That if any State shall fail in any year to make the appropriations required as a condition precedent for obtaining the allotment from the Federal appropriation provided under this act, then any county or parish in such State that may make appropriation, or in which there may be raised by private subscription or otherwise the pro rata which said county or parish would have to pay under the per capita provisions of this act, shall receive a like amount from the appropriation provided under this act from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I concede in the beginning that that amendment is perhaps crudely drawn. It was drawn hurriedly, and if the idea that is involved in it should be adopted by the House it is not improbable that the section may have to be re-formed. But I feel like it is important to bring the idea before this House for action.

I have no doubt that if this bill shall prevail eventually all this cooperative demonstration and farm management work will be done through the agencies herein provided and that the bureau now in the Department of Agriculture and conducting that work will go out of business. Whether that is wise or unwise I do not care to discuss now. I doubt it, but I believe it will happen, and it would not surprise me, knowing the attitude of my distinguished friend from South Carolina, who in all probability will be chairman of the Committee on Agriculture in the next Congress, if that should come about within less than 10 or 12 years.

Now, if that bureau is destroyed and the demonstration is carried on through the agency herein provided alone, I want to call the attention of gentlemen to the importance of having some provision in here that a lesser unit than the State may have authority to join in and obtain the benefits under the act.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, with what enthusiasm this act, if it shall become a law of Congress, will be accepted in some of the States. Now, in my own State it is really only in my section of the State that the cooperative demonstration work has been instituted, because I live in the cotton section, and it is only in cotton sections so far that this particular work has been instituted. The department has not as yet initiated the work in the other sections, so that the whole people of our State are not as yet trained up to the benefits of this work, and I do not know whether the legislature of my State will see proper to make the appropriation that will be required to obtain its proportion of the fund provided in this act, but that there will be counties in that State that will desire to obtain the benefits is not to be questioned. I apprehend that that is true of many other States of the Union. I have no doubt that there will be a number of States that for one reason or another will fail during some years to make the appropriation which is the condition precedent for obtaining the amount of the allotment appropriated under this bill from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Does not the gentleman think if there are such States and they know the value of this work as it is proposed to be, and as I believe it to be, it would be better to throw the burden upon those who are enlightened and enlighten those who are not enlightened, and if we get down to dealing with communities of less size than States do we not do harm to the majority of the people in the respective States that do not care to cooperate?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I hardly think that reasoning is sound. As a matter of fact, there is this seemingly inherent injustice in this bill, anyway, and that is that if any State fails to make its stated appropriation, while the people of that State will continue to pay their proportion of the Federal taxes out of which the Federal appropriation is to be made, they will still receive absolutely none of its benefits.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield in that connection?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. That is true entirely of the district which I represent.

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I am not complaining about that. Does the gentleman think that he ought to complain?

Mr. GARRETT. I am not complaining about that. I am not making that now a basis of opposition to the bill.

Mr. MANN. Large cities pay their proportion of the taxes, but they get no portion of this.

Mr. GARRETT. That is true. I understand that. Of course that is true of many appropriations that are made; but, Mr. Speaker, I do not suggest that as ground of opposition to this bill. The observation was called out rather by the observation made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. There is probably one-half of the people of the State of Illinois, almost so, in the city of Chicago, who would receive no benefit.

Mr. GARRETT. Of course.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have five minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman may be granted five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I would state to the gentleman from Illinois that I think there is some wisdom in the theory that whatever would benefit the agricultural interests of Illinois would indirectly, I might say almost directly, benefit the people of the city of Chicago. The people of the city of Chicago must live from the produce of the farm, and there is a pretty well developed theory that if we had some better agricultural development in the country now the cost of living to the people in the cities would be reduced.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, if the gentleman will allow me, we have very good authority that no man lives unto himself alone. We are all interested in the prosperity and well-being of all of the people, and our interests, whether in Illinois or Louisiana or elsewhere, in the city or on the farm, are reciprocal.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I know that that is the attitude of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, demonstrated by a long life of earnest, honest service, based upon that theory. [Applause.]

Coming back to the proposition which I brought before the House, it seems to me that in view of the conditions that do exist in various States—and of course I know much more about my own State than I do about the others—considering the conditions that exist there, and that I am sure exist in a measure in the same form in various other States, it seems to me it would be the part of wisdom to have some provision of this bill that would at least permit the county as a unit to obtain benefits under the bill if the larger community, or the State, in its wisdom or unwisdom, did not see fit to do so.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Appreciating all that the gentleman has said, and the gentleman admitting that a change of the bill would be necessary, it would require changes all through——

Mr. GARRETT. I am not sure that it will require changes other than in this section.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I assure the gentleman it would require changes in many places to carry out his purpose. In reference to the payment of money and all that, does not the gentleman believe that it would be quite time enough to do what the gentleman suggests when some of the States have refused to accept the proposition under this bill? If it should happen that the States would not accept this, or one State, would it not be quite time enough then to give encouragement to the county or similar municipality other than the State, and would it not be better first to make the offer to the State in the expectation and hope that the State will accept it?

Mr. LEVER. Let me make this suggestion to the gentleman from Illinois: We authorize unconditionally an appropriation of $10,000 to each State which will accept, and does not the gentleman think the States will very rapidly avail themselves of that money?

Mr. GARRETT. I have no doubt they will take that $10,000; but that is only a preliminary proposition. Here, Mr. Speaker, is the situation. This requires annual or biennial appropriations by the legislatures. In some of the States the legislatures meet every two years, in some others every four years, and in some every year. Now, occasions may arise where a State, even after it has appropriated one year, may fail to make the annual appropriation in another year. We know how those things arise often.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of these gentlemen? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, as a contribution to the agitation over the Tariff Board, and as a suggestion to those who have been reading statements criticizing that body, I append the following letter written by the chairman, Mr. Emery, to the editor of the Daily Trade Record:

STATEMENT BY CHAIRMAN EMERY, OF THE TARIFF BOARD.

AUGUST 20, 1912.

EDITOR DAILY TRADE RECORD:

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of August 19 referring to the articles by R. K. MacLea, published in the New York World regarding the report of the Tariff Board on the cotton schedule.

I do not care to enter into a controversy in detail with a disgruntled employee whose action is determined by a desire to "get even" and a desire to sell his wares.

I have been expecting his attack because he threatened me directly that, unless he was continued on the pay roll, he would make charges against the board. Naturally, this threat severed all relations between us at once.

That his other motive is a mercenary one is shown by the facts that he offered to make his own reports to us show more favorably to the protective system, and that, after the publication of our report, he offered his services (for pay) to certain New England manufacturers to offset what he anticipated would be the radical influence of our findings. He was then willing to receive pay to show that our report was too unfavorable to them. He now receives pay for charging us with working in their interests.

The statement that foreign material was suppressed from ulterior motives is absolutely without foundation. Certain figures were not used because our statistical and accounting staff reported that they could not be verified, and therefore could not be guaranteed as true. Mr. MacLea was familiar with the open discussion of this material, and made no protest at the time.

As to the violation of confidence, it is somewhat difficult from the make-up of the articles to tell what portions of them are supposed to be under Mr. MacLea's signature. In at least one case the cost of a fabric is given for the mill making it, and the name of the mill revealed. If this information came from any employee of the Tariff Board, it is in distinct violation of a solemn oath, which reads, in part, as follows:

"* * * and that I will not disclose, either during the period of my connection with the Tariff Board or thereafter, any information contained in the schedules, lists, or statements obtained for or prepared by the Tariff Board to any person or persons except those designated by the board. So help me God. * * *"

Very truly, yours,

HENRY C. EMERY, Chairman.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania next. The Chair tacitly agreed to recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER].

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 1, amend by striking out the word "rural," and in line 2 the words "total rural."

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, the definition of "rural" by the census and meaning of this bill would be communities of less than 2,500 population. Now, in Massachusetts there are very few communities of less population than that, and the old, dead hill towns number from 100 to 500. They would get no advantage from this act because they have not the people there to reap the advantages. All the live towns and live places in Massachusetts have a great deal larger population, and yet they would be willing to accept the benefits that would accrue by this act. Massachusetts contains about one-thirtieth of the total population of the country and would provide—because Massachusetts is at least equal to the average wealth of the country—one-thirtieth of the total appropriation for this act, whereas under the words "rural population" she will be restricted in expenditure to only about one-eighth, and with an appropriation of about $120,000 she would receive about $15,000. Now, this act is not exclusively for the benefit of agriculture, as the text shows. It is to extend useful and practical information on subjects relating to agriculture and home economics. The population not only in our large towns, but even in our large manufacturing centers, requires that the money expended by this act should be expended for their benefit, and I think they should get something from it. Whereas if the word "rural" is left in and the words "total rural," large centers and even small ones would receive no benefits whatever. It seems to me that the best distribution would be in proportion to the population of the different States.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is substantially the same as that offered by me. I believe the word "rural" ought to be stricken out of this paragraph, and I hope gentlemen on the other side will accept this as a fair proposition. If we are going to make a Federal appropriation for education it ought not to be made for any special section of the country. A little while ago I offered an amendment to the second paragraph, proposing that where the money was applied to the purpose of education in the State all the residents of the State should have an opportunity to be benefited by it.

That was voted down. It would appear from that vote that it is proposed that certain parts of the State are to be preferred over certain other parts of the State. Now, in the matter of Federal appropriations it seems to me we should not sectionalize at all. The proposition is that we shall disseminate useful information to the farmer. Some of us have tried to insert amendments that would tend to educate the boy to be a farmer. By keeping the word "rural" in the bill we shall confine education only to rural sections. I did not hear what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER] said in support of his amendment, but I know that the Census Bureau applies the word "rural" to communities of less than 2,500 people. So that if the benefits of this legislation are limited only to those who live in rural sections of the country, anyone living in a community in excess of 2,500 people is absolutely barred from the benefits of this bill.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PEPPER. I would like to know if the gentleman has estimated just how much the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts would increase the appropriation, or the proportionate appropriation, in the State of Pennsylvania or the State of New York?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I question whether it would increase it at all, because we are dealing with proportions.

Mr. PEPPER. I understand. The gentleman recognizes, of course, that in each of those States are large cities, which would cause the proportionate amount to be increased?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am glad the gentleman mentions that, because while the charge is made—and it is substantiated by the facts—that the boys are leaving the farms and going into the city, you propose here that we shall have no counterbalance, and that once the boy goes into the city he shall stay there and we shall continue to deprive the farm of his services. Now, I say, if you are going to educate the boy to be a farmer, we have plenty of them in the cities who should have the opportunity to go upon the farm. You should as readily consider the boys who live in the city as those who live upon the farm. You can not charge congestion altogether to those who are residents of the city, because that congestion in the cities is due largely to the fact that boys leave the farm before they are sufficiently educated in farming and come to live in the city. The increase in the cost of living is involved in this proposition. I want the boy in my district, which is congested, to have a right to apply for admission into one of these agricultural colleges for which we are making an appropriation of Federal money. It is not the money of the rural districts any more than it is the money of the cities; it is the money of all the people, and my boy in the city has as much right to have the advantage of an education in an agricultural college supported by it as the boy who is now a resident of the country.

Mr. LAMB. Will he go to the country?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to make it an inducement for him to go.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. CANNON. This is, as I understand it, demonstration work and farm-management work. The gentleman's boy, or my boy, if I had one, has just as much the right of admission to the State agricultural colleges as the farmer's boy. Now, can there be demonstration of farm-management work in the gentleman's city?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think I can answer the gentleman. The only definition of the word "rural" by which the man who interprets this law can be guided is the definition fixed by the Census Bureau, which holds that "rural" means communities of less than 2,500 people. You are barring out the community, whether urban or suburban, in which more than 2,500 people dwell, and you are denying this education, this demonstrating, this lecturing, to those who live in a community made up of more than 2,500 people.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] persists in misunderstanding the purpose of this bill. It is not for the purpose of educating the youth of the country; it is not for the purpose of conducting education within agricultural colleges.

From 1862 down to the present time the Government of the United States has contributed millions upon millions of money for the establishment and support of agricultural colleges within which the boys that the gentleman from Pennsylvania talks about, from the cities and from the country as well, may be educated, and there is no exclusion of boys from a city or from the country. No line of discrimination is drawn, no distinction is made, and no question is asked as to where the child comes from. If he is able to enter an agricultural college, entrance is permitted regardless of residence.

But this is not a bill to provide for educating children. It is to provide for the practical work of teaching improved methods of farm management by making demonstrations and by giving practical instruction upon the farm itself.

I have said before, in speaking upon this bill, which comes from the committee of which I am a member, that there is evidently a space between the college and the farm. Under the appropriations that the Government has made and under the appropriations made by the States agricultural colleges have been established. The Department of Agriculture has also been established and conducted, and the result is that the colleges and the department are literally filled with results of investigations, experiments, demonstrations, and analyses, but no way has yet been found to take those results to the farmer in such a way that he can make practical use of them. The appropriations heretofore made by the Government for the assistance of agricultural colleges have in so many words forbidden the use of that money or any part of it outside of the colleges, so that all this work must be done within the walls of the colleges. Bulletins, of course, have been issued, and institutes have been held, but in the majority of cases the man who speaks at an institute talks over the heads of his hearers, and the bulletins are prepared in such a way—although they are perhaps made as skillfully as they can be—that they are not understood by the farmers whose hands they reach.

We are therefore in a position where either this information will remain locked up in the colleges and in the department—information which has cost millions and millions of money—or else we must provide some such machinery as this bill suggests, by which this information can be taken directly to the farmer on the farm and explained to him in such a way that he can make practical use of it.

If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] wishes additional assistance to the agricultural colleges, where education can be given to the youth of the land, I for one am willing to join him. I will vote for an appropriation of any reasonable amount. I will vote to incorporate into a law any feasible scheme or plan for the education of the youth of this country. But I do not want to have this bill encumbered by incorporating here something that does not belong to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I am heartily in favor of the pending bill, because I believe it is needed and if carrrid into successful operation will bring great profit and resulting comfort to the people of our country engaged in agricultural pursuits. The idea involved in the bill has had my earnest support since it was first advanced and brought to my attention. The bill we are now considering is almost the same—it involves exactly the same idea—as the bill introduced by me in the Sixty-first Congress, H. R. 15422. That bill was prepared by the executive committee of the Association of Agricultural Colleges of the United States, and was presented by me at their request. There were hearings on the bill before the Committee on Agriculture, at which members of the executive committee of the above association and representatives of the Department of Agriculture and other interested parties appeared. There was an immense amount of correspondence between me and colleges and associations interested in agriculture throughout the country, and the widespread demand for enactment of the legislation was brought to the attention of the committee. But the committee in its wisdom, or otherwise, refused to consider the bill favorably, and it was not reported to the House. When the Sixty-second Congress convened this bill (H. R. 22871) was, at the request of the said executive committee, introduced by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], who, on account of his wisdom and experience, his deep interest in matters to which the bill relates, and because he is prominent on the Committee on Agriculture, where he holds a high place as a member of the majority party in control of the committee and the House, has been able to bring the bill to its present stage.

Mr. LEVER is entitled to credit for the valiant fight he has put up in committee and on the floor of the House. I congratulate him on the measure of success he has achieved. I have supported his efforts heartily and am just as favorable to the measure as if it bore my name or as I would have been if the bill had again been intrusted to my care.

As is clearly set forth in the report accompanying the bill, the bill, if enacted into law, will provide that $10,000 shall be appropriated annually to each State which has established or which shall hereafter establish an agricultural college recognized under national law and if the State shall assent to the provisions in this act. This annual appropriation is made unconditionally to the several States, and will amount each year to an aggregate sum of $480,000. The bill would provide an additional sum of $300,000 for the fiscal year 1914, and an annual increase of $300,000 over the preceding year for a period of nine years, or until the total amount of the additional appropriation (that is, above the $480,000 which is unconditional) reaches the sum of $3,000,000 annually. But the additional appropriation of the sum of $300,000 annually is to be allotted to and divided among the several States in the proportion which their rural population bears to the total population of the United States, as determined by the next preceding Federal census. The Census Bureau defines urban population as "that residing in cities and other incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more, including New England towns of that population." So rural population is that residing on the farms or in the country or in cities or villages having a population of less than 2,500. The bill, if enacted into law, will provide the sum of $10,000 per year to each State unconditionally, but the additional sums shall be paid to a State only on condition that the State shall, by affirmative action, accept and bring itself within the provisions of the law; and no additional sum shall be paid to any State unless its legislature, its college, or other local authority has provided or shall provide for an agricultural extension department, as provided in the bill, and a sum each year equal to such proposed additional appropriation under this bill. The idea is, as expressed in the report, that if any State wishes to receive any sum of money in excess of the annual appropriation of $10,000 there must be furnished by some authority, other than the Federal authority, as much as is offered or provided by the Federal Government—no more and no less.

I insert herewith a table showing the total population of each State, the total rural population, the per cent of total rural population by States, and the amount or portion of said increase of $3,000,000 which will be allotted or available to each State if it accepts and brings itself within the requirements of the law:

State.	Total population.	Total rural population.	Per cent of total rural population in the United States and by States.	Amount of appropriation allotted each State.
United States	91,972,266	49,248,883	53.7	$3,000,000
Alabama	2,138,093	1,767,662	3.58	107,400
Arizona	204,354	141,094	.29	8,700
Arkansas	1,574,449	1,371,768	2.78	83,400
California	2,377,549	907,810	1.84	55,200
Colorado	799,024	394,184	.80	24,000
Connecticut	1,114,756	114,917	.23	6,900
Delaware	202,322	105,237	0.21	$6,300
Florida	752,619	533,539	1.08	32,400
Georgia	2,609,121	2,070,471	4.19	125,700
Idaho	325,594	255,095	.52	15,600
Illinois	5,638,591	2,161,662	4.38	131,400
Indiana	2,700,876	1,557,041	3.15	94,800
Iowa	2,224,771	1,544,717	3.13	93,900
Kansas	1,690,949	1,197,159	2.43	72,900
Kentucky	2,289,905	1,734,463	3.51	105,300
Louisiana	1,656,388	1,159,872	2.35	70,500
Maine	742,371	360,928	.73	21,900
Maryland	1,295,346	637,154	1.29	38,700
Massachusetts	3,366,416	241,049	.49	14,700
Michigan	2,810,173	1,483,129	3.01	90,300
Minnesota	2,075,708	1,225,414	2.48	74,400
Mississippi	1,797,114	1,589,803	3.22	96,600
Missouri	3,293,335	1,894,518	3.84	115,200
Montana	376,053	242,633	.49	14,700
Nebraska	1,192,214	881,362	1.79	53,700
Nevada	81,875	68,508	.14	4,200
New Hampshire	430,572	175,473	.35	10,500
New York	9,113,614	1,928,120	3.91	117,300
New Jersey	2,537,167	629,957	1.28	38,400
New Mexico	327,301	280,730	.57	17,100
North Carolina	2,206,287	1,887,813	3.83	114,900
North Dakota	577,056	513,820	1.04	31,200
Ohio	4,767,121	2,101,978	4.26	127,800
Oklahoma	1,657,155	1,337,009	2.71	$ 81,360
Oregon	672,765	365,705	.74	22,200
Pennsylvania	7,665,111	3,034,442	6.15	184,500
Rhode Island	542,610	17,956	.04	1,200
South Carolina	1,515,400	1,290,568	2.62	78,600
South Dakota	583,888	507,215	1.03	30,900
Tennessee	2,184,789	1,743,744	3.53	105,900
Texas	3,896,542	2,958,438	5.99	179,700
Utah	373,351	200,417	.41	12,300
Vermont	355,956	187,013	.38	11,400
Virginia	2,061 612	1,585,083	3.21	96,300
Washington	1,141,990	536,460	1.08	32,400
West Virginia	1,121,119	992,877	2.01	60,300
Wisconsin	2,333,860	1,329,540	2.69	80,700
Wyoming	145,965	102,744	.21	6,300

Generally speaking, the only objection urged against this bill by Members of the House who have expressed themselves on the subject is that it does not go far enough; that it ought to provide for establishing and maintaining schools in rural communities where boys and girls can be educated in agriculture and home economics, and thereby prepared to become scientific as well as thoroughly practical farmers or housekeepers. Perhaps there is foundation for this criticism of the bill, but its framers and those who are responsible for it and those who present it to the House have prepared it, and are urging its passage as a plain and simple measure to provide money for the teaching of agriculture in a practical way, by educated and experienced men who will do their work in personal communication and actual contact with farmers right on the farms. The Federal Government has spent many millions of dollars in the operations of its Agricultural Department, the scientific and experimental work of which exceeds in volume and results that of any other similar department in the world. The Federal Government has also encouraged the establishment of agricultural colleges in the States, and has contributed many millions of dollars in support of these colleges and in support of experiment stations in connection therewith. The department and the colleges have worked intelligently, industriously, and incessantly in carrying on their investigations to discover the secrets of the soil and to learn the very best methods of cultivation and fertilization of the soil and the best methods of preparing, harvesting, and marketing farm crops. Evidently, when the department was organized and provision was made for substantial aid to agricultural colleges, it was thought that it would be necessary only for these organizations to make investigations, experiments, and analyses for the purpose of discovering the facts necessary to be known and to be put into operation for the improvement of agriculture. This was evidently the thought in the minds of men who framed the laws, because no adequate provision was made and very little, if any, preparation was made for communication between the department and the colleges on the one hand and the farmers of the country on the other. No method was provided for getting the results of the work of the department or the colleges to the farmers in such manner or form as to be readily understood or made available for use on the farm. The men who have prepared and who are supporting this bill realize the fault of former laws and the discrepancy existing in the methods employed by the department and the colleges, which methods, in justice to the men in charge, are clearly defects in the law and not in the disposition of men whose duty it is to follow it.

As I have said, the purpose of this bill is not to provide for making further investigations; it is not for the purpose of assisting or encouraging the teaching of the youth of the land in schools. It has a practical purpose. It proposes to take the results of investigations and experiments heretofore and from time to time made directly to the farmers of the country.

I may say in passing that I am urging passage of this bill just as it came from the committee, not because I do not admit the value of the suggestions made by gentlemen who would incorporate provisions for establishing and maintaining schools, but because I think it is absolutely necessary to enact without delay a practical measure for taking results already reached to the farmers who need them and are entitled to them. I am ready at the proper time to support any feasible measure for locating and maintaining schools for teaching agriculture—schools that will give practical instruction to the boys and the girls of rural communities. I shall give hearty support to any measure that seems to me wise that will provide for "vocational teaching," to use a term so often used by gentlemen on this floor who are urging that this bill ought to be larger in its scope; that is, large enough to include vocational teaching in the country and in communities of comparatively small population. But this bill, substantially in its present form, ought to be passed now, and my only objection to the measures suggested by the gentlemen who are urging legislation for vocational teaching is that an attempt to incorporate such a provision in this bill will so delay its passage, will so encumber it, as to make its defeat in this Congress, or at least in this session, almost a certainty.

Since the organization of the Department of Agriculture experiments and investigations have been made for the purpose of improving agriculture. The ultimate result to be reached has been the improvement of agriculture, but up to this time the principal result has been the accumulation of information; comparatively little has been done in the way of getting information to the people.

About 50 years ago Congress began to make appropriations for the assistance of agricultural colleges of the States and has passed other acts to establish or assist experiment stations at these colleges. Annual appropriations have been made and the aggregate of money appropriated and expended for these purposes is many millions of dollars. But each act expressly forbids the use of the money outside of the colleges; no part of it can be used to take results of investigations to the farmers, except by means of bulletins and by lectures at farmers' institutes. This means has been ineffective and little effort besides has been made to take results discovered and produced by infinite labor and immense outlay of money to the farmers of the country.

The result of the policy of the Congress, the Department of Agriculture, and the colleges is that laboratories and libraries are full to overflowing with results of analyses, experiments, and investigations; the heads of learned men of the Department of Agriculture and of the agricultural educational institutions of the country are filled with valuable information, all of which is or ought to be available for the use of the farmers and for the benefit of all the people of the country. A remarkable statement, but entirely within truth and reason, I believe, was made by presidents of agricuitral colleges who appeared before the Committee on Agriculture of the House, to the effect that the department and the colleges have learned secrets of the soil and have discovered and worked out methods of culture and of farm management which, if disclosed and carried to the farmer in such a way as to be understood and available for practical use, would revolutionize agriculture in this country.

Bulletins contain much information and lectures are helpful, but they reach or are understood by only a small portion of the farming population. A story told by Prof. Hopkins, of the agricultural department of the University of Illinois, in his book, The Story of the Soil, illustrates the situation. Prof. Hopkins made a demonstration of raising oats. His method of culture and fertilization produced a splendid yield, compared with which the results on neighboring and near-by farms were insignificant. Many people of the part of the country in which the work was done came to see it. One old gentleman came with his family, and when he saw the splendid yield of oats produced on land apparently similar in every respect to his own, he broke down and said: "Why could I not have known this 20 years ago? I have the same soil, and if I had only known how to treat it, it would not have been necessary for me to bring up my family in poverty and ignorance." The professor said: "You did have a chance to know; the department has issued bulletins and has conducted institutes around here." The old gentleman replied: "I never could understand the bulletins, and when I attended the institutes I could not fully understand the lectures."

A few weeks ago, while talking in the House in support of my motion to amend the appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture so as to provide about $65,000 in addition to the amount recommended by the committee "for farm management and farm practice," I told that story. The applause showed the House agreed with me; the Members think the farmer needs and is entitled to advice and instruction right on the farm, especially as the secrets to be disclosed and the information to be imparted were obtained by the use of public funds, to which the farmer contributed his full share.

Except the trifling appropriation above referred to, Congress has never made an appropriation for this kind of helpful work of instruction and demonstration in Northern States. The language of acts has enabled the department to carry on demonstration work on an immense scale in the cotton States; or, rather, the work has been done in a large number of places, instruction and assistance have been given to and in cooperation with a large number of farmers. Liberal appropriations by Congress (this year the bill carries about $325,000) have been supplemented by the funds of the general education board and by appropriations made by States in which the work is done.

But investigations by entomologists and other scientists, and by practical men in and out of the department, very soon disclosed that the boll weevil has come to stay; that its ravages can be overcome in some measure by planting an early maturing variety of cotton which is far enough advanced when attacked to enable it partially to withstand the attack, but "the best" and only sure "method of meeting the ravages of the boll weevil" has been found to be diversified agriculture. The South has for the first time been taught to produce corn and potatoes and to raise hogs, cattle, and other stock.

Congress has never made an appropriation for this kind of helpful work of instruction and demonstration in the North; the language of acts permits expenditures in cotton States only. Appropriations made "to investigate and encourage the adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice" produce the only money available for direct assistance or instruction in the North.

The department has recently put a new construction upon the law and the acts of appropriation under which the farm management and farm practice work is done, and men engaged in this work are now directed to assist and advise farmers in all farm work and in the transaction of all farm business. The new directions will so enlarge the duties of men sent into the field to assist farmers as to remove the distinction between the farm management and the work of demonstration.

But even before the department enlarged its different kinds of work I was unable to see that there was material difference between them as they were actually carried on in the field. An expert, sent out by the department to spend "demonstration" money, takes time from the arduous labor of watching his pupil farmer plowing, sowing, and cultivating to offer advice as to selection and rotation of crops, raising of live stock, keeping of farm accounts, and so forth. The expert on "farm management," while giving instruction strictly in line with the act of Congress by which he is employed, gives valuable advice also as to preparation of the soil, need and use of particular fertilizers, selection of seed, proper cultivation, and care of crops. Each representative of the department is an expert in his work, but each is abundantly able and willing to give instruction and to impart information gained by scientific and practical investigation in the wide field of agriculture. And the work of each is done in such a way as to be helpful to farmers. The expert in each class of work meets the farmer on the farms, almost every one of whom, with limited means and unable to understand or apply improved methods, has been confronted and baffled by the very problems the expert is able to assist him to solve.

I had learned of the splendid work done in the South, so I called on Dr. Galloway, Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, and asked him for men to do the same or similar work in Michigan. The doctor replied that the work in the South is done with the "boll-weevil" appropriation, supplemented by the funds of the general education board, which appropriation can be used only in the cotton States. I asked about the "farm-management" money. He said the appropriation of last year was altogether too small ($142,000) to permit of the use of any of it in Michigan. I said: "The Committee on Agriculture will recommend an increase of $44,000." He thought there would still be little, if any, money for Michigan, inasmuch as demands upon the fund are so numerous and so urgent. I then tried to induce the committee to make a further increase in the bill soon to be reported to the House. Failing in this, I offered an amendment on the floor of the House during the consideration of the bill. This amendment provided an increase of the "farm-management" appropriation to $250,000, an increase of about $64,000 above the recommendation of the committee. Debate on the amendment showed it to be very popular and likely to be adopted, whereupon Democrats who favored the amendment, unwilling to permit a Republican to have credit for proposing it, arranged to have one of their own party—Mr. STONE, of Illinois—offer an amendment to the amendment increasing the amount to $251,000. The Stone amendment was accepted and substituted for mine, and was adopted by the House.

Money having been provided, the department has sent men into the States of the North. I have paid particular attention to demands from Michigan, which I in part represent, and have, to the best of my ability, brought these demands to and urged them upon the favorable consideration of the department. I do not know how many men will be sent to Michigan, but 12, I believe, are employed there now, and more will be added as arrangements can be made. I am particularly gratified by the fact that the department, in recognition of my effort to secure increased appropriation, has employed a man to work exclusively in the counties of the congressional district I represent. He began his work about the middle of April. He will devote his entire time to learning local soil and climatic conditions, and, when the result of his investigation will justify him in so doing, he will offer advice and assistance to farmers in arranging and conducting their work; will make suggestions as to selection of seed, preparation and fertilization of soil, methods of culture, care of crops, and so forth. He will meet farmers on the farm, will conduct meetings called by himself, will attend farmers' or Grange meetings and take part in consideration of questions in which farmers are interested. The work of the expert will extend over a term of years; he will practically become a resident of the district. The work can not be completed in one year; considerable time, perhaps several years, will be required to determine the full benefit or value of "methods and practice" recommended by the expert.

There is no room for doubt as to the urgent need of better methods of agriculture. Lengthy discussion or citation of statistics is not necessary to show that agriculture is actually declining in this country. The average annual yield of many important and necessary crops is diminishing year by year. In many of the countries of Europe where agriculture has been the employment of the people for centuries, centuries even before agriculture was begun in this country, the soil is so cultivated and its fertility is so conserved and improved that it becomes more productive and more valuable as time goes on.

The story of development of agriculture in France, Denmark, and Germany by the practice of scientific, sensible methods of culture and fertilization is interesting and instructive. The people of these countries have been rescued from poverty by intelligent agriculture; they are in large measure self-supporting and self-contained countries. England, on the other hand, is dependent upon other countries for much of the food her people need. Settlement of a strike on the railroads of England is forced by act of Parliament, because if transportation of food products from the seaboard to the interior of the country is interrupted the people will at once suffer for lack of food and will starve if transportation is not renewed.

The United States ought to begin, before it is too late, to increase the products of its farms and improve the conditions of its farmers. This country ought to profit by the experience of European countries. The Federal Government and the States as well have enacted legislation for the conservation of timber and mineral wealth; the development and use of waterways and water powers are regulated by law for the purpose of preventing monopoly or waste; but there is absolutely no law to prevent waste of fertility of the soil. If we are to conserve the fertility of the soil of this country, we must conserve the intelligence and add to the sum of scientific and practical knowledge of the people who till the soil.

It is a matter in which the people of the entire country are interested, and it is the right and duty of Congress to legislate in respect to it. The production of any great agricultural crop is not of purely local interest. The quantity of cotton produced in the States of the South, the cost of its production, and the welfare of the people producing it are matters in which the people of every State of the Union are directly and vitally interested, as the people of the entire country are interested in the production of corn in Illinois, cattle in Iowa, sheep in Montana, and fruit in Michigan. These interests are country-wide in their magnitude and importance, and the Federal Government only is able properly to protect and promote them.

The population of the cities of the country is even more interested than the farmer in the price of farm products. The farmer eats his own product regardless of its value, but a city man may find it necessary to measure his consumption of food by the expense of producing it on the farm. The cities are complaining of the cost of the products of the farms and are showing ill feeling toward farmers because of high prices, but an investigation of conditions on the farms, of the cost in labor and investment to produce crops, and the prices actually received by farmers show clearly that prices can not be reduced and that the only way by which consumers in the cities can be relieved and the farmers at the same time be given reasonable returns for labor and money expended is for the farmers so to carry on their business as to enable them to produce a great deal more than is now produced with the same expenditure of money and labor as at present.

In support of the statement that although prices of farm products are high, or are so considered by consumers, the work of farming is not very profitable and that the producer of farm products gets only a comparatively small share of the selling price of his products, I wish to quote from the Yearbook of the Department of Agriculture for 1910, page 20:

From the details that have been presented with regard to the increase of the prices of farm products between farmer and consumer, the conclusion is inevitable that the consumer has no well-grounded complaint against the farmer for the prices that he pays. The farmer supplies the capital for production and takes the risk of his losses; his crops are at the mercy of drought and flood and heat and frost, to say nothing of noxious insects and blighting diseases. He supplies hard, exacting, unremitting labor. A degree and range of information and intelligence are demanded by agriculture which are hardly equaled in any other occupation. Then, there is the risk of overproduction and disastrously low prices. From beginning to end the farmer must steer dextrously to escape perils to his profits, and indeed to his capital, on every hand. At last the products are started on their way to the consumer. The railroad, generally speaking, adds a percentage of increase to the farmer's prices that is not large. After delivery by the railroad the products are stored a short time, are measured into the various retail quantities, more or less small, and the dealers are rid of them as soon as possible. The dealers have risks that are practically small, except credit sales and such risks as grow out of their trying to do an amount of business which is small as compared with their number.

The above quotation from the Yearbook is brief, but contains much truth and offers explanation of conditions under which farm products are produced and of manifold difficulties under which they pass from the farm to the retail dealer and ultimately to the consumer.

I wish also to insert a table prepared by the Department of Agriculture, showing the proportion of selling prices actually received by the farmer at the time the investigation by the department was made:

Commodity.	Unit of sale.	Producers share.
		Per cent.
Milk	Quart	50
Butter	Pound	87
Poultry	do	50
Eggs	Dozen	69
Cabbage	Head	48
Do	Pound	65
Celery	Bunch	60
Apples	Bushel	56
Do	Barrel	66
Strawberries	Quart	49
Do	Crate	76
Onions	Peck	28
Do	Barrel	58
Oranges	Dozen	20
Do	Box	59
Oats	Bushel	74
Melons	Pound	50
Parsnips	Bunch	60
Potatoes	Bushel	70
String beans	Barrel	80
Sweet potatoes	do	61
Turnips	Bunch	60
Watermelons	Each	34

The above table, which is correct, I believe, shows clearly the truthfulness of the claim made by farmers that the high cost of living is not to be attributed to them or to excess of profits received by them. The modern system of transportation and distribution approximately doubles the price consumers have to pay for farm products. There is only one remedy for the situation: Production must be increased. Scientific and practical men tell us that production can easily be doubled without additional outlay of strength and at trifling additional expense in money. The average yield of corn on the farms of South Carolina and Georgia is or has been about 15 bushels per acre, but the prize winner in the boys' corn clubs of the Southern States, following instructions of representatives of the Department of Agriculture, produced 228 bushels and 24 pounds of shelled corn on 1 acre. More than 500 boys in Georgia last year raised over 100 bushels of shelled corn per acre; 750 boys in that State raised more than 84 bushels per acre.

Last year the farmers of Georgia sat up and took notice. They had heard, with more or less incredulity, the stories of representatives of the Department of Agriculture as to improvements that could be made and of increases in corn yield that might be reached. They were, as a rule, willing to permit their boys to follow instructions of the department and see what they could do, but the farmers themselves felt there was nothing for them to learn; they knew the soil of Georgia and knew what it can and can not do. But as President Snell, of the agricultural college of that State, says:

The gray-haired grandsires who believed that only 10 or 12 bushels of corn per acre could be raised have been converted. Last year the value of the corn crop of Georgia was increased $10,000,000, which was remarkable, in view of the worst drought in the history of the State.

A statement made by the late Dr. Knapp, a representative of the department, who had charge of the work in the South, is interesting, and I insert it as a part of my remarks:

The visit to Washington this week of the prize-winning boys from 11 Southern States is the crowning event of the year's work of 46,225 boys. These boys are members of the corn clubs under the farmers' cooperative demonstration work of the United States Department of Agriculture.

About a year ago all of the members of the corn clubs agreed to work 1 acre of corn in accordance with the instructions of the department. Merchants, bankers, and other public-spirited citizens offered more than $40,000 worth of prizes, consisting of cash, farm implements, trips, ponies, pigs, bicycles, watches, and many other things calculated to gladden the adolescent heart. Government agents, public-school officers, and teachers cooperated in the organization and instruction of clubs in nearly 600 counties. The names and addresses of the members of the clubs were filed with the United States Department of Agriculture. Circulars of instruction, prepared by Dr. S. A. Knapp, in charge of the demonstration work, were mailed to all of the boys at various times during the year. When the boys studied seed selection the whole county got interested. When they took up the preparation of the soil there was a general movement for better preparation. The prize winners, now in Washington, plowed their acres from 8 to 16 inches deep and thoroughly pulverized their seed beds. When the subject of fertilization came up the general knowledge about nitrogen, potash, and phosphorus was increased, leaves and wood mold were sought to increase humus, and stable and poultry houses were cleaned out for the benefit of the prize acre. Shallow and frequent cultivation was kept up during the spring and summer, because the boys had learned that the roots of the corn must not be broken, and that the corn must have a good dust mulch in order to conserve moisture.

According to the regulations making awards of prizes, the following points were considered: Yield, cost per bushel, best 10 ears, and written history of crop. Not all of the boys who won prizes made the largest yields in their States. The economical side must be considered. The farming must be profitable. A record must be kept and a good exhibit made at the county corn show or fair.

A year ago Secretary Wilson gave diplomas of merit to four boys who came to Washington. At that time there were 12,000 members of the clubs. This year business organizations and individual citizens gave prize trips in 11 Southern States. Governors and superintendents of education are also giving diplomas of honor to all boys who produced 75 bushels per acre, at a reasonable cost. It is a common occurrence for 500 to 1,000 people to witness the awards of 15 or 20 certificates at a county seat. In one Mississippi county 48 boys averaged 92 bushels per acre. In one South Carolina county 20 boys produced 1,700 bushels of corn on 20 acres. In another county in the same State 142 boys averaged 62 bushels per acre

This work is having much to do with the increased averages of the Southern States in corn production. It will have something to do with reducing the cost of living, also.

The following are the names and addresses of the winners of the trip to the capital of their country, and also the yields of their respective acres and the cost per bushel:

Names and addresses.	Number of bushels.	Cost per bushel.
		Cents.
Hughey A. Harden, Banks, Ala	120	32
Ira Smith, Silver, Ark	119	8
Joseph Stone, Center, Ga	102⅞	29
Stephen G. Henry, Melrose, La	139⅞	13⅛
William Williams, Decatur, Miss	146⅜	18
W. Ernest Starnes, Hickory, N. C	146⅜	38
Floyd Gaver, Tishomingo, Okla	95½	8
Jerry H. Moore, Winona, S. C	228⅜	43
Norman Smith, Covington, Tenn	125⅝	37
William Rodger Smith, Karnes City, Tex	83⅛	13¾
Maurice Olgers, Sutherland, Va	168	40

The average yield of wheat in the section of Illinois where Prof. Hopkins carries on his experiment and demonstration work is about 20 bushels per acre, but Prof. Hopkins produces 58 bushels per acre by methods which he says are easily understood and within the reach of the farmers of the country.

President Edwards of the Rhode Island Agricultural College gives an instance where in his State "the application of scientific knowledge has increased the production of hay on a particular farm from 400 pounds to 3½ tons per acre," which result, Dr. Edwards adds, is "purely and simply and absolutely, without any question whatever, the result of the application of the knowledge we have at present at the college ready to be communicated to the people."

Examples giving the experience and results of scientific up-to-date methods of management and production might be multiplied. They all teach better business methods that must be applied to the business of farming. Farmers realize their need and are willing and anxious to secure help. They may scoff at "science" and laugh at "book farming," but science is "only crystallized common sense reduced to practical form."

The proposition involved in "farm management" and "farm demonstration" is how to put into practice on the farms the vast fund of information gathered by 50 years of labor by department and college, information now practically in cold storage and without value to the men who need it and want it and have a right to demand it. No way has been found so effective as to get the man who knows down on the ground beside the men who want to know. If this plan can be begun promptly and carried on intelligently, systematically, and on a wide scale, the great industry of agriculture will be fostered and advanced, many of the perplexing problems of farm and city life will be solved, and the welfare of the entire country will be immensely improved.

And when one is considering conditions that concern the farmer and that prevail in rural communities it is impossible for him to fail to take notice of the poor condition of highways or the ordinary country roads. Conditions on the farms ought to be, and by intelligent action under the measures we are considering will be, materially improved. The next step to be taken by the Federal Government, or a step that ought to be taken in connection with the work of improving agricultural methods, is that of giving encouragement and financial aid in constructing and improving highways.

Some Members of the House, particularly gentlemen from large cities, oppose every bill which has for its object the improvement of country highways, because the measures, in their opinion, are either contrary to the Constitution or contrary to the policy they think the Government ought to pursue in the expenditure of public money. In my judgment the measure does not violate the letter or the spirit of the Constitution, which instrument expressly confers power upon Congress to establish post offices and post roads. A highway over which the Government, by its agents, carries mail is a post road, and as such may properly be established, and having been established may properly be maintained by the Government. The right of the Federal Government to expend money is upheld or defended under the "general-welfare clause" of the Constitution in so many different directions and for so many different purposes that I hesitate to invoke this clause in support of an appropriation for the use of highways over which mail is carried, but I think this clause, if it were necessary to resort to it, gives ample authority to Congress to make such appropriation.

One of the first messages, if not the first message, sent to Congress by President Washington called the attention of that body to the advisability and duty of building national roads; and later in his administration he referred again to the matter and urged establishing of post offices and the building of post roads as "instrumentalities in diffusing knowledge of the laws and proceedings of Government which contributes to the security of the people, serves to guard against effects of misrepresentation and misconception." Other Presidents, as well as other eminent statesmen, some of whom took part in the work of framing the Constitution, have expressed themselves in language which can not be misunderstood. Each of them, recognizing the urgent need and inestimable value of well-improved highways, urged Government aid in their construction and maintenance, under the authority contained in the Constitution. One of the most distinguished statesmen of our country, John C. Calhoun, conspicuous for the force and ability with which he advanced and defended the idea of State rights, took an advanced and consistent position in favor of Government aid in the building and maintaining of highways throughout the country, not only such highways as we now propose to construct as memorials to great men who have passed away, or as masterpieces of engineering skill, to be constructed for the sole purpose of being generally admired, and particularly to be used by automobilists touring the country; he advised and defended the use of money from the Federal Treasury for what we now call common country highways. Even a casual reading of history or a meager knowledge of constitutional interpretation by early statesmen, who may very properly be credited with as much knowledge of the meaning of that document as statesmen of this late day possess, shows that the use of Federal money for public highways is and always has been considered a proper and worthy use of such money.

Both of the great political parties of the country at their national conventions in 1908 declared unequivocally for the improvement and maintenance of country roads by the use of money from the Federal Treasury. The Republican national convention at Chicago declared as follows: "We recognize the social and economic advantages of good country roads, more and more largely at public expense and less and less at the expense of abutting property owners." The declaration of the Democratic convention at Denver is as follows: "We favor Federal aid to State and local authorities in the construction and maintenance of post roads." So it is made clearly to appear by citation of early authority and by declarations of modern political tenets that Government aid is proper and necessary in the construction and maintenance of the highways of the country.

Even if my time were not limited, and even if I had prepared myself with facts and figures to give to the House, I should hesitate to speak at length on this subject, because the need and value of good highways are so well known as to make extended argument in behalf of the policy of constructing and maintaining them altogether unnecessary. Study of the question of good roads or of the condition of the country where good roads have been denied to the people impresses us with the supendous loss the country has sustained on account of the condition of its highways.

A person is apt to look at local conditions only and to estimate the need or the value of an improvement by its effect upon him alone. One who takes this narrow view of the subject of good roads and the loss suffered as a result of failure or refusal of communities to construct and maintain good roads has little, if any, appreciation of the immense loss in the aggregate sustained by the country on account of the failure of proper governmental authorities to establish and maintain proper highways. It is estimated, conservatively I believe, that the loss to this country every year by reason of bad roads equals the national debt. On account of poor country roads it costs a farmer of Michigan more per bushel to deliver his wheat to his usual market than it costs per bushel to deliver wheat from New York to Liverpool. The Secretary of Agriculture places the annual loss to this country on account of poor roads at the sum of $350,000,000, but many believe that Speaker CLARK is nearer right when he says such annual loss is $800,000,000.

The value of each piece of farming land in this country is influenced by its distance from market and the facility with which crops can be transported. The value of every bushel or pound of a farmer's product is large or small, depending upon the distance to market and the character of highways over which the product must be carried. And good country highways are valuable and helpful to a city as well as to the country around it. The value of every piece of city property is higher if the farming land about the city is good than if it is poor. The business of every merchant in a city is influenced by the condition of the roads leading to and from the farms in the territory tributary to the city.

The reasons for building and maintaining good roads are many, and I might, if I had the time, speak of more of them. I simply wish to make my position clear. I believe one of the best ways a Government has of spending its money is in providing good highways and that no expenditure of money brings a better return. I believe there is no respect in which there is greater need of improvement than in the building of country roads.

The Federal Government has abundant resources, has a perfect right to spend its money for roads, and local communities need the help the measures pending in Congress will give if they are enacted into law. There is no reason whatever for withholding the money, so I favor these measures, and shall continue my effort to secure early and favorable consideration of them.

There are questions of great importance, involving the safety and happiness of the country, that many of us are altogether unable to speak about intelligently, but the importance of agriculture and the necessity of systematic and radical change of policy respecting its development are known and appreciated by all. This country will increase in population and wealth, but it will not be able to occupy and hold the position to which it is entitled in the vanguard of nations if it fails to give proper consideration to great interests like agriculture which so largely and intimately concern the welfare of the people.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, was not an order made yesterday that everybody who spoke on this bill would have the right to extend his remarks?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not aware of it.

Mr. GARRETT. If not, I want to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I represent a district located wholly within the limits of the city of Chicago, and while there are some farms and market gardens in the district, I am not at all certain that the farm demonstrators would be able to give them any special advantages. I, in part, represent a State which has a population under the last census of 5,638,000, and a rural population of 2,161,000, so that the total population is in the neighborhood of two and one-half times what the rural population is, and I think if anyone had the right to complain of the provisions in the bill, which proposes to divide the money according to the number of people belonging to the rural population, I would have that right.

This appropriation proposed by this bill, however, is for a particular purpose, and when we consider making an appropriation we have to consider the purpose for which the appropriation is made.

We make an appropriation for the improvement of a river or harbor at some place, or for a public building, and we make it for that purpose. We can not divide the appropriation according to the population of the different States of the Union for these purposes; and here we are making an appropriation for the purposes of aiding farmers in actual demonstration work on the farm.

Mr. LEVER. Let me suggest to the gentleman that we do that work by a certain method.

Mr. MANN. It would not be advisable to divide the money appropriated according to the total population of the State, because that would give to the farmers in my State two or three times the proportion of the money that would be given to the farmers in a strictly agricultural State. In the State of New York it would give a very large sum, more than would be needed for the farm demonstration work, while in the State of Georgia, for instance, the amount appropriated would not perhaps be sufficient, Georgia having a very large rural population and not so large an urban population.

Mr. SMALL. In North Carolina 85 per cent of the population live on farms.

Mr. MANN. So, when we consider the purpose for which we propose to appropriate the money, it is eminently proper that we should divide up the money among the States in proportion to the people who need the benefit of it.

Mr. THAYER. Is not this benefit to be distributed in regard to agriculture and home economics?

Mr. MANN. Yes; that is what the bill says; but, in fact, it is for the purpose of carrying on farm demonstration work, and is not intended to tell to city people how to bake beans or cook pork. If it were, the amount appropriated is not sufficient.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is not this the money of all the people, farmers and residents of the cities alike?

Mr. MANN. Yes; and the money we appropriated for a quarantine station in the city of Philadelphia was the money of all the people, but no portion of it will ever come to my district.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman sees the point as to the right of Congress to appropriate the money of all the people for one class of people.

Mr. MANN. We do that all the time. We appropriate money for a public building at some place. We appropriate money to do away with the cattle plague at some place, or the hog cholera at some place, neither of which will ever be found in my district.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But every man in the country has equal rights with regard to it, and here you say only "the rural" population.

Mr. MANN. It is quite certain that the gentleman from Pennsylvania—the gentleman from Philadelphia, I might properly say—will never lose an opportunity to get for the people of his district their share of the money out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not so long as I am able to get it; that is true.

Mr. MANN. And I have observed that up to date he has gotten for his district and his people a little more than their share.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think not.

Mr. KENT. I should like to suggest that the object of this bill is to increase the production of food, and it is acknowledged that every person in the United States is interested in the increase of food products, which must come from the farm. It is but pettifogging to claim that the money of all the people is to be unfairly expended for a part of the people, when all the people need greater production of grub.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has expired on this amendment.

Mr. LEVER. I ask for a vote.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend, page 4, line 1, by striking out all after the word "which," and line 2, as far as the word "of," and insert in lieu thereof the words, "the school population between the ages of 5 and 20, inclusive, of each State bears to the total of such school population in all the States."

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 4, line 1, by striking out all after the word "which," and line 2, as far as the word "of," and insert in lieu thereof the words "the population of towns of 5,000 inhabitants, or less, bears to the total population of such towns."

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, this amendment is for the purpose of extending the provisions of this bill among the agricultural population, where they will receive a little more benefit than they will under the word "rural." I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THAYER submitted the following as extension of his remarks:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.
OFFICE STATE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE.
Boston, March 9, 1912.

Hon. JOHN ALDEN THAYER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the New England Conference on Rural Progress, March 8, at the offices of the State Board of Agriculture, State House, Boston, the following resolutions were unanimously voted:

"Recognizing the latent possibilities of the New England States for agricultural development, especially along certain high-class, specialized lines, and realizing that this development can be most speedily and effectively brought about through well-organized extension teaching in agriculture, the New England Conference on Rural Progress, representing more than 70 organizations interested in rural life, to-day assembled in convention in the city of Boston, would respectfully urge upon Congress the necessity and advisability of passing legislation granting Federal funds for the development of extension teaching in agriculture. Of the bills now before Congress we believe Senate bill 4563 and House bill 22871 to be the wisest and most practical forms of legislation yet proposed."

The delegates represent the agricultural colleges, the experiment stations, the State granges, and various special agricultural, live-stock, dairying, and other organizations and agencies of New England.

Yours, very respectfully,

JAMES A. MCKIBBEN,
Secretary New England Conference on Rural Progress.

MASSACHUSETTS AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATION,
Amherst, Mass., January 27, 1912.

Hon. JOHN A. THAYER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I take the liberty of addressing you in opposition to one of the provisions of the so-called Lever bill providing for the establishment of agricultural extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges (H. R. 18160). I refer to the section which provides that the Federal appropriation for the support of such departments ($3,000,000 annually) shall be allotted to the several States of the Union upon the basis of their relative rural population.

The bill provides that rural population is to be determined by the next preceding census. In the last census that part only of the total population of the country found in places of less than 2,500 people is classified as rural and I assume that this is likely to continue to be the basis of classification. As you will readily understand, an allotment upon this basis must be grossly inequitable and unfair to many of the older States, and especially so in its application to Massachusetts.

Among the different States, Massachusetts, I believe, ranks seventh in total population and third in wealth. It contains about one-thirtieth of the total population of the country and possesses probably about one-sixteenth of its total wealth. Under our systems of raising Federal revenues, which for the most part are derived from taxes upon consumption, Massachusetts would undoubtedly contribute somewhat more than one-thirtieth of the $3,000,000 appropriated by the bill. I say more than one-thirtieth, because consumption is affected by wealth as well as numbers.

I find that on the basis of determining rural population, to which I have referred, Massachusetts would receive about one two-hundredth part of the $3,000,000. It seems to me likely that her contribution to the total, if this bill passes, will be not less than $120,000 annually, while she would receive only about $15,000. In other words, she would contribute eight times the amount which she would receive under the act.

Such a plan as this I submit can not possibly be justified. More than one-half of the rural population of this State is found in places with population greater than 2,500, and a very considerable proportion of those residing even in our cities are interested, even if in a small way only, in gardening, poultry keeping, etc. Moreover, the Lever bill provides for extension work in home economics. There is no possible doubt that instruction in the subjects classified under this heading is needed equally in the homes of those engaged in our industries as in our farm homes.

In view of these facts, it becomes perfectly apparent that an allotment to this State on the basis of population found in places of less than 2,500 people would be extremely unfair. It seems to me that allotment upon the basis of total population would be far more equitable, although it is quite possible that a yet better plan may be found.

I have no doubt you will give this matter most careful consideration, and I sincerely hope that the bill may be so amended as to provide for an allotment of the appropriation upon a basis more equitable and just to the older and more densely populated States.

With sincere respect.

Most truly, yours,

WM. P. BROOKS,
Director.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania offers the following amendment:

Page 4, line 18, after the word "act," insert the following: "Provided, however, That any and every college assenting to the provisions of this act shall, on the recommendation of Members of Congress, receive for a term of at least three years one scholar for every congressional district of the State in which such college is located, and shall afford to such scholar, free of all tuition charges, a full course of instruction in the science and practice of farming: And provided further, That such scholar shall be given the opportunity to participate in field instruction and demonstrations wherever practicable."

Mr. LEVER. To that, Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to reserve it.

Mr. LEVER. I will reserve it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the address of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN], who is rightfully eloquent on the subject of farming. He has taken an interest in agriculture, which is highly commendable, and I am sure he correctly represents the wishes of his constituency. But, Mr. Speaker, he intimated that I had been very persistent in pressing matters which apparently did not pertain to the bill. I know exactly what I want in regard to the bill, and I think the gentlemen on the other side know what I want. I am more interested in having the American boy educated in practical farming than I am in having provision made for the employment of lecturers to go out from the agricultural colleges. It is a splendid thing to have colleges that have the patriotic desire to improve farming and advance the agricultural interests. It may probably not be so good a thing to divorce the Government's interests in the employment of experts to go abroad and teach the people farming. But I feel that if you propose this afternoon to vote it into the power of colleges, independent of the Department of Agriculture, to send out experts to lecture who will teach farmers practical farming, you should also at least give consideration to the boys, both in the city and on the farm, by adopting the amendment I propose, and accord to them the opportunity to learn farming in a practical way. You are giving an inducement to the colleges, you are giving them an opportunity to employ men who shall go out as teachers and experts under their direction. Now, let them give some quid pro quo; let them give to each congressional district, for that is a fair proposition, one scholarship, to be suggested by the Member of Congress. It would be a fair and just apportionment.

We have a scholarship coming up for the Army and the Navy, and in order that the distribution shall be fair, each Member of Congress, at the end of the allotted time, names one scholar, and it makes no difference whether he comes from the city or the country, from the North or the South, he goes to West Point or Annapolis. We support these two institutions. You are now going to support these colleges of agriculture merely for the employment of experts, and they can come from anywhere—Europe or the United States. I want education to go back to the farm. By refusing to adopt this amendment you are going to refuse him the opportunity to obtain the education of youth at the hands of the institutions you support. I make an appeal for the boy on the farm, who has a right to be educated in farm work, and for the city boy, too. I ask for the adoption of the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order and ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina withdraws his point of order, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 13, noes 26.

So the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That whenever it shall appear to the Secretary of the Treasury, from the annual statement of receipts and expenditures of any of said agricultural extension departments that a portion of the preceding annual appropriation remains unexpended, such amount shall be deducted from the next succeeding annual appropriation for such agricultural extension department, in order that the amount of money appropriated for any agricultural extension department shall not exceed the amount actually and necessarily required for its maintenance and support.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after the word "support," in line 2, on page 5, the following:

"SEC. 6. That commencing with the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1913, there shall be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid as hereinafter provided to the respective States and Territories and to the District of Columbia, for the maintenance of instruction in agriculture and home economics in State district agricultural schools of secondary grade, as herein provided, the sum of $4,000,000 annually; for the maintenance of branch agricultural experiment stations to be located at said agricultural secondary schools, to be administered as parts of the respective State experiment stations now established or which may hereafter be established in the respective States and Territories, in accordance with the act of Congress approved March 2, 1887, the sum of $1,000,000 annually; and that commencing with the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1913, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the maintenance of instruction in agriculture and in home economics in State and Territorial normal schools, the sum of $1,000,000 annually.

"SEC. 7. That the funds appropriated under this act for instruction in State normal schools shall be allotted to the States and Territories and the District of Columbia in proportion to their population as shall be determined by the census of 1910, and that the funds for the district agricultural high schools and branch experiment stations shall be apportioned to the respective States and Territories in proportion to the persons engaged in agricultural pursuits as shall be shown by the census of 1910: Provided, That in each State and Territory with less than 300,000 inhabitants there is hereby appropriated for normal-school instruction the additional sum of $3,000, and that to each State and Territory with less than 100,000 people engaged in agricultural pursuits there is hereby appropriated for district agricultural high schools the additional sum of $5,000 annually, and for branch experiment station work the additional sum of $2,500 annually.

"SEC. 8. That each State and Territory in order to secure the benefits of this act for said agricultural secondary schools and branch experiment stations shall accept its provisions and shall divide the State or Territory into districts, providing in each district for one secondary agricultural school and a branch experiment station, the total number of such districts in a given State or Territory to be not less than 1 for each 15 counties nor more than 1 for each 5 counties and fraction of 5 counties; and shall enact laws providing for the allotment of the funds herein appropriated to the respective schools to which it may choose to allot funds under the provisions of this act, and shall provide for the administration of the use of the respective funds herein appropriated: Provided, That in States where separate schools are maintained for the colored race the allotment of money for the encouragement of instruction in the aforesaid vocations shall be divided in each State in proportion to the population of the two races, respectively, and whether the districts for agricultural secondary schools for the two races are conterminous or not conterminous their total number shall be determined by the number of districts permissible under the provisions of this act: Provided, That in case the legislature of any State or Territory has not been in session to comply with the terms of this act the governor, acting for the State or Territory, may accept the provisions of this act in its relation to State normal schools pending the convening of the legislature.

"SEC. 9. That no State or Territory shall be entitled to its allotment for branch experiment station work until its legislature shall by law have provided for the establishment of said branch experiment stations and shall have provided for the annual maintenance of such stations at least an equivalent sum to that appropriated annually to the State or Territory under this act; and the sum paid to each State and Territory for branch experiment stations shall be applied only to paying the necessary expenses of conducting by such branch experiment stations experiments bearing directly on the agricultural industry of the United States, having due regard for the varying conditions and needs of the respective States and Territories.

"SEC. 10. That the funds appropriated in this act for instruction shall be used only for distinctive studies in agriculture and home economics in agricultural secondary schools in the respective districts provided for in this act, and for distinctive normal courses in agriculture, home economics in State and Territorial normal schools; and that all States, Territories, and the District of Columbia accepting these funds shall provide other funds with which to pay the cost of providing the necessary lands and buildings, and to pay the cost of instruction in such other and general studies as will complete well-rounded courses, the main purposes of which are to give vocational as well as general preparation for agriculture suited to the needs of the respective sections and communities of the United States.

"SEC. 11. That the sums hereby appropriated to the respective States and Territories and the District of Columbia for the maintenance of instruction in agriculture and home economics and for branch agricultural experiment stations shall be annually paid, one-half on the first day of July of each year and one-half on the first day of January of each year, by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the requisition of the Secretary of the Interior, out of the Treasury of the United States, to the treasurer or other officer duly appointed by the governing boards or departments of the schools and experiment stations designated by State law to receive the same: Provided, That in any State there shall be not more than one State board or department thus designated for the agricultural secondary schools and branch experiment stations, not more than one State board or department for the State normal schools.

"SEC. 12. That if any portion of the moneys allotted under this act for secondary schools and branch experiment stations shall by any action or contingency be diminished or lost or misapplied, it shall be replaced by said State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and until so replaced no subsequent appropriation shall be allotted or paid to such State, Territory, or the District of Columbia: Provided, That no portion of said moneys shall be applied directly or indirectly, under any pretense whatever, to the purchase, erection, repair, or rental of any building or buildings, nor to the purchase or rental of lands.

"SEC. 13. That it shall be the duty of each institution receiving funds under this act annually, on or before the 1st day of February, to make to the governor of the State or Territory, or to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in which it is located, a full and detailed report of its operations, including a statement of all receipts and expenditures, a copy of which shall be sent to the Secretary of the Interior, and a copy to the Secretary of Agriculture; and on or before the 1st day of September in each year to make to the Secretary of the Interior, on blanks provided by him for that purpose, a statement of receipts and expenditures of money under this act for secondary schools and experiment stations during the preceding fiscal year.

"SEC. 14. That on or before the 1st day of July in each year after this act becomes operative the Secretary of the Interior, under cooperation with the Secretary of Agriculture, shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury as to each State and Territory and the District of Columbia, whether it has complied with the provisions of this act and is entitled to receive its share of the allotments herein provided for schools and experiment stations under this act, and the amounts which it is entitled to receive. If the Secretary of the Interior shall withhold a certificate from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, for the whole or any part of its allotment, the facts and reasons therefor shall be reported to the President, and the amount involved shall be kept separately in the Treasury as a special fund until the close of the next Congress, in order that the State, Territory, or the District of Columbia may, if it shall so desire, appeal to Congress from the determination of the Secretary of the Interior. If the next Congress shall not direct such sum to be paid, it shall be covered into the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Interior, in cooperation with the Secretary of Agriculture, is hereby charged with the proper administration of this law.

"SEC. 15. That the Secretary of the Interior, in cooperation with the Secretary of Agriculture, shall annually ascertain whether the schools receiving the benefits of this act are using the funds granted to them in accordance with the terms of this act, and make a report thereon to Congress; and he shall also make an annual report to Congress on the receipts and expenditures, and on the work of the schools and experiment stations to which allotments are made under this act, and also whether the appropriation of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia has been withheld, and if so, the reasons therefor.

"SEC. 16. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000 annually, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in paying the necessary expenses of administering this act, concerning said schools and experiment stations, in cooperation with the Secretary of Agriculture, and the respective States, in paying the expenses of cooperating with the respective departments and States in developing the courses of study provided for in this act, and in paying the expenses of preparing the reports provided for in this act.

"SEC. 17. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000 annually, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, acting in cooperation with the Secretary of the Interior and the respective States, in paying the necessary expenses of the administration of this act with reference to instruction and investigations in agriculture and home economics in said schools and experiment stations, as provided for in this act; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to give the schools and branch experiment stations designated in this act such advice and assistance as will best aid them in carrying out the provisions of this act in relation to instruction and research in agriculture and home economics.

"SEC. 22. That this act shall take effect immediately on its passage."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I know the spirit of the House as now constituted, with the membership sitting here, is very much opposed to any amendment of the present bill along any lines. I want the present bill to be adopted and to become a law. The amendment which I have offered does not detract one letter, syllable, or sentence, or take away one dollar of the money sought to be appropriated by the bill. I simply desire to add to and make the bill more efficient.

Briefly, this amendment calls for an additional appropriation for educational instruction to the amount of $6,000,000 annually, or at least it would amount to that after the expiration of 5 or 10 years. We have in this country at least 30,000,000 of our population who are engaged in agricultural pursuits. The school population of the United States between the ages of 5 and 18 is 24,240,000, and the number of pupils and students of all grades in both public and private schools and colleges is as follows: Elementary, 17,960,000; secondary, 1,035,000; higher education, including all colleges and normal schools, 331,000; the total of all who attended school during last year being 19,326,400. Of this number over 5,000,000 of the youth of school age reside upon the farm. In these 5,000,000 of young people I am very much interested, for I want them educated along practical lines. We have the agricultural college at the top; we have the common school at the bottom; and this common school has to do almost exclusively with these 5,000,000 young people who are dwellers upon the farm, and is their only source of education along any line. Nothing along practical vocational lines is taught them. The great desire of the author of this bill is to disseminate the vast accumulation of industrial education, which is now centered in the college professors and technicians, to the masses below, and in order to do that the plan is to send among the farmers, and it will be the older men who will receive it, an army of between three and four thousand experts, to teach them some better methods of agriculture. The object of my amendment is to produce a considerable number of agricultural high schools in the rural communities, and engage these experts and graduates from the agricultural colleges to teach these agricultural high schools, and thus disseminate this scientific knowledge to at least 5,000,000 boys and girls who dwell upon the farm.

I am as anxious as the gentleman from South Carolina to disseminate this knowledge, but, in my judgment, while this bill goes a considerable step in that direction, it will accomplish but a small fractional part of the actual benefits that would be derived from these secondary schools in educating the mass of farmers, and especially the young and rising generation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Minnesota be extended for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, the bill of the gentleman from South Carolina seeks to appropriate $3,000,000. How much, in imagination even, can the three or four thousand men accomplish, supposing that one of them goes into an agricultural county? And we have three or four thousand agricultural counties. How many of the older farmers can he teach even the rudiments of the science of agriculture? This amendment of mine appropriates, or would appropriate, $6,000,000 ultimately, after 5 or 10 years.

But, in the same length of time that this army of 3,000 would educate a few of the older farmers in a particular branch of agriculture, the money I propose to appropriate would educate 5,000,000 of the youth of the country to such an extent this army of experts would be obsolete, because unnecessary, for much greater and more satisfactory education would be given to virtually all.

Mr. Speaker, sending a man into one of our large agricultural counties to teach the old men new tricks is like the traveling professor of penmanship going around and teaching, as he did in olden times, or the traveling music professor going around and teaching. We have gone beyond that day in industrial education. We have arrived at the time now when we want to begin to educate the youth from the foundation while they are easy to teach and impressionable.

Yesterday I made a speech on this floor praising the bill of the gentleman from South Carolina, and I shall reaffirm all that I said. Yet I then said, and I now repeat, that the bill is not far-reaching enough. It does not solve the problem. It does not reach the 93 per cent of the laborers in agricultural pursuits who are toiling in an unscientific manner, who, if properly trained, would produce double the quantity and of superior quality than they do now.

This matter should be gone at scientifically. This amendment of mine will probably not be adopted at this time owing to a combination of circumstances, but soon this amendment or similar legislation will be enacted. I am informed that in the other branch of this Congress an amendment along this line, but more extensive in scope, is waiting and ready to embrace the pending bill and so broaden and extend its beneficial qualities that upon its return to this Chamber it will be joyfully received by all who desire the uplift of the youth of this land.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, I have indulged the hope that this House, representing as it does the more nearly direct representatives of the people, would initiate some substantial measure to advance the education of the youth of our country. They are the grand army, Mr. Speaker, that we must rely upon for wealth and prosperity. They are the army, the thinking and toiling army, that stay upon the farm and always respond to every patriotic call to duty. A yeomanry that is our country's pride and the army that produces our greatest material wealth. We have invested almost $100,000,000 in teaching higher branches to a few captains in industrial education, but we have now another army of actual toilers to train. Shall we begin now? Fifty years ago, when the original Morrill Act was passed, what a picture it would have been to gaze at our present condition.

It would have been a dazzling picture; but, Mr. Speaker, that picture only dazzles at the top; it does not dazzle at the bottom, where the humble toiler abides. This bill is right in one way and absolutely wrong in another. The foundation is wrong in that it is too small. The proper foundation to build upon is the youth of our country. Teach him and the superstructure will be grand. He will remain in the pure air of the country and make the home of his childhood a dwelling place unsurpassed. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, we need to build up a class of people educated in distinctive, industrial, and agricultural schools, highly organized, so as to give instruction and to inculcate pride in industrial affairs and in the American home. At present the teachers of our elementary and secondary schools are trained in schools devoted mainly to nonindustrial interests, hence they can not teach the younger generation how to build up an industrial community successfully, and with full knowledge and inspiration for their life work. It will not be long after inaugurating the system of agricultural secondary schools as proposed in this amendment until the graduates therefrom will be sufficient in number and suitably trained to teach the science of agriculture in all the schools of our land. Then, Mr. Speaker, will we have a dominating force in the education of our country youth that will make life on the farm so prosperous and happy that few will care to remove therefrom.

When country life becomes more attractive through a proper conception of the dignity of the science of agriculture, the boys and girls will not leave the farms for the overcrowded cities.

Mr. Speaker, in this country of ours we are blessed with great natural facilities, and the energy of our people is unsurpassed, yet the sad fact is apparent that in many ways industrially, and especially so agriculturally, many of the European countries far surpass us. This has been done chiefly through their superior industrial training. We should be foremost, and this can only be accomplished by a thorough scientific training of our millions of toilers, both upon the farm and in the workshop.

At present the scepter of industrial supremacy is gone from us, but it will return. The remedy is within our grasp. Industry is the ticket that will admit us to the world's great feast, and if that industry is scientifically and earnestly directed the seat of honor at this board and the choicest viands surely will be ours.

Universal technical education of the workers will bring the greatest possible results industrially and commercially. Yes, even more than that, it will be the upbuilding of American manhood and womanhood, and produce a higher civilization socially, morally, and intellectually. [Applause.]

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the sums hereby appropriated for extension work shall be annually paid in equal quarterly payments on the 1st of January, April, July, and October of each year by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Agriculture, out of the Treasury of the United States, to the treasurer or other officer duly appointed by the governing boards of said colleges to receive the same; and such officer shall be required to report to the Secretary of Agriculture, on or before the 1st day of September of each year, a detailed statement of the amount so received during the previous fiscal year, and of its disbursement, on forms prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 4, strike out the word "quarterly" and insert in lieu thereof the word "semiannually."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 5, strike out the word "April" and insert the word "and," and strike out the words "and October," in lines 5 and 6.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making this request, that by unanimous consent I may extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the speech of Gov. Marshall, made in accepting the Democratic nomination for Vice President, delivered in the city of Indianapolis on August 20.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MANN, Mr. LINTHICUM, Mr. ASHBROOK, Mr. FARR, and Mr. TOWNER were granted leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have printed in the RECORD an article written by a man in my district by the name of John B. Donaldson on the currency question. He is a man who has given thought to the matter and I desire to have it extended in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The article is as follows:

A CENTRAL BANKING SYSTEM.

The following is an extract which appeared in the Minneapolis Tribune recently:

EDITOR OF THE TRIBUNE:

I beg space in your great daily to briefly set forth the salient points in an honest, simple, safe, and sane system for Government banking.

First stop free coinage and buy the gold and silver bullion needed for money, paying for gold bullion in gold certificates and for silver bullion in silver certificates, such gold and silver certificates to be a legal tender for any sum, except as hereinafter provided, and coin the gold and silver bullion so purchased into gold and silver money according to the provisions of the coinage act of 1837. And so fast as the charters of national banks expire or otherwise fall issue United States Treasury notes and fill their places with Government banks. And in emergencies, as the public safety may require it, the United States Treasury may issue its notes to pay the current expenses of the United States Government and for other purposes, the Government regulating the value of its money by controlling the amount in circulation, which shall not be less than $40 or more than $50 per capita. All money created under this system shall be a legal tender for any sum for all debts, public and private, contracted subsequently to the passage of this act, except duties on imports and exports, which shall be paid in gold coin. And to satiate the sordid souls of goldbugs, silver coins, silver certificates, gold certificates, and Treasury notes shall be redeemable in gold coin at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. The above five kinds of money are honest, and prime money needs no redeemer. Maintain their parity, not through the collusion of the money changers in their stack of 150 tons of gold in the United States Treasury, but through equal and uniform power of legal tender.

JOHN B. DONALDSON.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LEVER. I hope the gentleman can get along with five minutes. The Post Office conference report may come in and keep us here until 12 o'clock.

Mr. CANNON. And the deficiency bill as well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, the bill before the House is a most admirable bill, because it seeks to relieve that class of labor in this country which has so sadly been neglected in the past.

The achievements of the world are the achievements of labor. The history of the world is a history of labor. It is the great fountain of supply for man in every station in life and in every undertaking of his genius. It is the source of all creative wealth and the firm basis upon which the civilization of the world stands. It is the ladder upon which all nations have climbed from the low depths of society to the intellectual heights of light and liberty. It is to all organized government what electricity is to life. It is just as familiar with the sweat of the low-browed hoe under tropical skies and the noisy ax in primeval forests as it is with the quiet lever which regulates the speed of flying trains across continents or guides the airship in its trackless course through the clouds. Notwithstanding its marvelous achievements and its inestimable value to civilization, yet in every age and in every clime it has been the poorest paid and the least respected.

We are informed by the Bible that man was made in the image of God, given dominion over the earth, the fish of the sea, the fowl of the air, and all things that live upon the earth; that he was commanded to multiply and replenish the earth and to subdue it; that he was placed in a beautiful garden in the east of Eden, wherein grew every tree that was pleasant to sight and good for food, with the express privilege to eat freely of all of its fruits except the fruit of knowledge of good and evil, which fruit he was forbidden to eat and informed that in the day "thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die"; that through the influence of the evil spirit he transgressed this holy command and was driven out of Paradise into the world to contend with the thorns and thistles of time, with this sentence imposed upon him: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground."

What a heavenly spot of beauty and plenty was committed to the care and keeping of this god-like man, and yet we are told that he lost dominion over this earthly heaven through disobedience, and that as a punishment therefor he was reduced to a condition of servitude to himself to supply his own wants. Whatever might have been man's wants prior to his transgression, and however bountifully they may have been supplied without effort on his part, yet we find him soon after his disobedience, and before sentence was passed upon him by his Divine Master, busily engaged with his wife, manufacturing their own clothing by sewing fig leaves together for aprons. Here we find no masters armed with whips to drive, no slaves to punish and torture. All were on the same level, busily engaged in the same pursuit for the accomplishment of the same common purpose.

Mr. Chairman, when we examine ourselves we find at the very threshold of life nature has entailed upon us certain temporal wants upon which life itself depends, such as air, light, and water. These may be termed primary temporal wants, all of which nature has supplied in such abundance that it takes but little effort on our part to supply ourselves with them. But, on further examination, we find that by nature we are possessed with other temporal wants, which must be supplied in order to perpetuate life, such as food, raiment, and shelter. These may be termed secondary temporal wants. Yet there is still another set of wants no less intimately interwoven with our complex nature, such as our demand for intellectual and moral culture. These may be denominated our spiritual wants. The proper supply of these human wants requires manual labor, but the adequate supply of food, raiment, and shelter to mankind constitutes by far our greatest demand for manual labor. Thus we are confronted with the solemn fact that nature has entailed upon us a servitude to ourselves from which we can not escape, however much we may desire—a servitude upon which life itself depends.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that that divine injunction, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread," was intended by our Creator to be universal in its application, and broad enough to include every man, and that he who seeks to escape his just share of this burden not only violates the law of nature upon which life depends, but that he violates the divine law of God. The adage that "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy" reveals the philosophy underlying labor and exposes the crime which is committed when we heap our share of these burdens upon the shoulders of others. The magnitude of this sin is not reached in making "dull boys," but it extends much further in its more intensified forms and reveals itself in the "stooped shoulders," "low brows," and "long jaws" of ancient times. Its hideous form is more completely revealed in denying the rights of citizenship to labor, in excluding it from the holy altar of matrimony, in locking the doors of learning against it, and in depriving it of the right to kneel and worship at the shrine of God. Who has been guilty of this crime? I desire to call upon history to submit the evidence for your candid consideration.

SLAVES.

In the early dawn of civilization, when its first glimmering streaks of light penetrated the mist of time and shed their radiant luster upon organized society, labor was found in the firm clutches of foul and bloody slavery, without marriage, without property, and without legal and political rights. For more than 5,000 years it toiled in chains by day under the lash of cruel masters and was guarded by night in miserable quarters by armed sentinels. What it suffered during these long centuries of struggle and toil can only be approximated, as the records of its strife and struggles for higher levels are meager and somewhat confused. But we pause here for a moment while history recounts a few of the crimes against labor.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is conceded by all historians that all of the ancient forms of government, whether imperial or democratic, practiced slavery and advocated the doctrine that its origin was divine. In every age and in every country the classes have usurped to themselves the right to rule and have ever sought to control labor and use it for the purpose of collecting fortunes to gratify their own avarice and to magnify their own egoism. While it must be conceded that among the Semitic tribes and especially among the pastoral Hebrews labor was better respected and maintained upon a higher level in ancient times than elsewhere, yet these people are not without an unsavory record in their treatment of the lowly and helpless sons of toil. It is recorded of them in the Bible that they practiced slavery and engaged in its traffic for profit. They reduced their own kin sometimes to limited and sometimes to perpetual bondage. Their law governing slavery is found in the twenty-first chapter of Exodus, which provides among other things that "If thou buy an Hebrew, six years he shall serve, and in the seventh he shall go out for nothing." He was not permitted to take his wife and children with him, for by the same law they belonged to his master at the end of his servitude. But if his love for his wife and children was greater than his love for his own liberty and he refused to be separated from them, then his master took him before the judges and in their presence and, according to the provisions of the law, he led him to the door post, and in the language of the law. "His master shall bore his ear through with an awl; and he shall serve him forever." While these people practiced slavery, yet when we compare their treatment of labor with its treatment by the Aryan tribes, such as the Greeks and Romans, it will be seen that they were much more liberal and humane. Their religion was the religion of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, based upon the Bible doctrine that man was created in the image of God, and that God is the father of all, bond and free alike. Their religion was superior to all others and may well account for their leniency toward labor.

It seems to be well settled in history that slavery had its origin in the law of the survival of the fittest. The law of primogeniture made room for its expansion, and the pagan religion, the cradle in which it was rocked, made it possible to perpetuate it and hold it in subjection. According to the ancient law of primogeniture, the oldest son by the legitimate wife was trained as a prince to become a lord at the death of his father. His pagan religion required him to bury his father under the hearthstone, to keep a light burning at the sacred spot forever, and to worship and glorify his spirit throughout life, and that as a recompense therefor he at once became the owner of all of his father's estate, both real and personal, and all of his brothers and sisters became his slaves. He was clothed with unlimited authority over them. He was entitled to all of their earnings. He could punish them, torture them, sell them, and even kill them at will without being amenable to any authority or required to make answer to any jurisdiction. His will was supreme. This seems to have been the practice in most all of the ancient governments. They practiced polygamy, often being the father of 50 children. They taught the slaves that it was blasphemy to run away or to question the right of the property of the father to pass to the oldest son to the exclusion of all of his brothers and sisters; that he was earthborn and had no right to claim any of the privileges of a man; that he had no soul, and was on a level with the beasts of burden and could not change his condition, and that he should be contented with his lot and serve his master. They assumed that they were heaven-born and that after death their spirits would become gods. They practiced the pagan religion, lived a life of sin and debauchery, and ruled their slaves with an iron hand. By the lash of cruel masters slaves were driven, half naked and half fed, to their working places in shops, fields, and mines, and were compelled to toil for long consecutive hours, often ranging from 18 to 40, without rest or sleep.

These ancient lords often organized themselves for protection against the uprising of their slaves and against their enemies, as in case of the Amphictyonic Council of Ancient Greece, which was organized 2,000 years B. C. among the Grecian States and the Islands of the Grecian Archipelago for mutual protection. It remained intact for more than fourteen centuries, during which time it afforded an unlimited opportunity for the practice of paganism and the extension of slavery, but about 600 B. C. dissension arose among them, which resulted in the wars of extermination. They held their meetings twice a year in the temples of Apollo and Demeter and drew up articles of agreement for their own mutual protection.

According to some historians the history of Egypt dates back more than 5,000 years B. C., and it is quite evident that slavery was practiced here long before history began, for when she was visited by the ancient Greeks slavery was in abundance. The Pyramids were undoubtedly built by slave labor, and when we consider that in 4700 B. C. it required the work of 100,000 men 30 years to construct one of these earthly wonders, Cheops of Gezeh, it gives us some idea of the extent of slavery in those early times. Slaves sold in Egypt for only a few dollars. An account is given of the sale of a beautiful Egyptian girl for $15.

The legendary history of Hindustan dates back far beyond what historians are willing to accept, but it is quite certain that she was settled many centuries ago and that slavery flourished there at a very early period. During the reign of Manu, which was about 1,000 years B. C., slaves were plentiful, often selling for less than the price of a sheep, and could be acquired in seven different ways: 1, captives in war; 2, those serving for their daily food; 3, those born in the family; 4, by purchase; 5, by gift; 6, by inheritance; 7, those enslaved as punishment. Their penal code was based upon the principle that the member of the body by which the offense was committed should be destroyed. For insult to his lord the slave's tongue was cut out; for contemptuous language to the upper class, a red-hot iron, 10 fingers long, was thrust in his mouth; for assuming to teach a Brahman his duty, hot oil was poured into his mouth and ears; for insult, both of his lips were cut off; for larceny, his hands were cut off; for adultery, he was burned to death on a red-hot iron bed. He was called "Sudra," and could never escape labor even after he was manumitted or set free. His life was valued at the price of a cat, a blue jay, a dog, and a cow.

The Babylonian Empire was one of the oldest countries in the world, and many of its inhabitants were Hebrews, but it early fell under the rule of Aryans. Slavery is found to exist as far back as its history can be traced. It is said to have numbered four slaves to one freeman at times. They were so plentiful that a slave often sold for less than the price of a sheep. If he should be killed, only one-half of his selling price was required to be paid to his master. In the reign of Nebuchadnezzar II a girl slave sold for 2 shillings, while a sheep often sold for 18 shillings. It was said that as a sheep was worth more than a slave it should receive more attention than the slave. Thus it will be seen that a slave was placed upon a lower plane than the animal. To harbor a slave or induce him to escape was punished by death. For a slave to deny his master's ownership his ears were cut off. There is no doubt but the mighty structures of Babylon, such as the wall of Babylon, which was 80 feet thick at the base, 350 feet high, and 56 miles long, and the Hanging Gardens of Babylon, which rested upon 20 walls 11 feet apart, each of which was 22 feet thick, were constructed by slave labor.

Ancient Greece was composed of many States, each of which played an important part in the sum total of Grecian democracy; but Athens, Sparta, Corinth, and Attica were the most conspicuous, perhaps, of all. While these political divisions were constantly engaged in warfare, yet they all practiced slavery. Paganism was the religion of all and they worshiped many gods. While, indeed, they built up a civilization in letters, philosophy, art, architecture, and sculpture which has been the marvel of all succeeding generations, yet it was a civilization of the few. Prior to the time of Solon, Athens was governed by a few powerful families, and, as Aristotle says, the poorer classes were "in absolute slavery to the rich." The extent of the slave practice in Greece can be better illustrated by comparing the number of slaves with the freemen. In 309 B. C. Athens boasted of her democracy and her literature, yet out of a total population of 515,000 only 9,000 had a voice in her government. It is said that more than 400,000 were slaves. In wealthy Corinth, the home of freedom and culture, out of a population of nearly 700,000 it is said that only 40,000 were free; the entire remainder of nearly 650,000 were slaves. In Attica, with an equal boast of culture and liberty to her people, we find a population of 550,000, more than 400,000 of whom were slaves. In Sparta the slaves outnumbered the rich nearly four to one. Thus it will be seen that the liberty of Greece was liberty for the rich few and slavery for the many. "O liberty, what crimes have been committed in thy name!"

The same conditions prevailed in Rome, Persia, and Macedonia. In Rome, during the first century of the Christian era, out of a population of about 90,000,000 people, more than 60,000,000 were slaves. During all of the life of the Roman Republic slavery was rife and sanctioned by her laws. In fact, at the beginning of the Christian era the whole world was "slave sick" and its civilization was ready to crumble. Lycurgus of Sparta, Aristotle, Plato, and Pericles of Athens, and Cato, Cicero, and Cæsar of Rome were all firm believers in the institution of slavery and used all of their genius and powerful influence with their respective governments to perpetuate it, while Numa Pompilius of Rome and Solon of Athens were less impressed with it and succeeded in giving to those countries during their times a code of lenient laws which relieved the poor largely, yet these laws were intended mostly for relief to that class of freemen who had but little property and who were in danger of becoming slaves to their creditors on failing to pay their debts, which was a most common way of reducing freemen to slavery in all of the civilized countries.

CONQUEST FOR PLUNDER.

All of the ancient countries delighted in conquest. They picked quarrels with each other on trivial matters in order to justify invasion for plunder. They raised large armies at great expense to the state, invaded the territory of their rich neighbors, pillaged their country, sacked their cities, and carried away their inhabitants as captives and sold them into slavery by the thousands, regardless of age, sex, or previous station in life. It was common to see the learned and the aristocratic, and even children of kings, in slave quarters. It is said that Andromache, the wife of Hector, and Plato, one of Greece's greatest philosophers, were once slaves, and it is claimed that Achilles once sold to a king the son of a king. During these conquests slave merchants followed the armies and the sale of men became so common that it constituted one of the greatest sources of revenue. They often became so numerous that they were ordered killed to prevent uprisings and the overthrow of organized government. Indeed, it was once the common boast that slavery was the wealth of nations, and it is equally true that its sinful practice finally became the downfall of nations.

LABOR UPRISINGS.

The enslavement of the free and men of high rank undoubtedly had a wonderful effect upon this question. Their longings and efforts to regain their lost liberties inspired those who had never tasted liberty to make like efforts to gain their liberties, yet other causes operated as an incentive. While they were taught that they had no soul and were not permitted to attend any of the religious rites and ceremonies of the classes, not being permitted to worship any god in many instances, yet they had a legendary god, in Greece at least; his name was Cronus, and was supposed by the legend to be a god who was once in good standing, but for some unknown cause he had lost his divine rights, but that by effort he would some day regain his liberty. They strove to emulate this fallen god and lived in hope that they, too, might some day regain their liberties. This was the shrine at which they ever worshiped. Again, the extreme burdens to which they were subjected, the low estimate placed upon their lives, and the inhuman punishment inflicted upon them by cruel masters, such as being chained in distant mines for months and for years at a time without being brought to light, made them reckless and determined all the more to fight for their liberties.

Mr. Speaker, let us now inquire of history what labor has done to relieve itself of the burdens of slavery. It is not reasonable for us to expect that men would meekly submit to extreme and unreasonable servitude for seven days in the week the year round, chained to their places of toil in fields, mines, and shops; lashed and tortured worse than beasts of burden; sold to foreign slave drivers and carried away from friends and kindred; branded with red-hot irons in the forehead; their ears, nose, hands, and lips cut off; their eyes burned out, and suffer death in all the most painful and excruciating forms that the wicked minds of cruel masters and bloody rulers could devise without making some effort to relieve themselves from the clutches of such human vultures. Neither is it to be expected that such tyrants would willingly consent to release their bloody hands from the throat of slave labor as long as such labor constituted the burden of their wealth and the main source of their income. It has always been the rule of greed to gobble up all that is in sight and to surrender nothing until it is compelled to by law or might.

We may expect to find such labor in constant conflict with its masters, with its secret organizations for mutual protection and the overthrow of slave masters and slave government, often bursting forth like mighty volcanoes and sweeping everything before it—strong in victory, but always strongest when best organized. On the other hand we may expect to find it weak in defeat and suffering the severest punishment as a warning against resistance, its strongest and boldest leaders executed in the most cruel and inhuman manner and the greatest restraints thrown around it to hold it in perpetual subjection, but like the slumbering volcano we may expect to find it gathering its lost prestige and strength by greater caution in its organizations and more secret in its meetings, ever active and exerting itself in devising and executing plans for the overthrow of the power which held it in the torment of an earthly hell. In considering this question we can only refer to a few incidents which have occurred in the various parts of the world.

Off the coast of Greece lies a beautiful and rich island by the name of Scio or Chio, belonging to the Grecian Archipelago. It is one of the oldest States in point of settlement and one of the most powerful in the ancient group of island governments. At one time it had a very dense population, and, like all other countries, it practiced slavery for all that it was worth and inflicted upon its labor the usual indignities and punishment of the times. I desire to call your attention to one historical incident which will in itself shed much light upon the condition of labor and its effort to seek higher levels. Sometime, perhaps about 300 or 400 B. C.—the time is not definitely fixed by any of our authors—there lived in this island a young man, Drimakos, strong in muscle and brilliant in intellect, yet he was a slave and was owned and worked like other slaves. He was a natural born leader of men, and early determined to make his escape from bondage, so he associated with him a few of his most intimate and trusty slave friends, who organized themselves into a little army and bravely fought their way out from under their masters, tore off their chains, and made their escape to the mountains. They were followed by their masters with the army of the State for the purpose of bringing them back, dead or alive, but Drimakos, with his little army of brave slaves, managed to defeat them and set up a kingdom among the peaks and the clouds, where he ruled for many years as king of the slaves. His fame went out, and his army increased rapidly, and soon the crags and peaks, the home of eagles, were transformed into homes and breastworks for men fighting for liberty. While the number of battles which were fought between them and the Scian army is not recorded, yet it is certain that there were several, and that the genius of the slave king and the bravery of his followers outwitted the king's army and defeated them in every contest. Excitement ran high and slaves escaped from their masters from every quarter and cast their lot with the slave king in the mountains. Drimakos soon found himself master of the situation, and forced the men who had lately been his masters and lords to kneel at the foot of his mountain throne and beg for peace, the terms of which he dictated. I reproduce them here to show how completely he was master of the situation.

> An oracle has been consulted and our revolt has, from the start, been upheld by the gods. We will never again submit to the drudgery of bondage. We are fixed in our minds and act under counsel of the Almighty. Nevertheless, if you follow my advice and adhere to it in the strictest faith, after signing this pledge and contract, the war may be terminated and the further effusion of blood dispensed with; then we can mutually live in peace and enjoy tranquillity on terms which will be full of prosperity to the whole state of which we all are members.

Drimakos now explained what he demanded and the terms which must be agreed to in order that peace might be assured; here it is in full:

> What we want is enough to subsist upon—no more. In future, when hunger need inspire us, we shall visit your granaries, flocks, and stores and take what we require, but always by weight and measure. The weights and measures are to be these which we have brought you and exhibit before your eyes. Here also is a signet with which we propose to seal up your storehouses and granaries after taking from them what we require, as by this means you will be able to distinguish our work from common robbers. Regarding the slaves who in future shall escape from you to our camp, I shall rigidly investigate the causes of each man's running away, weigh his story carefully, and after submitting his case to an unbiased examination, if he be found to have suffered injustice at your hand, proving that he has been treated wrongfully by you, I shall protect him. If, on the contrary, the runaway slave be found not to have had a sufficient cause, I shall return him to his master.

This instrument clearly shows that the whole government of Scio was at the mercy of this new and miraculous king. When his strength failed him in old age and his time was near at an end, a reward in gold of considerable size was offered to anyone who would bring his head to the King and liberty to him who should bear the head. He induced one of his intimate friends, a strong and brilliant young man, to behead him, carry his head to the King, receive the reward in gold and his liberty. Thus ended the life of one of labor's bravest and most daring leaders. The Greeks erected a monument, called by them Heroon, to his memory, the ruins of which may yet be seen.

Our next great slave hero in the cause of labor is Viriathus, a shepherd laborer in the mountains of Spain. The powerful conquering armies of Rome had overrun many countries, plundered their cities and destroyed them, carried away their gold, and killed or sold their inhabitants into slavery. Hannibal had overrun Egypt, captured Carthage, and butchered her inhabitants in part and sold the remainder into slavery. Nearly all of that part of Europe south of Spain had been subjugated by her destructive armies. Epirus, a fruitful and industrious people east of Italy, had been subjugated, seven of her cities had been sacked and burned, 150,000 industrious farmers and laborers had been butchered or sold into bondage, of which Gracchus, a Roman tribune and friend of the lowly, complained, and as a punishment therefor he was foully murdered, and now this dreadful devastating and bloody army threatened to destroy Spain. The Roman army under Galba was already in Spain, and, after securing the confidence of the people, he treacherously fell upon them, unarmed and unawares, butchered them in great numbers, robbed them of their wealth, and carried many of her inhabitants away and sold them. The people of Spain were demoralized and without organization, but restless and revengeful. Our shepherd hero of the mountains in 149 B. C. tendered his services in the cause of the people and soon became the commanding general of her entire army. He was large of stature, strong in muscle and mind, and a leader of men. He met the Roman forces and routed them three times and became master of the situation. He was elected king and tendered in marriage a lady of high rank and great wealth. He accepted the woman as his wife, but refused her wealth. His habits were plain and unassuming, always temperate, refusing everything except a bare support. His heart was enlisted in the cause of labor with an ambition to redeem his people from slavery and from the blighting hand of bloody Rome. His last battle was fought at Erisane, where he defeated the Roman forces and through leniency dictated mild terms in which he was to be King of Spain and the ally of Rome. But this is where he made a mistake, for Rome sent a new army under a new general who succeeded in bribing the friends of Viriathus and had him murdered while asleep. The fall of Viriathus resulted in the wholesale enslavement of the working people.

Mr. Speaker, I now desire to consider the social conditions of Sicily. It had been conquered by Rome in 210 B. C., and as it was one of the richest countries for farming, it also became one of the greatest fields for the practice of slavery. The immense wealth of the island had drifted into the hands of a few property owners, who owned large numbers of slaves, who were worked without sleeping, and tortured and murdered without restraint to such extent that it resulted in one of the greatest labor uprisings known to history. One of the most productive plateaus in the island, and one of the most beautiful, was that of Enna, on which lived a millionaire lord by the name of Damophilus, owning slaves by the legion, who were compelled to work naked on his farms. On a cold day many of his naked shivering slaves meekly begged him for some rags to protect their naked bodies from the cold. He brutally tied them to stakes and whipped them to warm them. He often tortured them and killed them. His wife was no less cruel to her female slaves, but his daughter was kind to them. Among the slaves was a young man by the name of Unus, originally from Antioch, but who had been sold to a planter on the plains of Enna. He had learned to blow fire out of his mouth, and claimed to be ordained to lead the slaves out of bondage. The cruelties of Damophilus aroused the slaves to action, and 400 of them met one dark night and took a solemn oath to fight to the bitter end. They marched up to the plantation of Damophilus, captured him and his family, and put him and his cruel wife to death, but they sent his daughter home under guard because of her kindness to the slaves. A great uprising of the slaves followed, and Unus soon found himself at the head of a large army, who proclaimed him king of the slaves. He met the army of Rome in many battles and defeated them in every engagement, overran the island, and made himself the ruler of Sicily for 10 years, from 143 to 133 B. C., but he was finally defeated in 133 B. C. by the Roman general, Rupilius. He often had 200,000 slave soldiers at his command. Thus ended one of the greatest servile wars of the world, followed by the slaughter of slaves in great numbers.

The uprisings of labor were not confined to narrow limits. The defeat of this great labor leader did not check them, for their restlessness spread like a great contagion. Let us now turn our attention to Asia Minor, another hotbed of slavery. From 138 to 133 B. C., Attalus III was King of ancient Pergamus, of Asia Minor. At his death, in 133 B. C., by testament he transferred his kingdom to the Romans without contest. Tiberius Gracchus, the tribune of Rome, made a bold effort to restore the Licinian laws, which made it a crime for anyone to own more than 500 acres of land. The unscrupulous aristocrats combined and had him and 300 laborers foully murdered. The labor of Asia Minor was strongly organized into unions, and when they heard of the news that Pergamus had been deeded to Rome they raised an army, made common cause with Aristonicus, whose ancestors were half royal and half plebeian, but now a cast-off from his rights to the throne of Pergamus.

Blossius, a follower of Gracchus in his plea for the lowly, escaped the mob in Rome which murdered Gracchus and many others, now made his way to Asia Minor and joined Aristonicus in freedom's cause. From 133 to 129 B. C. the war raged with marked success for the arms of the lowly, having defeated the Romans in many engagements and having destroyed one large, well-equipped army; but after three long years of struggle through blood and death, they were finally routed, defeated, surrounded, and starved into capitulation. Aristonicus was taken to Rome and strangled to death in prison. His followers were slaughtered and crucified by the thousands. Blossius, disheartened, committed suicide. Thus ended another struggle of the lowly for liberty.

It will be remembered that the laws of Rome provided, among other things, that a freeman who could not pay his debt at once became the slave of his debtor until the debt was paid. By this means many freemen of moderate means became slaves. This was the case in all the Roman Provinces, which now covered a mighty territory. This was the case in Sicily. But the resistance which Rome was now receiving from every quarter became so great and so costly in the loss of her soldiers that she was forced to draw heavily upon her Provinces for men in order to properly equip her vast armies. However, the loss of freemen had been so great by failure to pay debts in Sicily that she was put to straits to furnish her quota. It will be remembered that none but freemen were allowed to train in the manly arts of war, and no slaves were permitted to enter the army to fight against lords and gentlemen. But in this case a trick was resorted to, and that is this: These once freemen, but now slaves because of a failure to pay debts, bribed Nerva, the proprætor of Rome, to recruit the Roman army by setting them free, so that they might join the army. He accepted the bribe and issued a proclamation of freedom to all who thought themselves entitled to freedom if they would come and claim it. Many flocked to the appointed place, and on the day when they expected to be set free he issued another proclamation, directing them to go home. This was the basis of an army against him. They collected after night in great numbers, but through treachery of some of their own men the first battle was lost to them in 104 B. C. They then called a meeting and elected as their leader Slavis, a flute player who claimed the power to foretell events. An army of 20,000 to 30,000 slaves soon organized under him for another desperate struggle to overthrow the power of Rome over Sicily.

The real slaves organized in other quarters of the island under a slave genius of daring military gifts, by the name of Athenion, who was a stargazer and a prophet. They elected him their king and leader. He accepted only good strong men as recruits, fit for military duty; but others unfit for duty were directed to return to their masters and prepare for a famine. By military discipline and skill he soon found himself at the head of more than 10,000 well-equipped men; he met the army of Rome in many engagements and won six battles, making himself master of Sicily; but after three years of hard fighting, stung by defeat, Rome mustered a large force of her best soldiers under Aquillius and sent him to conquer the slave king. They met near Macella and the leaders of both armies, eager for each other's blood, rushed together at first opportunity in deadly combat and fought a hand-to-hand duel to death. The slave king fell, never to rise again. His army, now without a leader, was routed and the greater portion of the 20,000 slave soldiers were brutally put to death. The slaves still mustered another army and kept up the war until 99 B. C., when they capitulated under Satyros, a bold slave leader, on terms that they should be treated as prisoners of war without punishment, but when Aquillius reached Rome, triumphant with his slave prisoners, he turned them over to the rich showman as a basis of a great triumph in his honor as the great hero who suppressed the rebellion. They were required to fight duels with wild beasts in the arena at the great auditorium; but, by prior agreement between themselves, when they were driven in the arena for slaughter by famishing wild beasts, they willingly fell upon each other and killed themselves before the great throng of excited and much astonished multitude. Satyros, being the last, stood in full view of that vast crowd, drew himself up to his full manhood, and plunged a dagger through his own heart. Thus another mighty burning and overflowing volcano of human effort for human rights was cooled down by the blood of the lowly.

Mr. Speaker, let us now recount some of the bloody deeds against labor. During the 27 years of the Peloponnesian War between Sparta and Athens, Sparta had lost so heavily that defeat stared her in the face, and in order to save herself she promised many of her slaves that if they would enter the war and help to defeat Athens they should have their liberty after the war was over. Many slaves accepted the proposition and fought bravely in the front ranks, yet lightly armed, and won the day. After peace was concluded, and while more than 2,000 of these brave labor soldiers were in the temple to take the oath of liberty, they were foully murdered by the order of the Ephori or Spartan council. This occurred 413 B. C. In 200 B. C. Laevinus, a big slave owner of Rome, had 24 slaves put to death to embalm the ghost of his dead father, and in 174 B. C. Flaminius, another Roman slave owner, put 74 gladiators to death for the same purpose. He had one of his slaves put to death so that one of his young friends might see a man die; Callio, another big slave owner, had slaves thrown into his fishpond so that his lampreys might feed on human flesh. A slave in a family of 400 killed his cruel master and, under the law of Rome, the whole family, consisting of men, women, and helpless children, were murdered. A brave slave on a chase with his master, was confronted with a huge ferocious wild boar and he seized a lance and slew him. He was executed, not for killing the wild boar, but for using a lance, an implement of war which only a gentleman could use.

During slave uprisings, large number of slaves were placed in large pits, and big fires were kindled around the edge of the pit and the poor, naked victims were tortured and burned to death by degrees. When flesh for wild animals was scarce, Rome fed live slaves with prisoners awaiting trial to her wild beasts for food. They were crucified by the thousands on the cross during slave outbreaks. Rome built a big circus, constructed upon amphitheater style, with a big arena in the center, which she called the Circus Maximus, with a seating capacity of 285,000, and a colosseum of fine marble, with a seating capacity of 87,000. She kept on hand a large number of wild beasts, many of which were captured in the wilds of Africa, for show and for the arena, such as lions, tigers, bears, and poisonous serpents. Here she assembled her idle rich, and for their amusement she forced naked men, women, and children into this ring to fight duels to death, sometimes against each other, and sometimes against these wild beasts and serpents. During the reign of Trajan, a Roman emperor, his majesty gave a great show which lasted 123 days, during which time the 10,000 gladiators fell weltering in their own blood in this arena. About 80 B. C., Tulla, a Roman emperor, had 50,000 cruelly put to death because of a dissension over labor legislation. Tiberius and Caius Gracchus, brothers and officers of Rome, whose duty it was to look after the interest of agriculture, were foully murdered with many of their followers, because they tried to revive the agrarian laws limiting the number of acres which any one man could own to 500; this occurred about the time of the servile wars in Sicily, Spain, and Asia Minor. The slave was tortured in the most inhuman manner, often for trivial causes. Runaways had their ears cut off, thieves had their hands cut off, slander was punished by cutting off the lips in some cases, and in others the tongue was cut out, while in others a red-hot poker was thrust in the mouth. They were all branded in the forehead. Who has committed sin against labor? Listen; it is said that during the servile wars in Rome and her Provinces she murdered more than a million laboring people.

The population of Rome was now large, but it was fluctuating. They were not all Romans, many of them being foreigners who had been swept together by the high tide of warfare which had been raging throughout the world for conquest, and consisted of an aggregation of men of different habits, tastes, and tongues, ranging from the ebony sons of the Lybian Desert to the refined Grecian philosopher from Athens. They were just as anxious for liberty as the people elsewhere, and while the great struggles for liberty had been going on in other parts of the world the labor of Rome was not idle by any means. They had their organizations and had their leaders worked up to a high pitch for reforms, the cowardly murder of Tiberius and Caius Gracchus, inflamed them, and their spirit swelled in their bosoms for revenge; all that was necessary to stir up open rebellion was a bold military genius who could inspire confidence among the masses. The hero was at hand in the person of a slave gladiator, who had been forced to fight many battles in the arena, but who was now full of resentment and ready to sacrifice all for liberty. His name was Spartacus, nothing more, 74 B. C., just the time when the Roman senate was active in trying to suppress organizations.

The twelve tables under Numa Pompilius had given the right to organize. When 15 years old, Spartacus saw his father tied and nailed to the trunk of a tree, held his head in his hands as he expired, and solemnly vowed before his dying father that he would avenge his death. His intellectual bearing and muscular manhood peculiarly fitted him as a leader of the lowly. He was a Greek by birth and had been captured and sold as a slave and trained as a gladiator because of his muscular size and perfect physique. He and 77 other gladiators at Cupua, near Naples, Italy, armed themselves with knives, fought their way through the guards and made their escape to the mountains near Mount Vesuvius. He pitched his tent high up in the mountain at a place which had but one narrow approach. The Roman army was sent to capture him and his band. They camped at the foot of the mountain leading to his heights in order to block his escape. But during the day he and his men wove a ladder of vines sufficiently strong to allow their descent, which they did under cover of darkness, and while the Roman army was asleep he fell upon them, killed many, and routed them without losing a man. The little army of 78 gladiators had now whipped an army of 3,000 well-drilled Roman soldiers. His army soon increased to 10,000, which made him secure. Enraged at this defeat, Rome organized a large force for his destruction, but he was equal to the occasion. His military genius and forethought as a general made him a formidable foe. He bravely met and defeated 11 well-equipped armies of Rome in 11 successive battles. These victories swelled his ranks until his army numbered 300,000 men eager to overthrow the power of their masters. During these battles he had seen the powerful armies of Rome cut to pieces and put to flight; he had captured their princes and made them fight duels in the arena; he had seen the institutions of Rome reel and totter and make ready to fall. All that was needed to capture the mighty capital was military sagacity and patience.

But the restless forces were so eager to make a dash for the final prize that they rebelled against the wisdom of Spartacus, divided his army, and made a dash for the capital. They met the enemy at Croton in the tenth battle and fought one of the bravest and most bloody battles in history. Thirty-five thousand braves fell in that awful contest, and only two were found to have been stabbed in the back. Spartacus arrived in time to save the day. The insubordination in his army finally led to ruin. The Roman army was now recruited to 400,000 men, divided into three divisions under Crassus, Pompey, and Lucullus. They met Spartacus at Silarus, where the final and decisive battle was fought. Spartacus slew his steed with his own hand and then shouted "Onward" to his men, leading the charge, saying, "Victorious I shall find horses in plenty among the enemy; defeated I shall no longer want one." He strove to meet the Roman general, Crassus, in a hand-to-hand contest, but in vain, but he slew two of his centurions. Long after victory was hopeless his course could be traced by the heaps of dead soldiers which he slew by his own powerful hand, but he finally fell, pierced with so many wounds that his dead body could never be found. Thus ended the greatest of the servile wars, followed by the execution of thousands of laboring men. Who has sinned against labor?

LABOR UNIONS.

It will be conceded by all, I have no doubt, that ancient labor was well organized into strong unions, the prime object of which was to relieve itself from beastly servitude and inhuman punishment with a hope finally to gain liberty. When we remember that ancient labor was not permitted to own any property at all in its own right, and when we further consider that it was not allowed to train in the arts of war nor to become skilled in the use of weapons of warfare without subjecting itself to death penalties, we are led to inquire how it was possible for labor to raise large armies of laboring men and conduct successful military operations covering long periods of time against the well-trained armies of the world. It could have been done in no other way than by the most secret and skillful organizations, with secret grips, signs, and passwords, whereby they could understand themselves without danger of communicating their designs to their enemies. This, in my opinion, and this alone is the secret of the mighty movements of labor in ancient times. Again, when we consider that the labor rebellions in different parts of the world followed closely upon the heels of each other, we are forced to conclude that these labor unions were not only local in character, but that they were world-wide and that there was some definite means of communication between them from country to country. The traffic in slaves might have afforded an opportunity to disseminate this information, and probably did, to a large extent.

In most all, if not all, of the ancient governments there were two kinds of slaves—slaves owned by private masters, who were entitled to the entire earnings of his slave, and those owned by the State, used for performing menial services of government, such as forging arms, furnishing munitions of war, metal and image workers for the state, collecting taxes, operating mills for grinding corn, and managing commerce. These laborers were of a higher order than the private slave and were often conceded rights not accorded to them. As far back as the laws of Solon of Athens and the laws of Numa Pompilius of Rome these slaves for the state had a right to organize under the law for the protection of their respective occupations, a right not accorded to the private slave. This right was guaranteed to them by law until the time of Julius Caesar, who was the first ruler of Rome who interferred with them, but he suppressed them. But there must have been strong unions among private slaves.

Information of these ancient unions has been revealed to us in the form of inscriptions on stones and slabs which have been interpreted by scholars to mean unionism of labor. At Athens a slab has been found containing evidence of a washerwoman's union. This information dates back from 400 to 600 years before Christ. It is evident that the great undertakings of the nations have been constructed by unions. The Parthenon of Athens, the Colosseum of Rome, and Solomon's Temple at Jerusalem were constructed by the masonic, carpenters', and sculptors' unions. These are three of the greatest structures of either ancient or modern times. The Temple of Diana was 425 feet long and 220 feet wide, studded with 128 marble columns 60 feet high.

Until the birth of Christ the doctrine of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth was the law of the land and controlled both master and servant in their relations with each other everywhere. It was the law of the survival of the fittest, based on brute force, and necessarily entailed bloodshed. All of the great labor leaders had resorted to force in their struggles for relief. But when the lowly Nazarene stepped upon the stage of time He substituted the law of love for the law of force, proclaimed the Bible doctrine that man was made in the image of God, preached the universal fatherhood of God and the universal brotherhood of man, and prescribed the Golden Rule as the proper guide for the future conduct of men with each other for all time to come: "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." He exposed the sins of the oppressive greedy by telling them that it was easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle than it was for a rich man to enter the Kingdom of Heaven. He inspired the hopes of the lowly by forgiving the sins of the poor who but touched the hem of His garment. He prescribed a balm of Gilead for the aching heart by teaching men to look beyond the wealth of this world for true happiness and exhorting them to lay up their treasures in Heaven. Instead of many pagan gods for the few and none for the many, He offered to the world one God for all, not a cruel, revengeful God, but a loving, forgiving God, everlasting and all powerful, ready at all times to listen to the petition of the bond as well as the free; wanting none punished, but rather that all would turn from their sins and be saved. He organized a union of 12 men from the walks of the lowly, taught them His new creed, and commissioned them to go into the world and preach His gospel.

The danger to all who opposed the will of those in authority or the laws and customs of the times or the pagan religion is most strikingly illustrated in the caution which He gave His disciples just before sending them out on their divine mission, which he likened to the danger of sheep in the midst of wolves. "Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves." He well knew that the wolves were in authority in the administration of the Government, that the wolves were the owners of the wealth of the country, that they were herding the labor of the world upon vast estates, and annually appropriating the fruits thereof to satisfy their own greed; that any effort made to alter or interfere with this order of things would be resented in bitter terms and likely to be punished by death at any time, but the importance of his cause was of such magnitude and the necessity of reforming the world was so great that death was no terror to Him. The only thing that was necessary was time to get before the people the wisdom of His divine teachings; He therefore cautioned them to be "wise as serpents and harmless as doves." When these heartless wolves saw men by multitudes following Him wherever He went and accepting His religion they were alarmed and sought to check the tide by the destruction of the Master of the sheep. So they crucified Him, but His betrayal and trial are hedged about with the foul stench of bribery and perjury.

Mr. Speaker, they not only crucified Jesus, but they hunted down His apostles and burnt some of them at the stake and tried to exterminate His followers by murdering 1,100,000 helpless Jews while attending their religious rites at the Passover A. D. 70. But His teachings were not intended to die. His Sermon on the Mount is the great emancipation proclamation, which lays down the correct principles of life and teaches us our duty to each other and our duty to God. The potent influence of His teachings has revolutionized the world, and in my opinion has had much to do with the liberation of the lowly, for at the time of His advent slavery was at its zenith and the rights of men were settled by the law of force. Rome was mistress of the world, but she was a mighty nation in chains, governed by a few rich and powerful families. Theretofore all the labor wars had been waged by force and all had resulted in defeat of the cause of labor, but now the gospel of the equality of men before the law is substituted for the sword and the war for liberty is to be waged by appealing to the conscience of men in the language of the Golden Rule, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." The mellowing influence of this doctrine softened the hearts of men which, in the course of time, resulted in the manumission of many slaves.

But Rome maintained her cherished institution—slavery—until the last. It was one of the reefs upon which her ship of state was wrecked. Slaves continued to form the greatest per cent of her population, and as they were not permitted to train for war, and as her freemen were reduced in number her strength as a military nation was gradually undermined, and when the hardy Goths and Vandals swept down from the north upon her she reeled upon her own rotten foundation and fell because of a want of liberty to the masses, which is the basis of loyalty to government. After the fall of Rome the center of activity for human rights and human control was transferred to the battle ground of the north, where Teutonic, Celtic, and Anglo-Saxon blood mixed and struggled for supremacy for many centuries; but whatever may have been the fate of kings or countries, there was one thing upon which there was no difference of opinion, and that is, the classes of all nations agreed that the right to rule was divine and belonged to royal blood, and that the many should be held in subjection and compelled to labor for royalty, and stubbornly refused to concede to labor either legal or political rights. But labor, guided by the light which streams from Calvary's cross, wisely husbanded its strength by organizing into unions, where it could discuss social questions and agree upon plans of action. It hoisted above the bloody horizon of time its banner on which were written in living letters the immortal words, "Man was made in the image of God." "He who would be greatest among you, let him be the servant of all."

It often found itself compelled to resort to strikes and rebellions and meet force with force, but it has never faltered in defeat nor grown despondent in chains; ever active, ever hopeful, it has bravely met its fate on fields of carnage, on the scaffold, and in the guillotine. It has waged an unrelenting war against its enemies and has driven back the despoilers of human rights and human happiness step by step, until it has risen from the lowest depths of human slavery, where it toiled on a level with the beasts of burden for more than 5,000 years before any visible progress was attained, through the various degrees of scanty local rights, until it reached the misty plane of serfdom and villenage of the Middle Ages where only the cactus of human rights grew. Encouraged by the victory of this first step, it pressed onward and upward by leaps and bounds in its anxious strides to gain the coveted prize, until it merged into the rosy morning of the common servant of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, where it found itself in the possession of the legal rights of property ownership and property inheritance, with the full right to enjoy the fruits of its own labor. Still not satisfied without a full measure of human rights, it struggled on in tatters through the deserts of low wages and disease, bravely enduring the hardships of bloody wars, waged by ambitious princes, until it reached the plane of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, where it stands to-day in the beautiful sunlight of the intelligent employee, enjoying a full measure of all of the civil and political rights of a free government. What a victory! It is the marvel of the world. Nothing can equal it. But the work is not over. Labor is confronted with well-organized capital as its greatest rival in the division of its earnings, and it must continue its fight henceforth for a division of profits. We are often told that the whole labor problem would be settled if unions and strikes could be broken up, but nothing could be more misleading, for it is through well-organized unions, aided by strikes, that labor has been able to reach its vantage ground of the twentieth century.

STRIKES.

More than 400 years before the birth of Christ a labor union, 20,000 strong, struck against the cruelties of their Athenian masters and went over in a body to aid Sparta in her struggle against Athenian rule. More than 1,400 years before the beginning of the Christian era a labor union of more than 600,000 men, besides women and children, struck against the lash of their cruel Egyptian taskmasters. The cause of the children of Israel is the cause of labor to-day. Pharaoh followed them and tried to bring them back and perpetuate their bondage. The French Revolution was a strike in the cause of labor. The streets of France ran red with the blood of the lowly that France might be free. The labor problem has been at the bottom of nearly all of the great reform movements of the past, and I have no doubt but that it will continue to be one of the most vitalizing problems for all time to come.

It is true that the rights of labor are being cared for by the enactment of wise laws regulating sanitary conditions of labor and limiting the day to short hours, all of which is most commendable, but there is yet much room for future improvements. In the canneries of Maryland and California and in the steel works at Bethlehem, Pa., labor is compelled to work 16 and 17 hours per day for 7 days a week. In these canneries labor often receives less than $5 per week. The recent investigation of the conditions of labor in the woolen mills at Lawrence, Mass., found children taxed for the water that they drank. Long hours of toil and poor pay must be considered by labor in its unions, for it is through this channel that all of the labor reforms have been accomplished. Its potent influence is much more weighty than all the laws which have been enacted.

In 1910 the Commissioner of Labor was empowered by a Senate resolution to make an investigation of the wages and hours of labor in the iron and steel industry in this country. This investigation covered nearly all of the iron and steel plants in the United States. It included 338 blast furnaces, steel works, and rolling mills. It covered the wages and the hours of work for 172,705 employees, which is more than 80 per cent of all the men employed in the plants examined. The investigation was made in May, 1910.

HOURS.

It revealed that 50,000 employees in these works were compelled to work seven days a week and that more than two thirds of these men were compelled to work more than 84 hours per week, meaning a 12-hour working day, or more, for seven days per week. More than 88 per cent of the employees in the blast furnaces worked seven days a week. It was found that the seven-day work was not confined to the blast furnaces alone, but that it extended to the Bessemer converters, the open-hearth furnaces, and blooming, rail, and structural mills. The hardships of the 12-hour 7-day work was found to be augmented at least once a week. When the night shift was changed to the day shift, and vice versa, workmen were required to remain on duty for 18 to 24 consecutive hours without rest or sleep.

This report shows that 72,529 employees out of the whole number, 172,705, being more than 42 per cent of the whole number, worked more than 72 hours per week, making a 12-hour day or more for six days in the week. More than 60 per cent had a working week of 60 hours or more, while a little over 22 per cent had just 60 hours a week, and only a little over 14 per cent had a working week of less than 60 hours.

FOREIGN LABOR.

The report also shows that these industrial plants are employing much unskilled labor, ranging from half to two-thirds of the entire forces; these raw recruits are made up largely of foreigners, who are unable to speak the English language and whose wages are comparatively low.

WAGES.

Out of a total of 172,705 employees, 13,868, or a little more than 8 per cent, received less than 14 cents per hour; 20,527, or nearly 12 per cent, received 14 and less than 16 cents per hour; 51,417, or nearly 30 per cent, received 16 and less than 18 cents per hour. Thus it will be seen that nearly 50 per cent of the entire working forces in these iron and steel works were working for less than 18 cents per hour. This is the unskilled labor. The semiskilled labor received a wage ranging from 18 to 25 cents per hour and represents about 27 per cent of all, leaving only a little over 23 per cent of skilled labor. The wages paid for unskilled labor was found to range as follows in different parts of the United States: New England district, 15 cents; eastern district, 13 and 14 cents; Pittsburgh district, 16 and 17 cents; Great Lakes and Middle West district, 15, 16, and 17 cents; and in the southern district, 10 to 13½ cents per hour.

Mr. Speaker, here is one of the wonders in modern industry. The largest trust in the world controlling a capital of its own plants and the plants of other industries, such as banks, insurance, and other corporations, amounting to more than $33,000,000,0000, forcing laboring men to work not six days in the week at more than 12 hours each, but compelling them to work 12 hours or more on Sunday. It was said that Rome had her thousands of slaves. Here is a modern Rome of the twentieth-century type with its thousands of employees reduced to a drudgery that challenges the boast of our institutions and is cause sufficient to make the goddess of liberty weep. Here is a field of labor for all who are interested in the cause of labor. Here the labor unions have a problem to solve with legislative bodies of the various States in securing the passage of wholesome laws, regulating the hours of labor so that the eight-hour day will be respected by corporations and trusts the same as it is on public works.

During this session of Congress the House has passed 21 measures for the relief of labor in various ways. But there is one question of much importance to labor which has not yet been dealt with by law, and that is a division of profits. It has been variously estimated by students of economics as to what is the average annual profits of the individual laborer over and above the cost of his economic support. But for the present let us admit that the amount of wealth produced by such labor amounts to $1,150 annually and that his support and that of his family amounts to $550. These figures are a little less than what is usually estimated now, but the ratio is about the same as to profits. Here we have a net profit of $600 per annum. How much of this profit does labor get? None. Why? Because capital has learned by careful computation just what the daily laborer must have for bare sustenance, and, finding labor dependent for support and bound to work for its support, takes the advantage of this situation and fixes the amount to be paid for labor at just what is necessary for its meager support and appropriates to itself all of the net profit. If I am correct in this proposition, it will be seen that capital is not willing to make a division of profits at all. Many theories have been advanced as to what is best to be done by labor in order to secure its just share of the profits of its own toil. One of the most favorable theories advanced is that which is advanced by capital itself, and that is there should be no more war between capital and labor; that they can best serve each other by going hand in hand in peace in their march along the highways of industry. Mr. Speaker, this is the same doctrine that was advanced by the lion when he advised that the lamb should lie down with him in peace; it is the doctrine that the strong and designing have always advanced to the complaining weak, and as long as labor will permit capital to appropriate all of the profits there will be no trouble about the question of peace between them; but whenever labor demands a division of the profits it is equal to an open declaration of war, and labor will never receive its adequate share of the wealth which it has created without waging a relentless war, such as it has manfully waged in the past for an equality of legal and political rights.

Just what character of war shall be waged in order that labor may be permitted to enjoy its full share in profits is difficult of solution. It may be that labor will be compelled to enter the commercial field both as the owner and operator of business enterprises, because as matters now stand only owners of capital are permitted to share in profits. This question challenges the wisdom of organized labor for its careful consideration. If labor should be compelled to continue without sharing in profits it can never hope to be other than poor.

Mr. Speaker, it is claimed by some writers that organized labor of America now has to its credit in banks the sum of $16,000,000,000, of which sum the coal miner owns $6,000,000,000. If capital should persistently continue to appropriate all the profits it would be far better, in my opinion, for labor to invest some of its savings in the construction and equipment of modern plants of industry and operate them and divide the profits among the owners thereof. Under the present system of industrial operations capital is compelled to rely upon the skill and wisdom of labor for its success. If labor can thus succeed and be the means whereby capital can continue to swell its bank accounts by leaps and bounds, why should it not be able to do the same thing for itself? I can see no reason why labor should not be able to own and manage business as successfully for itself as it does for capital. Whatever may be the solution of this question the relief must come through the channels of well-organized labor, aided by the passage of wholesome measures at the hands of righteous legislative bodies. In this fight—for a fight it must be—labor has a wonderful advantage in one sense of the word. They are many. They have an equal right with capital at the ballot box and when the vote is cast their choice may be supported by the many while the choice of capital will be supported by the few. Thus labor is all-powerful at elections and can place both in the State and national legislative bodies a vast majority pledged to the cause of labor. In this contest capital is no match for well organized labor.

Mr. Speaker, at the close of each day the mighty mountains are compelled to admit that their tops have been lowered by virtue of the inevitable law of erosion. The skies which their peaks kissed to-day will be far above their heads to-morrow; and in the course of time huge mountains will become hills, and the hills of to-day will meet the valleys of to-morrow in happy embrace on the plains, thereby widening the area of production and opening up a new hope for the future activities of man. Likewise labor unions have revealed to the world a powerful leveling force, whereby the lowly have been elevated and the haughty and oppressive have been lowered until all stand to-day on a common plane of equality before the law. By the potent influence of this same force, may we not hope to see in the near future the sons of toil elevated to a common level with capital in the division of profits? This is my greeting; this is my message to labor.

Mr. Speaker, the next great task for labor is a struggle for an equitable division of profits. While complete relief can not be expected to come all at once and everywhere at the same time, yet it may be attained more readily by the enactment of wise laws directing the course to be pursued by both labor and capital. The world owes a duty to labor which has not been faithfully discharged by legislative bodies in the past. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the time is now ripe for prompt action in this respect, for upon the success of labor depends the success of our institutions of liberty and learning. The mighty Roman Empire crumbled and fell because of her abuse to labor. Her playhouses of crime lie in monumental ruins to remind the world of the magnitude of her sins against labor. Let us take warning from this sad example and in the sweat of our legislative faces accord to labor a just recognition of its rights, so that it may have an equal chance in the race of life for prosperity and happiness. We owe much to labor. It is our staff of life. It is our storehouse of supply. Yea more—it heard the voice of God in judgment against sin and answered the righteous sentence in the sweat of its face for the adequate supply of human wants. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, labor found man in the jungles of barbarism and blood, conducted him safely through the winding, misty valleys of superstition and ignorance, pointed out the fruitful fields of knowledge, led him up the sober heights of judgment and reason, placed a crown upon his head, and transformed him into an intellectual and moral god. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That if any portion of the moneys received by the designated officer of any State for the support and maintenance of agricultural extension departments, as provided in this act, shall by any action or contingency be diminished or lost, or be misapplied, it shall be replaced by said State to which it belongs, and until so replaced no subsequent appropriation shall be apportioned or paid to said State, and no portion of said moneys shall be applied, directly or indirectly, to the purchase, erection, preservation, or repair of any building or buildings, or to the purchase or rental of land, and not more than 5 per cent of each annual appropriation shall be applied to the printing and distribution of publications. It shall be the duty of each of said colleges annually, on or before the 1st day of January, to make to the governor of the State in which it is located a full and detailed report of its operations in the direction of extension work as defined in this act, including a detailed statement of receipts and expenditures from all sources for this purpose, a copy of which report shall be sent to the Secretary of Agriculture and to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, section 7, on page 6, line 1, after the word "land," by inserting the words "or in college-course teaching, lectures in colleges, promoting agricultural trains, or any other purpose not specified in this act."

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to make an argument on this amendment. I have previously spoken at length on this question. The language of the amendment well expresses the purpose of it. If the gentlemen really desire the farmers to get the benefit of this act, now is the time to show it by supporting this amendment. Gentlemen have frequently stated on the floor of the House that this fund is for the purpose of reaching the farmers and not to be used in the colleges. And this provision provides in specific language how the fund must be used. If you adopt my amendment this fund will be devoted to actual farm demonstration and home economics. I contend that previous acts making provision for agricultural education have not been sufficiently specific in directing the administration of the fund. The representations made by gentlemen on the floor of the house as to the purposes of the bill are clear and unmistakable, but, Mr. Speaker, let us make the language of this bill express the purposes of this appropriation. Future generations will be bound by the language in the bill and not by speeches on the House floor.

Mr. LEVER. I have no objections to the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE].

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the Chair was in doubt.

Thereupon the committee divided, and there were—ayes 21, noes 1.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That on or before the 1st day of July in each year after the passage of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall ascertain and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury as to each State whether it is entitled to receive its share of the annual appropriation for agricultural extension departments under this act, and the amount which thereupon each is entitled, respectively, to receive. If the Secretary of Agriculture shall withhold a certificate from any State of its appropriation, the facts and reasons therefor shall be reported to the President, and the amount involved shall be kept separate in the Treasury until the close of the Congress next succeeding a session of the legislature of any State from which a certificate has been withheld, in order that the State may, if it should so desire, appeal to Congress from the determination of the Secretary of Agriculture. If the next Congress shall not direct such sum to be paid, it shall be covered into the Treasury. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby charged with the proper administration of this law.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 6, line 22, strike out the word "next."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 6, line 23, after the word "Congress" insert the following: "Next succeeding a session of the legislature of any State from which a certificate has been withheld."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to insert in place of the word "next," which is stricken out, the words "session of." It seems to me it is ambiguous, to say the least.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 22, after the word "the" where it occurs the third time in the line, insert the words "session of."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desire to be heard?

Mr. MANN. It is almost impossible to carry out the idea of the gentleman. The expiration of Congress on the 4th of March is the expiration of the Congress. This leaves the money. The gentleman will notice on the next page:

If the next Congress shall not direct such sum to be paid, it shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. I am aware of that. I am going to follow that with an amendment.

Mr. MANN. Well, there might be great difficulty in determining what the next session of Congress was.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question first is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my amendment and move in place to strike out the word "close," on line 22, and insert the word "expiration."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 22, strike out the word "close" and insert in lieu thereof the word "expiration," so that the line will read: "Separate in the Treasury until the expiration of the Congress next succeeding," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is an amendment which was offered heretofore that is on the Clerk's desk, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, page 7, after the word "law," insert the following: "And he shall have authority to coordinate all the work contemplated by this act with the work of the United States Department of Agriculture."

Mr WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of this amendment has already been pretty thoroughly discussed during the session of the House to-day. I understand an amendment of similar import has already been accepted by the committee, and I trust therefore that this one will be also. The issue that is made by this amendment is perfectly clear. It is stated in the second section of this bill—

That it shall be the object and duty of said agricultural extension departments to give instruction and practical demonstrations in agriculture and home economics to persons not resident in said colleges in the several communities, as may be provided by the States accepting the provisions of this act, and to convey and impart to such persons information on said subjects through field demonstrations, publications, and otherwise.

In other words, if this bill accomplishes anything, it will be a means of extending, through these agricultural extension departments of the agricultural colleges, the benefits of farm demonstration work. It has been stated a number of times that that is the purpose of the bill. Everybody knows that the work that is now being carried on through the Bureau of Farm Management of the Department of Agriculture is farm demonstration work, exactly the same as is contemplated by this bill. It is perfectly apparent, then, that if this bill shall become a law you will have two different agencies of the Government, each one of them proposing to carry on farm demonstration work.

Now, it is apparent to anyone that unless we can have some system of coordination, such an arrangement as is proposed in the pending amendment, we shall have what you might call two different bureaus of the Government carrying on the same work in the same field. Such a division of authority is bound to lead to friction and largely destroy the beneficent results of the work.

Now, it is proposed in this amendment simply this, that the Secretary of Agriculture, in the language of the amendment, "shall have authority to coordinate all the work contemplated in this act with the work of the United States Department of Agriculture."

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that anyone who opposes this amendment puts himself in the absurd and absolutely indefensible position of saying that it is desirable that two different branches of the Government shall carry on work in the same line, with the same objects in view, in the same field, and yet that these two branches of work should not be coordinated. In other words, those who oppose this amendment put themselves in the position of saying that it is desirable to have such a system here as is bound to lead to opposition and friction such as will eventually very largely destroy the value of the work.

Now, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment ought to be accepted. There is not any purpose in this amendment to break down the objects of this bill. The purpose of this amendment is simply to carry out in good faith the objects of the bill. Everybody knows that the work of the Farm Management Bureau is tremendously valuable, and those who may oppose this amendment put themselves in the position of saying one of two things—either, as I have indicated before, that these two classes of work in the same field, with the same objects, shall not be coordinated, but shall be so carried on as to lead to opposition and discord, or else they must have in mind a sinister purpose to bring about the cessation of one or the other branch of this work. If I thought it to be the purpose of this bill ultimately to cripple or destroy the Bureau of Farm Management, I for one am so much interested in agricultural and vocational education and in the farm-demonstration work carried on by the Department of Agriculture that this bill would not receive my support. I do not believe it would receive the support of the Members of this House. Consequently, it seems to me only fair that we should adopt this amendment, which will guarantee the maintenance and efficiency of both these branches of work.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important amendment, although I shall take very little time in discussing it.

If this amendment is adopted it will turn over to the Agricultural Department practically all of the funds provided for extension work through the colleges carried in this bill.

Under the terms of this bill as found in lines 3, 4, and 5, in the following language—

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby charged with the proper administration of this law—

To my mind the Agricultural Department has all of the authority for the administration of this law that it should have. It has been held by the comptroller, and by the rulings of the department, that under that language, which is copied from the Adams Act, the Secretary of Agriculture has the authority to see to it that the projects and the purposes of the bill, as shown in the bill, shall be carried out by the colleges; and it seems to me that that is as far as we ought to go in permitting the Secretary of Agriculture to have control of the work provided in this bill. I trust therefore that those of us who desire this bill to pass in the shape in which it has been prepared and amended will vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], because it is the one amendment that to my mind is the most dangerous to the intent of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the gentleman say that in his judgment it is desirable that the work of the Farm Management Bureau and the work contemplated under this act shall not be coordinated?

Mr. LEVER. As I understand the meaning of the language of the gentleman's amendment, I take it that if we adopt his amendment we will give the Secretary of Agriculture the complete right to veto absolutely any propositions in the way of work that the colleges may set on foot under the provisions of this bill, and that is the very thing we do not want to have done.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that if both services are carried on, there is no practical difficulty in the Secretary of Agriculture expending the money which is appropriated to be expended for farm-demonstration work under his control in such a manner that it will not conflict with the money which is being spent by the State.

The same question which the gentleman raises was raised in connection with the pure-food law when at one time it was proposed to have the Department of Agriculture coordinate with the officials of the different States in reference to the enforcement of the pure-food law.

It is perfectly apparent to everybody that when it comes to the enforcement of the pure-food law the Federal officials are constantly called upon to rely upon information received from State officials or municipal officials. And yet to state that the work should be coordinated was thought to give to the Secretary of Agriculture an attempted authority over the State officials which it did not seem proper to do; and I fear that if the gentleman's amendment should be agreed to, it would be claimed that the Secretary of Agriculture had the authority to dictate to the State officials in a way which the State officials would not consent to.

There is nothing to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture using ordinary good sense, which up to date I think the Secretaries of Agriculture have always used in expending any money over which they have had control; and to a certain extent the Secretary would have control over the expenditure of money by the colleges or the State officials, but not jurisdiction directly over the State officials themselves. I do not believe that the Secretary of Agriculture ought to have direct jurisdiction over the actions of the State officials.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. It seems to me there is a slight difference between this case and the one the gentleman states, in this: That here we are proposing to appropriate a portion of the funds of the United States; we are proposing to appropriate that entire portion for the farm-management work. Since they are the funds of the United States, it seems to me desirable that some officer should have authority to control it, if there were any conflict in the expenditure of these two different funds.

Mr. MANN. I take it that under this bill the Secretary of Agriculture, who has to make a certificate, in a wide way has control over what theory the State officials shall proceed upon, but can not give directions to the officials actually doing the work. I do not believe it is desirable that the Secretary of Agriculture should directly superintend the work done by the officers of the State in the farm-demonstration work. Of course, I mean if this bill is to pass.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not the gentleman's opinion that if this bill passes, the work proposed to be carried out under the bill will largely supersede the farm-demonstration work now being carried on by the department?

Mr. MANN. The farm-demonstration work now being carried on by the department is very limited in its extent—not a large amount.

Mr. WILLIS. A considerable sum of money is expended.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but nothing like the $3,000,000. Now, I apprehend what will take place will be this: We appropriate now quite a sum for the Federal Government to do this farm-demonstration work. Not a very large sum is appropriated by this bill to begin with—$300,000 a year additional for nine years, until the total amounts to $3,480,000.

As the additional amounts are appropriated it will be up to Congress or the department to determine whether there is any occasion for the General Government to pursue the same line of work. Until a much larger sum is appropriated than there will be for a number of years undoubtedly the agricultural bill will carry the appropriation for farm-demonstration work through the department and the additional sum through the colleges.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will pardon me, is not this what will occur: That the first years after it becomes a law the sums appropriated under this bill will be used by the States in cooperation with the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that will be the case always.

Mr. MONDELL. And, therefore, whatever other appropriations we make in the agricultural appropriation bill will be used in connection with this appropriation?

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly, if any sort of sense is used; and I think we are entitled to presume that good sense will be used.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the gentleman think that under the bill without my amendment the Secretary of Agriculture will have any discretion as to the certification of the right of a State to the Secretary of the Treasury? Does he have to consider anything except whether the legislature has made the appropriation? Has he any power?

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman from Illinois will pardon me, I will answer the gentleman from Ohio by saying that, in view of the department, he has; the Adams Act contains this.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, after the word "Treasury," in line 3, page 7, the balance of the section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Beginning after the word "Treasury," in line 3, strike out the words "and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby charged with the proper administration of this law."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, this particular language that my amendment is to strike out, it seems to me, is entirely unnecessary in the bill, and may result in a great deal of confusion in the administration of the law. The language I am seeking to strike out reads as follows:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby charged with the proper administration of this law.

Now, this law has provisions in it providing duties for the Secretary of Agriculture. It provides certain things shall be done by the Secretary of the Treasury, and other duties that shall be performed by the governors of the States, the legislatures of the States, and in one place in the bill it provides for certain duties that shall be performed by the Postmaster General in making rules and regulations.

It seems to me without this language everybody's duty is clearly defined, including the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture. But with this language the Secretary of Agriculture might assume that he had supervision over the duties that the law provided should be performed by other officials, by the governors of the States, by the Secretary of the Treasury, and by the Postmaster General, in making rules and regulations for carrying out certain provisions of the bill.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman from Nebraska will permit an interruption, I called Dr. Galloway on the telephone on this very proposition, because I had received letters from college presidents to the effect that they were afraid that there was too much authority in this bill. Dr. Galloway writes me this letter:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF CHIEF OF BUREAU OF PLANT INDUSTRY,
Washington, D. C., April 1, 1912.

